When Heir may Attack Sale.

423. If an administrator at his own sale, made under an order of the probate court, buys the land of the estate through another person, the sale is not void, but only voidable at the election of the heirs or other persons interested in the estate, who may have the sale set aside and the administrator declared a trustee.

Boyd v. Blankman, 29 Cal. 19.

424. In such case the deed of the heir conveys the equitable title, and his deed is evidence of his intention to disaffirm the sale. Id.

425. If an administrator becomes a purchaser, through another person, of land of the estate sold by him under an order of the probate court, the heir retains the equitable title, and his deed conveys such equitable title, while the legal title is vested in the administrator who holds it in trust. Id.

426. If, in proceedings set on foot by the administrator in the probate court to sell land to pay debts, the court acquires no jurisdiction of minor heirs, the order of sale is void, and the sale may be attacked collaterally by the heir.

Townsend v. Tallant, 33 Cal. 45.

427. An order of the probate court confirming such sale is void. There was no order of sale for the confirmation to act on. Id.

428. If a person procures himself to be appointed administrator of an estate, and at a sale of the property of the estate purchases the same through a third person, who pays no money, and agrees to hold the title for the administrator, the sale is a fraud on the heirs, and such third person, and all who buy from him with notice, hold the property in trust for the heirs.

Scott v. Umbarger, 41 Cal. 410.

429. If a claim secured by a mortgage made by the decedent during his life, is allowed by his executors, and the mortgaged property is sold by them, and the proceeds are applied on the claim, and the sale is approved by the probate court, the purchaser does not take by relation the title which the mortgagor had at the date of the mortgage, but only such title as the mortgagor had at the time of his death, and such as the estate may have subsequently acquired.

Meyers v. Farquharson, 46 Cal. 191.

430. Where a mortgage creditor of an estate, there being no other debts, purchases the land mortgaged at an administrator's sale, and credits the mortgage debt with the amount of his bid, less ten per cent. which was paid to the administrator, it was held to be full payment in discharge of his purchase.

Estate of Lewis, 39 Cal. 306.

Morrison v. Bowman, 29 Cal. 337.

Vacating Sales.

432. If the probate court makes an order confirming a sale without legal notice having been given, it may set aside the order as having been made without jurisdiction.

Estate of Durham, 49 Cal. 490.

433. The court may vacate a sale made by the executors under a power contained in a will, if a sum exceeding the price obtained by them, by at least ten per cent., exclusive of the expenses of a new sale, is offered, and may direct a resale.

Id.

434. If the probate court finds that the sum for which the property was sold by executors under such power in a will was disproportionate to its value, and that a sum at least ten per cent. greater, exclusive of the expenses of a resale, can be obtained, it may vacate the sale and direct another to be had.

Perkins v. Gridley, 50 Cal. 97.

ACCOUNTS OF EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS AND PAYMENT OF DEBT.

Accounts.

435. Where an administrator makes premature payment of a claim, and takes a bond of indemnity, such a bond would be held legal and binding.

Comstock v. Breed, 12 Cal. 289.

436. If an administrator advance money to pay off a mortgage debt upon land for which the estate is not liable, because the estate has a junior mortgage upon the same land, and in order to relieve the land from the older mortgage, and let in the younger mortgage of the estate, and a loss thereby ensues, the probate court can not allow him in his account for any portion of the loss sustained by the advancement thus made.

Tompkins v. Weeks, 26 Cal. 50.

437. If there is a debt due the estate of a deceased person, secured by a mortgage on land, and another person has a prior mortgage on the same land, and the administrator, in good faith, and under the belief that the land is worth the amount due on both mortgages, forecloses the mortgage owned by the estate, and bids in the land for the amount due on both mortgages, and advances the money to pay the prior mortgage, or uses money of the estate for that purpose, the probate court can not allow him, in his account, a credit for the money lost by the purchase if the land proves to be of less value than the amount paid to discharge the prior mortgage. If the lands thus purchased are regarded as assets of the estate, the loss can not be determined until sold by order of the probate court. If, however, the creditors and heirs repudiate the purchase, and charge the administrator with the entire amount paid, the land will belong to the administrator.

Id.

438. The administrator has no authority, nor has the probate court any power, to authorize him to advance money, or use funds belonging to the estate for the purpose of carrying on business with the surviving partner of the intestate, and if he does so, and loss thereby accrues to the estate, he can not be allowed for the same in his account. The administrator has no authority to intermeddle with partnership affairs, except to call upon the surviving partner to close up the same and account to him.

Id.

439. A proceeding commenced by a creditor of an estate in the probate court to compel an executor to render an account, and to obtain a decree requiring the executor to pay the claim of the creditor, is in the nature of an action for the recovery of the money which the executor has in his hands, and to which the creditor is entitled, and a decree in such proceeding against the executor is a judgment.

Magraw v. McGlynn, 26 Cal. 420.

440. A decree made by the probate court, requiring an executor to pay over to creditors or legatees money in his hands, may compel the payment of the kind of money received by the executor.

Id.

441. The probate court may require an executor, in his account, to state the kind of money received by him from the proceeds of the estate.

Id.

442. Where a bill is filed in chancery against an administrator to compel him to account, by one who has not been an actual party to a proceeding or settlement in the probate court, he may totally disregard such proceeding or settlement.

Clarke v. Perry, 5 Cal. 58.

443. A settlement in the probate court is a final settlement, but a complainant who was no party to it may treat it as a nullity, and proceed to invoke the equitable power.

ers of the district court, and compel the administrators to a full account. Id.

Pond v. Pond, 10 Cal. 495.

445. The probate court has no authority to cite the administrator of an administrator to settle the account of his intestate of which he was the administrator.

Bush v. Lindsey, 44 Cal. 121.

446. When executors or administrators have sold the property of the estate for, and received pay in, legal tender notes, for the payment of creditors, it is error for the probate court to order payment to be made in gold coin.

Estate of Den, 39 Cal. 70.

447. If an administrator occupies and uses the real estate of his intestate, he becomes the tenant of the estate, and must not only account to the estate for the rental value of the land, but must, if he makes a profit, account to the estate for that also. If he sustains a loss, the loss is his; he must at all events pay the rental value of the land. Id.

448. An administrator can not be charged with the rental value of land of the estate, after it has been sold by the sheriff under a foreclosure sale. From that time the purchaser at the sale is entitled to the value of the use and occupation.

Walls v. Walker, 37 Cal. 424.

449. If, in an annual account of an administrator, certain charges are rejected because the necessary vouchers are not produced, the administrator may include them in a subsequent account, and by producing vouchers have them allowed. Id.

450. An account of an administrator is not conclusive, even as against the heirs and creditors, except as to such items as are included in it and actually passed upon by the probate court. Id.

451. Section 237 of the practice act prescribes the effect of a settlement of an administrator's account as against "all persons any way interested in the estate," viz., heirs, legatees and creditors. Id.

452. The presentation of an account of the affairs of a partnership, and of a claim against the estate, by the surviving partner of a deceased person, made to the administrator, and an allowance of the same, and a final settlement of the administrator's account by the probate court, are a bar to an action afterwards brought against the surviving partner to settle the copartnership affairs, under the claim that the account rendered was fraudulent.

Kingsley v. Miller, 45 Cal. 95.

453. Services rendered and money advanced, at the request of an administrator, for the benefit of an estate, are "expenses of administration;" and the probate court has exclusive original jurisdiction to adjust and enforce such demands.

Gurnee v. Maloney, 38 Cal. 85.

454. The employment of an attorney for the mere purpose of procuring letters of administration is a contract made in advance of any authority on the part of the client to deal with the assets of the estate in any wise; and whether the application is successful or not, the estate is not to be charged with the fees of the attorney for the applicant.

Estate of Simmons, 43 Cal. 543.

455. The administrator, after he has become such, has the right, and it is ordinarily his duty, to employ competent counsel to aid him in the management of adversary suits in which the estate may be involved while under his care, and fees for such services may be allowed from the assets of the estate. Id.

456. A ruling of a probate court in fixing the amount of compensation to be allowed an administrator in payment of counsel in the settlement of an estate, will not be disturbed, unless there is a plain abuse of discretion.

Estate of Gasq, 42 Cal. 289.

457. An administrator acting in good faith is entitled to the aid of counsel in all litigation touching the estate, and to be allowed, in his account, the reasonable compensation paid such counsel.

Estate of Minor, 46 Cal. 565.

Settlement of Accounts.

458. If by the terms of a will the executor is directed to keep invested the money belonging to the estate in first-class real estate security, and the executor loans said money upon real estate security which is not good, he can not, in his account, charge the estate with the expenses of litigation, attorney fees, etc.; nor can such items be allowed to the executor in the settlement of his accounts.

Estate of Holbert, 48 Cal. 627.

459. In such case the executor, in the settlement of his accounts, is to be charged with the sum lost by the loan; but if the loan was made in good faith, he must not be charged with the stipulated rate of interest upon the sum lost, nor even with the statutory rate of interest, unless it appears that he could, with ordinary diligence, have loaned the money to others at that rate. Id.

460. In case of such a loan, the advice of his attorney can not shield the executor from responsibility, if the money was loaned on land already incumbered, and no examination was made of the records, and no abstract was furnished to the attorney upon which his opinion could be had. Id.

461. Where the statute requires notice to be served upon the administrator as to the settlement of his accounts, a settlement without such citation and in his absence will not bind him nor his sureties.

Estate of Aveline, 53 Cal. 259.

462. Under our system, the probate court has jurisdiction to settle the accounts of an administrator, and to ascertain and determine his liability to the estate; and the decree of that court, settling the accounts and fixing the amount of liability, is conclusive. Accordingly, where the final account of an administrator, upon his resignation, was settled and approved, and he was discharged; and afterward an action was brought against him by his successor, for neglect in failing to bring suit within the period prescribed by the statute of limitations, for land in the possession of adverse claimants, whereby the land was lost: Held, that if the defendant had incurred any liability, it was full and complete at the time of the settlement of his final account, and might then have been ascertained and determined; and that the order settling his account and discharging him was conclusive against his liability. Reynolds v. Brumagim, 54 Cal. 254.

462a. If an administrator, acting in good faith and for what he believes the best interest of the estate, forecloses a mortgage given to the intestate, he is entitled, in the settlement of his account, to be allowed the costs paid out by him on the foreclosure.

Estate of Minor, 46 Cal. 565.

462b. If an administrator forecloses a mortgage given to his intestate upon land on which there is a prior mortgage, and at the sheriff's sale becomes the purchaser, at a sum too small to satisfy the costs and both mortgages, the court on the settlement of his account should not charge him with the amount of the mortgage debt and stipulated interest, but with the amount of his bid, less the sum paid by him for costs and to satisfy the former mortgage, and with legal interest thereon. Id.

463. Where it appears that by reason of irregularities in the proceedings, parties in interest have not been heard in the settlement of the annual account of an administrator, the cause will be remanded for further proceedings. Estate of Runyon, 53 Cal. 196.

464. If executors exercise their best judgment in employing an agent abroad to receive and forward to them money belonging to the estate, and employ one who is well recommended to them, they are not chargeable in the settlement of their account with money lost by the insolvency of the agent.

Estate of Taylor, 52 Cal. 477.

Contesting Accounts.

465. The right to appear in a probate court and contest the account of an administrator is restricted to persons who are interested in the estate.

Garwood v. Garwood, 29 Cal. 514.

466. However remote or contingent the interest of a person may be, who asks to be allowed to contest an administrator's account, his right to contest should not be denied. Id.

467. A creditor of a deceased person is interested in his estate, and is entitled to appear in the probate court and file objections in writing to the account of an administrator, and to contest the same.

Tompkins v. Weeks, 26 Cal. 50.

468. If there is a reasonable doubt as to whether a person who applies to be allowed to contest the account of an administrator has any interest in the estate, that doubt should be resolved in favor of the applicant.

Garwood v. Garwood, 29 Cal. 514.

469. The probate court is not bound by the statement in the petition of an applicant to contest an administrator's account, that he has an interest in the estate, but may take testimony as to whether he has any interest. Id.

470. Where the contestants to an administrator's account stated in their exceptions that they were creditors of the deceased, and they were allowed to contest by the probate court, and the administrator appealed, but the transcript did not show that any proof was introduced on the subject of their being creditors, the presumption is that the probate court acted correctly.

Tompkins v. Weeks, 26 Cal. 50.

471. If the final account of an executor is attacked for fraud and embezzlement, and he is acquitted of these charges, but a sum is deducted from his account as improperly paid, it is not an error for the probate court to direct the jury fee to be paid out of the funds of the estate.

Estate of Mullins, 47 Cal. 450.

Estate of Halleck, 49 Cal. 111.

Marshaling Assets to Pay Debts.

474. Where the testator dies leaving both personal and real estate, and owing debts secured by mortgage on the realty, and bequeaths all the personal estate and one half of all the realty to one devisee, and the remaining half of the real estate to another devisee, and makes no mention of the debts, the legacies and devises are all general, and the real and the personal estate devised, under sections 180 and 181 of the probate act, must contribute pro rata to the payment of the debts, in proportion to the value or amount of the several devises or legacies.

Estate of Woodworth, 31 Cal. 595.

475. Under the common law, where no different order is prescribed in the will, the assets of the deceased, for the purpose of paying the debts of the estate, will be marshaled, and the debts paid out of them in the following order: First, the personal estate not specifically bequeathed, or expressly or by implication excepted; second, lands expressly devised for the payment of debts; third, lands descended to the heir; fourth, lands devised. Id.

476. Order of marshaling the assets is not to be disturbed by the fact that lands are devised subject to a mortgage thereon. Id.

477. The personal estate is first to be applied and exhausted, even for the payment of debts charged upon the real estate by mortgage, if the debt so charged was the personal debt of the testator. Id.

478. It requires express words in the will, or an intent clearly manifest upon an examination of the entire will, to disturb this order. Id.

479. The making of a specific bequest is regarded as indicating an intention to discharge the particular personal property specifically bequeathed from the debts of the testator. Id.

Payment of Debts.

480. Where the administrator, under order of the probate court, sells land of deceased which is subject to a mortgage, the proceeds of sale, after deducting the necessary expenses thereof, must be applied first to the satisfaction of the mortgage, and the residue, if any, in due course of administration. Estate of Murray, 18 Cal. 686.

481. Neither the administrator nor the probate court have any power to change the order in which the debts of the estate are directed to be paid by the act relating to the estates of deceased persons, and an order to the probate court, made with the consent of the administrator, directing him to pay partnership debts, before the debts of the estate are paid, is void, and if he obey the same he can not be allowed in his account the money used until all the debts of the estate are paid. Id.

Tompkins v. Weeks, 26 Cal. 50.

482. Under our law generally the per- sonal estate which comes into the hands of the executor is first chargeable with the payment of the debts of the deceased.

Estate of Woodworth, 31 Cal. 595.

483. The rents and profits of the real estate accruing subsequent to the death of the testator are not personal property in the hands of the executor to be first applied to the payment of debts in exoneration of the general personality. Id.

484. Under our law, as between the legatee of the personality and the devisee of the realty, the executor is not authorized to appropriate the rents of the real estate which accrued subsequent to the decease of the testator, to the satisfaction of a debt of the deceased secured by a mortgage on the realty, in exoneration of the personality. Id.

485. An executor de son tort at common law, though his acts are for many purposes valid, can not derive from such acts any benefit to himself. He can not retain assets to pay a debt of his own, and if the estate be insolvent, it is no answer to an action to recover the assets, that he has paid debts equal to or exceeding their value.

De la Guerra v. Packard, 17 Cal. 182.

Pierce v. Robinson, 13 Cal. 116.

PARTITION, FINAL SETTLEMENT, AND DISTRIBUTION.

487. Under the two hundred and sixty-fourth section of the act of May 1, 1851, to regulate the settlement of estates, the probate court has jurisdiction to make partition of the real estate of the deceased among the alienees of the "heirs or devisees." The design of the statute is to place the owner of the real estate, whether he be owner by direct purchase from the heir or devisee, or by descent, devise, or judicial sale, in the situation of the heir or devisee for the purpose of partition.

Estate of De Castro v. Barry, 18 Cal. 96.

488. A surviving partner being entitled to the possession and control of the partnership effects, can proceed directly in the district court to obtain the control, and to have a partition of the real estate belonging to the partnership, but standing in the name of his deceased partner.

Gray v. Palmer, 9 Cal. 616.

489. It was necessary to file this bill, and make the administrator, the widow, and the infant, parties, to rebut the presumption of ownership on the part of the estate, arising from the fact that the real estate stood upon the record in the name of the deceased, and the administrator had possession of the personal property. These objects could only be accomplished by proceedings in the district court, as the probate court did not possess the judicial means of giving relief. Id.

490. The proceedings for the settlement of an estate, and matters connected therewith, are not civil actions within the meaning of sections 18 to 21 of the practice act.

Estate of Scott, 15 Cal. 220.

491. An order of a probate court distributing an estate is void, unless the order to show cause why a decree of distribution should not be made is published at least four successive weeks, or personally served on all persons interested in the estate, or all persons so interested shall signify, in writing, their assent to the distribution.

Pearson v. Pearson, 46 Cal. 610.

492. Where, in the proceedings for the distribution of an estate, jurisdiction of the person is acquired by publication of notice, and the order for publication is made May 8, and it directs persons interested to appear June 4 and show cause, and the facts appear on the face of the decree, the decree is void as to the persons interested in the estate who do not appear, and may be attacked in a collateral action. Id.

493. A final decree of the probate court making distribution of an entire estate is, until reversed or modified on appeal, an investiture of the absolute right and title to the same in the distributees; and a further order of the court making a different disposition of a portion of the estate, made pending an appeal which was perfected from said final decree, is void. Estate of Garraud, 36 Cal. 277.

494. After the decree of distribution, money in the hands of the administrator, distributed to an heir or devisee, may be garnished by a creditor of the distributee, or may be reached by proceedings supplemental to execution.

Estate of Nerac, 35 Cal. 392.

Grady v. Porter, 53 Cal. 680.

496. When a decree of distribution has been made the probate court has no longer jurisdiction of the property distributed (unless to compel delivery), and the distributee thenceforth has an action to recover his estate, or, in proper cases, its value.

Wheeler v. Bolton, 54 Cal. 302.

Estate of Pritchett, 52 Cal. 94.

498. The heir or devisee is entitled to have the estate distributed when the final account of the administrator has been settled, although a year has not elapsed since the will was probated, and there are persons living who are interested in the estate and may yet contest the validity of the will.

Id., 51 Cal. 568.

DISCHARGE OF EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

499. When an administrator has presented his final account and been discharged, he is no longer the representative of the estate, and has no authority to appear for or bind it in any manner.

Willis v. Farley, 24 Cal. 490.

500. The allowance of the final account of an executor does not discharge him from his trust, nor is it a decree of distribution or the equivalent of such a decree. Until the entry of a decree discharging an executor from liability he is not discharged from his trust.

McCrea v. Haraszthy, 51 Cal. 146.

APPEALS.

501. On an appeal from a decree of a probate court made upon a final accounting and settlement of an administrator's accounts, the petition and account filed with the view to a final settlement, are a part of the record to be used on appeal, without being made so by a bill of exceptions or statement.

Estate of Isaacs, 30 Cal. 105.

502. Section 338 of the practice act, prescribing what statements on appeal shall contain, applies to statements made on appeal from the probate courts.

Estate of Boyd, 25 Cal. 511.

503. If a statement on appeal from the probate court does not state specifically the particular errors or grounds upon which the appellant intends to rely, and the appeal rests on the statement alone, the appeal will be dismissed on motion of the respondent. Id.

504. The evidence taken in a proceeding in the probate court will not be reviewed by the supreme court on appeal, unless embodied in a statement. Estate of Arnaz, 45 Cal. 259.

505. The heirs and devisees or legatees of an estate are made parties to the proceedings for a distribution, and any one of them feeling aggrieved may appeal from the final order. Bates v. Ryberg, 40 Cal. 463.

506. The executor of an estate can not maintain an appeal from a final order of distribution, upon the grounds that the property was improperly divided among the legatees. Id.

507. If the probate court refuses to admit a will to probate, and this court, on appeal, directs the will to be so admitted, it will not direct the probate court to issue letters of administration with the will annexed to the petitioner, unless the probate court has found, as a fact, that the petitioner is a proper person to receive letters. Estate of Wood, 36 Cal. 75.

508. The judgment of the supreme court, settling the right of two persons to be appointed executors of an estate, should be carried into effect by the probate court, notwithstanding the death of one the persons before the probate court acts on the matter. Estate of Pacheco, 29 Cal. 224.

509. An order of the probate court setting aside a judgment of that court refusing to admit a will to probate, is not an appealable order, because not within the statute. Peralta v. Castro, 15 Cal. 511.

510. An executor, as such, has no interest in the question, as to how the estate in his hands is distributed, and can not maintain an appeal from an order of distribution made by the probate court, on the ground that the order distributes to one party too large a portion. Estate of Wright, 49 Cal. 550.

511. An appeal from any order, decree, or judgment of a probate court, or from some specific part thereof, may be taken and perfected by filing with the clerk of said court a notice stating such appeal, and by executing an undertaking, or giving surety on such appeal in the manner and to the extent as upon an appeal to the supreme court from a district court. The notice need not be served. Will of Bowen, 34 Cal. 682.

513. A notice appealing from all orders made by a probate court in the case on a certain day is sufficient to cover any appealable order made on that day. Estate of Pacheco, 29 Cal. 224.

514. An appeal does not lie from an order of the probate court setting aside its own proceedings had before a final order, upon application of the surviving wife to have the homestead set aside to her. Estate of Johnson v. Tyson, 45 Cal. 257.

515. From an order of a probate court setting aside a judgment of that court refusing to admit a will to probate, because not within section 297 of the act to regulate the settlement of the estate of deceased persons. Peralta v. Castro, 15 Cal. 511.

516. Where a party is dissatisfied, he can only have a review of the evidence, to test its sufficiency to support such findings, by moving for a new trial. Rice v. Innskeep, 34 Cal. 224.

517. When the probate court has fixed the basis upon which an administrator's account is to be settled, an error in directing the creditors of the estate to restate it, if the administrator does not restate it himself, will not justify a reversal of the judgment, as the administrator sustains no injury by it. Estate of Miner, 46 Cal. 565.

518. Upon an appeal from an order directing a resale of real property, which had been previously sold by the administratrix, and confirmed to the appellant as purchaser: Held, that the appellant, though not an actual party to the proceedings in the court below, was a party aggrieved, and entitled to appeal under sections 963, 938, code of civil procedure. Estate of Boland, 55 Cal. 310.

519. An appeal does not lie from an order denying a petition for the revocation of letters. Estate of Montgomery, 55 Cal. 210.

520. If the instructions of the court to the jury are contradictory so as to confuse them in their deliberations, the verdict can not be allowed to stand. Estate of Cunningham, 52 Cal. 465.

PUBLIC ADMINISTRATORS.

521. Under the fourteenth chapter of the act concerning the estates of deceased persons, the public administrator has a right, and should at once take possession of the estate of all persons dying without known heirs. This is sustained by the eighty-eighth section of the act. Beckett v. Selover, 7 Cal. 215.

522. As to the right of the public administrator to take possession of any particular estate under the three hundred and fourth and three hundred and fifth sections, it would seem to be in the virtue of his office, and he must deliver it up to the person showing himself entitled thereto. Id.

523. The public administrator is an officer of the law. He is entitled to the administration of all estates not otherwise administered, and he has only such powers as are given him by law. Id.

524. In both cases he holds as special administrator, and subject to the direction of the court. Id.

525. It seems that all the provisions of the law relating to the powers and duties of the public administrator, and inconsistent with the general probate law, are special provisions, which must be given their full force. Id.

526. By the eighty-eighth section, which has reference to special administration, the court is authorized to "direct the public administrator to take charge of the estate." The phrase, "take charge of the estate," is qualified by the scope of the section, and only means to give the public administrator the same powers over the particular estate as he would have over the class of estates referred to in the fourteenth chapter. Id.

527. The public administrator of the city and county of San Francisco can take upon himself the duties of an administrator of a given estate only by virtue of a special grant from the probate court, made upon a petition therefor, filed in the matter of such estate. He does not, by virtue of his office, acquire the right to administer upon any particular estate.

Estate of Hamilton, 34 Cal. 464.

528. As the public administrator is required to give bond, and take the official oath, it seems to have been the intention of the statute to dispense with the bond and oath required of other administrators in each particular case.

Beckett v. Selover, 7 Cal. 215.

529. There must be a judicial grant of administration to the public administrator in each particular case. His commission, therefore, can not prove that he is the regular administrator upon the particular estate; he must show a grant of administration, like any other administrator. Id.

530. But where the court made a regular order that letters should issue to the public administrator, as no bond or oath was required as a condition precedent, the omission to issue the letters is not fatal. Id.

531. The public administrator is personally liable upon a contract made in relation to estates upon which he administers, unless the idea of such personal liability be excluded by the contract.

Dwinelle v. Henriquez, 1 Cal. 387.

532. While one administrator of an estate is in office, there is no power in the probate judge or court to appoint a new one. Id.

533. A public administrator, having administration of an estate, continues such administration after the expiration of his term of office, and until his authority is directly set aside or indirectly revoked by another appointment.

Rogers v. Hoberlin, 11 Cal. 120.

534. Rogers v. Hoberlin, 11 Cal. 120, was not designed to decide more than that the public administrator must show a grant of administration upon the particular estate.

Abel v. Love, 17 Cal. 233.

535. If there is a contest in the probate court between the public administrator and a creditor of an estate as to which shall administer, and other creditors request the court to appoint the public administrator, it is within the discretionary power of the court to appoint the public administrator.

Estate of Doak, 46 Cal. 573.

536. Is a person who purchases a claim against an estate after the death of the decedent a creditor who is entitled to be preferred to the public administrator as administrator of the estate? Quære? Id.

537. It is competent for the public administrator to petition for, and by order of the probate court to receive, letters of administration upon the estate of an intestate, notwithstanding the deceased may have expressed a wish to have another person settle the estate.

Estate of Morgan, 53 Cal. 243.

1. The writ of prohibition ought not to issue to arrest the progress of any legislation pending in a board authorized by the laws to legislate with respect to matters of public interest.

S. V. W. v. S. F., 52 Cal. 111.

2. The writ of prohibition mentioned in the constitution is the writ of prohibition as known to the common law, and its office is to restrain subordinate courts and inferior judicial tribunals from exceeding their jurisdiction. Maurer v. Mitchell, 53 Cal. 289.

3. The word "counterpart," as employed in section 1102 of the code of civil procedure, is designed to illustrate the operation of the writ of prohibition when issued in a proper case, but it is not intended to enlarge or add to the class of cases in which it may be resorted to. Id.

4. In an action by citizens of the state, against a citizen and an alien, upon a joint and several obligation (the amount in controversy being over five hundred dollars), the alien defendant applied to the court in due form and time, for a removal of the cause to the United States circuit court; and, his motion being refused, applied to this court for a writ of prohibition: Held, that he was entitled to the writ.

Sheehy v. Holmes, 55 Cal. 485.

5. The trial of a case after the taking of an appeal from an order denying a motion for a change of venue is not a proceeding without or in excess of the jurisdiction of the court, within the meaning of section 1102, code of civil procedure, so as to authorize the issuing of a writ of prohibition.

People v. Whitney, 47 Cal. 584.

6. A writ of prohibition will not issue to arrest the proceedings of a board of supervisors, unless the proceedings themselves are absolutely without or in excess of the jurisdiction of the board.

Brundage v. Kern Co., 47 Cal. 81.

7. A writ of prohibition will not lie to restrain a superior court from passing upon a motion to dismiss an information.

Wreden v. Sup. Ct. Stanislaus, 55 Cal. 504.

8. Upon an application for a writ of prohibition to the board of election commissioners of San Francisco, to arrest their proceedings in ordering an election for fifteen freeholders, to prepare and propose a charter to be submitted to the voters of the city and county, as provided in section 18 of article XI of the constitution: Held, that their action was not judicial, and therefore the writ would not lie.

People v. Election Com'rs, 54 Cal. 404.

9. If the question of the jurisdiction of an inferior court in a case before it has been submitted to that court by an appropriate pleading or objection, a writ of prohibition will not issue to restrain such court from proceeding in the case while the question of its jurisdiction remains undetermined by such court.

Chester v. Colby, 52 Cal. 516.

10. Under the constitution, as amended, the supreme court has original jurisdiction to issue writs of prohibition.

Tyler v. Houghton, 25 Cal. 26.

11. The supreme court may exercise its appellate jurisdiction by means of the writ of prohibition. People v. Turner, 1 Cal. 143.

12. The affidavit to a petition for a writ of prohibition should state that the affiant has either knowledge or information concerning the matters stated in the petition.

Cariaga v. Dryden, 30 Cal. 244.

13. If the application for a writ of prohibition is submitted on the petition and answer, and the answer denies the material allegations of the petition, the petition will be dismissed. Id.

CLOUD ON TITLE, WHAT CONSTITUTES.

1. The true test by which the question, whether a deed would cast a cloud upon the title of the plaintiff may be determined, is this: Would the owner of the property in an action of ejectment brought by the adverse party, founded upon the deed, be required to offer evidence to defeat a recovery? If such proof would be necessary the cloud would exist; otherwise not.

Pixley v. Huggins, 15 Cal. 127.

2. Every deed from the same source through which plaintiff derives his real property must, if valid on its face, necessarily cast a cloud upon the title. Id.

3. And a deed from a sheriff upon an execution sale against the vendor of plaintiff would have the same effect in casting a cloud upon the title, as if the deed were made directly by such vendor. Such a deed from the sheriff, put on record, would create doubts as to the validity, as against the judgment creditor, of the previous transfer to plaintiff. Id.

4. Where a homestead is sold by the sheriff on an execution against the husband, or husband and wife, and a deed given to the purchaser therefor, it is a cloud upon the title, and a court of equity will remove it.

Riley v. Pehl, 23 Cal. 70.

5. The right of homestead having once attached, and not having been alienated, a deed from the sheriff, under an execution against the husband, would be a cloud upon the title, and prevent the free alienation of the property by the husband and wife.

Dunn v. Tozer, 10 Cal. 167.

6. A sale by a sheriff of real estate upon an execution against the grantor will, even if not effectual to pass the title to the purchaser, create a doubt as to the validity of the grantee's title, and cast a cloud upon it, and the grantee can maintain an action to enjoin the sale.

Englund v. Lewis, 25 Cal. 337.

7. The plaintiff claims no title to the soil, but only to the franchise; therefore, the sale of the wharf can work no irreparable damage, or throw a cloud on his title.

De Witt v. Hays, 2 Cal. 463.

8. Where Lick held a sheriff's deed to certain property under a judgment and execution, in an attachment suit against James H. Ray, and James Ray held another sheriff's deed to the same property, under another judgment and execution, against James H. Ray, the latter judgment and deed being earlier in date than the former, but not so early as the attachment lien in the former suit, and it appeared by averment that James Ray held his deed in trust for his father, James H. Ray, and it was conceded that Lick's was the superior title, but Ray claimed that his deed did not amount to a cloud: Held, that the apparent title held by Ray under his deed was a cloud, and that Lick was entitled to relief in equity to remove it.

Lick v. Ray, 43 Cal. 83.

9. If a title against which relief is prayed as a cloud be of such a character that, if asserted by action and put in evidence, it would drive the other party to the production of his own title in order to establish a defense, it constitutes a cloud, which the latter has a right to call upon equity to remove. Id.

10. If a title be void on its face, if it be a nullity, a mere felo de se when produced, so that an action based upon it would "fall of its own weight," it does not constitute a cloud; and an action can not be maintained to remove it as such, except upon a showing of special circumstances entitling the party to relief. Id.

11. A tax deed, based upon an assessment made under an unconstitutional act of the legislature, will not constitute a cloud on the title. Williams v. Corcoran, 46 Cal. 553.

12. The plaintiff, in an action to enjoin the collection of an unconstitutional tax, is presumed to know the law, and to know that a deed given at such a tax sale would be void.

Id.

13. A tax is not a cloud upon a title to real estate; and its unlawful collection, by distress or seizure of chattels, is no more than an ordinary trespass.

Ritter v. Patch, 12 Cal. 298.

14. A threat by the collector to sell lands for taxes, made before the taxes become delinquent, does not amount to coercion.

Williams v. Corcoran, 46 Cal. 553.

15. A mortgage executed by the grantee of the husband upon property purchased with funds belonging to the separate estate of the wife, and deeded to the wife during coverture, is a cloud upon the wife's title which a court of equity will remove.

Ramsdell v. Fuller, 28 Cal. 37.

16. F., defendant, began suit against the Volcano water and mining company to subject to sale the ditch of that name, including aqueducts, flumes, culverts, dams, cabins, etc., in enforcement of a mechanic's lien. Subsequently, the ditch, etc., was sold on a judgment in favor of one Harris, and purchased by S., from whom plaintiff, as judgment creditor of the company, redeemed and in due time received the sheriff's deed. Afterwards, F. had a decree directing a sale of the ditch, etc., to satisfy his lien. Plaintiff sues to quiet title; alleging that F.'s decree is fraudulent; that he had no lien; and that he is about enforcing the decree, which is a cloud on plaintiff's title: Held, that, aside from any question of fraud, the action lies; that the existence of a decree, founded upon proceedings taken prior to plaintiff's title, and seeking to condemn the property by virtue of an asserted lien older than such title, would be a cloud upon that title.

See secs. 62, 68, 69.

WHO MAY BRING ACTION TO QUIET TITLE.

17. The act of March, 1856, "for the protection of actual settlers, and to quiet land titles in this state," was passed for the benefit of those who are desirous of building up homes in the country, and for that purpose are seeking, in good faith, lands for settlement and occupation; and hence, the eleventh section of the act does not apply to miners engaged simply in extracting gold from a quartz vein. They are not "settled upon" their vein in the sense of the statute, and the two years' limitation of that section can not avail them. Fremont v. Seals, 18 Cal. 433.

18. The statute, giving a right of action to a party in possession of real estate to determine adverse claims, does not confine the remedy to the case of an adverse claimant setting up a legal title, or even an equitable title; but the statute embraces every description of claim whereby the plaintiff might be deprived of the property, or its title be clouded, or its value be depreciated, or whereby the plaintiff might be incommoded or damaged by the assertion of an outstanding title already held or to grow out of the adverse pretension. Head v. Fordyce, 17 Cal. 149.

19. Plaintiff has a right to be quieted in his title whenever any claim is made to real estate of which he is in possession, the effect of which claim might be litigation, or a loss to him of the property. Id.

20. The right of a party to have his title to land protected from a sale which may create a cloud upon it, upheld.

Guy v. Hermance, 5 Cal. 73.

21. Under this section, a party in possession of real property may bring a bill in equity to quiet title against a party out of possession, who claims an estate or interest adverse to him, without waiting until he has been disturbed in his possession by legal proceedings against him, in which his title has been successfully maintained.

Curtis v. Sutter, 15 Cal. 259.

22. A person in the possession of property is in a position to bring an action, under the two hundred and fifty-fourth section of the practice act, to quiet his title thereto, and on the trial no other evidence on his part than proof of possession is necessary in the first instance. Horn v. Jones, 28 Cal. 194.

23. A judgment creditor need not be in possession of land to enable him to maintain a suit in equity, after he has a sheriff's deed, to cancel a deed of the same given by the debtor to defraud him before he recovered judgment. Hager v. Shindler, 29 Cal. 47.

24. A sale by an administrator of land once the property of the intestate, but which he is alleged to have sold during his life-time, will cast such a cloud on the title of the intestate's prior grantee as will enable him to maintain an action to restrain the sale.

Thompson v. Lynch, 29 Cal. 189.

25. Under the code of civil procedure, section 738, the owner of an estate or interest in land less than an estate in fee can maintain an action to determine an adverse claim made by another person.

Pierce v. Felter, 53 Cal. 18.

Coleman v. S. R. T. R. Co., 49 Cal. 517.

27. One who is in actual possession of a small piece of dry land in a tract of salt-marsh tide land, which is not susceptible of actual occupation, except for grazing during two or three months of the year, and who uses and controls the marsh land by himself and tenants, so far as the same is capable of use and control, may sue to quiet the title to the same, if there is no adverse possession, or his tenant may sue when the premises are thus held by him. Id.

ACTIONS, WHEN CAN BE MAINTAINED, AND PROCEED-INGS THEREIN.

28. Section 254 of the practice act enlarges the class of cases in which equitable relief could formerly be sought in quieting title. It authorizes the interposition of equity in cases where previous bills of peace would not lie. Curtis v. Sutter, 15 Cal. 259.

29. The eleventh section of the act of 1856, for the protection of actual settlers and to quiet land titles, only applies to actions brought to recover the possession of lands after the issuance of a patent. Martin v. Folger, 15 Cal. 275.

30. Suit under section 254 of the practice act only lies with reference to property of which the plaintiff is in possession; and where suit is brought, under that section, to quiet title to a ranch, and plaintiff is in possession of a portion only, the suit must be brought to determine the title to that portion, and no injunction lies to restrain parties who are entire strangers to the title from selling that portion, as their conveyances would not cloud plaintiff's title. And if the grantees under such conveyances should invade the possession of plaintiff, or unlawfully detain the same, the remedy at law is ample. Curtis v. Sutter, 15 Cal. 259.

31. In such suit the court sitting in equity may direct, when proper, an issue to be framed upon the pleadings and submitted to a jury, if questions of a purely legal character in relation to the title arise. Id.

32. To maintain an action to quiet title, under the two hundred and fifty-fourth section of the civil practice act, it is essential that the plaintiff have possession of the premises when the action is commenced. Rico v. Spence, 21 Cal. 504.

33. An action can not be maintained for the purpose of determining an adverse claim to, or estate or interest in real property, under section 254 of the practice act, unless the plaintiff, at the time of the commencement of the action, is in the actual possession of the property himself, or in possession by his tenant. Lyle v. Rollins, 25 Cal. 437.

34. One in possession of property, claiming title under a sheriff's deed executed on a mortgage foreclosure, may maintain an action to quiet his title against another who claims a title against him which would be good against the mortgagor, although void as against the plaintiff.

Horn v. Jones, 28 Cal. 194.

35. An action can not be maintained to quiet a legal title to land vested in the plaintiff, unless the plaintiff is in possession of the property in dispute at the commencement of the action. Ferris v. Irving, 28 Cal. 645.

36. Possession in plaintiff is necessary in an action to quiet title; but if the possession exist it matters not how it was acquired. Reed v. Calderwood, 32 Cal. 109.

37. In an action brought under the two hundred and fifty-fourth section of the practice act, to quiet title to a quartz mining claim, located on the public lands of the United States, a possessory title thereto is sufficient to maintain the action by a party in possession as against one out of possession. Pralus v. Pacific M. Co., 35 Cal. 30.

38. In an action to determine an adverse claim to land, under section 254 of the practice act, the plaintiff can not prevail without proof of possession at the time of commencing the action, if the allegation of possession is denied by the answer. Brooks v. Calderwood, 34 Cal. 563.

39. The possession necessary to maintain an action, under section 254 of the practice act, must be such as would enable the plaintiff, without the aid of any other title, to maintain an action to eject a mere intruder therefrom. Sepulveda v. Sepulveda, 39 Cal. 13.

40. If adverse possession to a part of the land should be shown in a third person, the suit would be considered as brought to determine the adverse claim of the defendant only, to the land remaining in the possession of the plaintiff. Id.

41. In an action by the plaintiff to quiet title to a portion of the said land, against one claiming under a deed, subsequent to the act, from the board of tide land commissioners, the complaint alleging that the plaintiff was seised of the land: Hehl, that the action could not be maintained, for want of title in the plaintiff, and that it was, therefore, unnecessary to examine the title of defendant. San Francisco v. Ellis, 54 Cal. 72.

42. If the owner has full dominion and control of his property (which he has if not held adversely), he may well be said to be in possession, in every sense of the word. Sepulveda v. Sepulveda, 39 Cal. 13.

43. I think the true rule under the statute is that whenever the owner has a possession, whether actual or constructive, which may be intruded upon, he may bring suit to determine an adverse claim, and thus prevent an intrusion under claim of title. Id.

44. To maintain an action to quiet title to mining claims on the public domain, under section 254 of the practice act, the plaintiff must establish an actual or constructive possession in him at the time of commencing the action. Pralus v. Jefferson M. Co., 34 Cal. 558.

45. A possessory title thereto is sufficient to maintain the action by a party in possession, as against one out of possession.

Pralus v. Pacific M. Co., 35 Cal. 30.

46. The purchaser of an outstanding adverse claim to land by one in possession claiming adversely to all others, for the purpose of quieting his title, does not estop him from setting up the statute of limitations against a third party also claiming under an adverse title.

Cannon v. Stockmon, 36 Cal. 535.

47. One who, by collusion with a tenant, acquires possession of the leased premises, has such a possession as enables him to maintain an action under the two hundred and fifty-fourth section of the practice act, to quiet title to the same.

Calderwood v. Brooks, 45 Cal. 519.

48. To support a decree quieting title based on actual possession of mining ground, the findings must show that the party has had possession of a definite part of the ground. Gelich v. Moriarty, 53 Cal. 217.

Pralus v. Jefferson M. Co., 34 Cal. 558.

50. An apparently good record title to land constitutes a cloud upon a title thereto which has been subsequently acquired by adverse possession under the statute of limitations, which the holder by adverse possession is entitled to have removed. This statute would have performed but half its mission as a statute of repose, if the party relying upon it, as to a party claiming under a written title, must wait till he is attacked before he can reduce the evidence of his title, which otherwise rests only in parol, to the form of a permanent record.

Arrington v. Liscom, 34 Cal. 365.

51. A court of equity has jurisdiction at the suit of the judgment creditor who has purchased land at sheriff's sale, and received a sheriff's deed therefor, to annul and set aside, as a cloud upon title, a deed of the land given before the recovery of judgment by the judgment debtor, without consideration, and to defraud the creditor.

Hager v. Shindler, 29 Cal. 47.

52. The circumstances that the plaintiff is an infant in present need of money, and that the lot is covered with water and not now productive, do not aid in giving a court of equity jurisdiction to remove a cloud on title.

Cohen v. Sharp, 44 Cal. 29.

53. If, in an action to remove a cloud from the title to land, the court finds that neither party has title to the premises in controversy, neither is entitled to a judgment as against the other; but the action should be dismissed. The fact that the plaintiff is in possession does not entitle him to judgment, for possession is not title, but only evidence from which title may be presumed. San Diego v. Allison, 46 Cal. 162.

54. If the plaintiff in an action to remove a cloud from the title to land has no title, an abortive attempt by the defendant to purchase the land from another, not authorized to sell it, can not constitute a cloud on the plaintiff's title, nor depreciate the value thereof.

Id.

55. To maintain a suit to quiet title by a party in possession, it is enough that he claims under a deed which creates an equitable estate, or even a right of possession. Smith v. Brannan, 13 Cal. 107.

56. A jury being waived, it is immaterial whether an action under section 254 of the practice act is an equitable or a legal proceeding.

Id.

Boggs v. Merced M. Co., 14 Cal. 279.

58. Where an action has been commenced to quiet title to a tract of land and to remove a cloud therefrom caused by certain deeds on record, and a lis pendens has been filed, one who purchases from defendant during the pendency of the action, and after the lis pendens is filed, is bound by the judgment rendered therein.

Haynes v. Calderwood, 23 Cal. 409.

EVIDENCE IN.

59. One claiming title to property under a sheriff's deed, executed on the foreclosure of a mortgage, may, in an action brought by him to quiet his title against one who claims under a sheriff's deed executed on the foreclosure of a mechanic's lien, in which foreclosure he was not a party, go behind the decree foreclosing the mechanic's lien, and show that no lien in fact existed.

Horn v. Jones, 28 Cal. 194.

60. In an action brought by one in possession of land to try and determine an adverse claim set up by one out of possession, when the complaint avers that the defendant sets up an adverse claim without stating what it is, and the answer admits plaintiff's possession, and sets up the particulars of the defendant's alleged title, the burden of proof is cast upon the defendant.

Crook v. Forsyth, 30 Cal. 662.

61. Action to determine an adverse claim to land, the complaint averring that plaintiff, who was in possession, derived title through a deed from G. Answer that previous to the execution of G.'s deed the land was attached at suit of a creditor of his, and was subsequently in due course sold by the sheriff, at which sale defendant became the purchaser. Replication that a portion of the debt on which the attachment issued was secured by a collateral note, and that the attachment was therefore void: Hehl, that on these pleadings, in the absence of proof, judgment was properly entered for defendant; that if plaintiff had the right to attack the attachment in this form (a point not decided) the burden of the proof was on him to show that the attachment debt was collaterally secured.

Bostwick v. McCorkle, 22 Cal. 669.

62. Where, in such action, plaintiffs alleged that by reason of defendant's adverse claim, "they were greatly embarrassed in the use and disposition of their mining claims," and "that thereby their value was greatly depreciated," Hehl, that this was a sufficient averment of injury to sustain the action.

Pralus v. Pacific M. Co., 35 Cal. 30.

63. In such action the defendant will not be exonerated from payment of costs, under section 253, by disclaiming any title or interest in himself, if he answers denying the allegation of possession contained in the complaint, thereby compelling the plaintiff to prove that issue, and the plaintiff finally succeeds on the issue.

Brooks v. Calderwood, 34 Cal. 563.

64. When, in such action, the plaintiff succeeds in part and fails in part as to some of the defendants, the judgment will not be reversed because the district court awards costs against such defendants. Id.

65. In such action, if the court finds and adjudges that a defendant has no just claim or title, legal or equitable, the judgment will not be reversed because it also contains a clause perpetually restraining the defendant from further setting up the claim so adjudged to be invalid. Id.

66. In this case plaintiff can not set aside the decree of F. as a cloud upon his title without showing affirmatively that F. had no claim on the property, or any right to subject it, or any part of it; and as the findings do not show any particular description of the aqueducts, flumes, cabins, etc., their value, nor the value of the materials furnished, nor that F.'s claim was solely for furnishing materials for building the cabins, flumes, etc., the court can not pass on the question of F.'s lien.

Head v. Fordyce, 17 Cal. 149.

67. In this case it was not necessary that the bill should aver that plaintiff had no notice, at the time of his purchase under the Harris sale, of F.'s proceedings to enforce his lien. Such notice is not presumed. Id.

Maina v. Elliott, 51 Cal. 8.

69. If one who holds the legal title, subject to an equity in the hands of another, conveys such legal title to an innocent purchaser without notice, the purchaser will hold the legal title discharged of the equity. Id.

RELIEF.

70. Where one has an outstanding deed, which improperly clouds the title of the true owner, on the application of the latter, chancery will order such deed to be canceled and annulled. Shattuck v. Carson, 2 Cal. 588.

71. On such application, chancery will prevent a sale, and the consequent execution of an improper deed. Id.

72. A decree pronouncing that a conveyance is fraudulent and void, has the effect to remove any cloud resulting from its execution without an express direction that it be set aside. Gibbons v. Peralta, 21 Cal. 629.

73. Some two hundred persons, of whom plaintiff was one, claimed each separate parts of a tract of land called the "Encinal," deriving their several titles from a common source, and all through a deed of the whole tract from Peralta to Hays. Plaintiff brought the action for himself and on behalf of the others, whose titles were similarly situated, for the purpose of obtaining equitable relief against certain subsequent conveyances of the Encinal made by Peralta, alleged to be fraudulent, and to constitute a cloud upon the title derived through the deed to Hays, and asked, as a portion of the relief, a perpetual injunction against any further alienations by the fraudulent grantees (defendants). The decree pronounced the subsequent conveyances fraudulent and void, and granted the injunction asked as to the plaintiff's separate portion of the land, but not as to that of the others for whom he sued: Held, on appeal by plaintiff from this decree, that it was not in this respect erroneous; that there was no such community of interest between the plaintiff and those whom he represented in the action as entitled him to an injunction in their favor.

Id.

74. If plaintiff prevail in an action to quiet title, a decree inserted in the judgment injoining defendant from making any further contest on plaintiff's title, even if not strictly correct, does not injure defendant. Such decree does not preclude defendant from availing himself of an after-acquired title.

Reed v. Calderwood, 32 Cal. 109.

75. A judgment in favor of the plaintiff, against one of several defendants, in an action to set aside a deed as a cloud upon the plaintiff's title, is an adjudication that the title is in the plaintiff.

Marshall v. Shafter, 32 Cal. 176.

76. Arrington had been in the exclusive adverse possession of lands for twelve years, under a deed from one Harris, whose sole title was derived through a sale under a judgment foreclosing a mortgage executed by one Light. The title of Harris was defective, because one Liscom, a subsequent grantee of the mortgagor, Light, held the legal title at the time when said foreclosure suit was instituted, and not having been made a party to the action, his title was unaffected by the foreclosure and sale. After said twelve years' adverse possession, Arrington brought an action against Liscom, alleging his title acquired under the proceeding of foreclosure and through his said adverse possession; that Liscom claimed title adverse to him under his conveyance from Light; that said title had ceased to have any validity as against said plaintiff, but being an apparently good title of record, it cast a cloud upon his title, which diminished the value of his estate; and upon the case stated, asked that Liscom's adverse claim be determined, adjudged to be void, and that the said cloud be removed. Liscom, in his answer, admitted the facts alleged, but claimed title in himself, subject only to the mortgage, denying that it was a cloud on plaintiff's title, and as a ground for affirmative relief, restated the facts, set up his record title, and asked to be allowed to redeem from the mortgage, and that Arrington be required to account for the rents and profits of the land: Held, first, that Liscom's right to redeem is barred by the statute of limitations; second, that the action, upon the facts averred in the complaint, is not an action in substance or form for a strict foreclosure of the mortgage as against Liscom, and that there was no recognition by the plaintiff of a present subsisting mortgage, nor any waiver of the bar of the statute; third, that Arrington had become vested with a perfect title to the land through his adverse possession during the period prescribed by the statute of limitations; and, fourth, that Liscom's title, as against Arrington, had become extinct, but being an apparent title from a common source, regular upon its face, casts a cloud upon Arrington's title, and that Arrington is entitled to have the adverse claim of Liscom determined and adjudged invalid, and the cloud removed.

Arrington v. Liscom, 34 Cal. 365.

77. A plaintiff can not come into a court of equity, and ask for a decree debarring the defendant from asserting a claim under an instrument executed by the former, without restoring the consideration received by him.

Chandler v. Chandler, 55 Cal. 267.

78. In an action to quiet a plaintiff's title to land, alleged to be clouded by defendants giving out that the title is in themselves and not in plaintiff, an action of ejectment pending, in which the defendant does not ask for affirmative relief, is not available as a defense.

JURISDICTION.

1. On petition of the attorney-general for a writ of quo warranto against a tax collector: Held, that the court had no jurisdiction, and the prayer of the petition was denied. Ex parte Attorney-general, 1 Cal. 85.

2. This court is strictly an appellate tribunal, and has no original jurisdiction except in cases of habeas corpus, and consequently is not empowered to issue a writ of quo warranto for the purpose of inquiring by what authority a person exercises the duties of a collector of the foreign license tax. Id.

3. The act of giving jurisdiction over the subject of contested elections to the judge of the county court, is constitutional, and district judges are embraced within it. Saunders v. Haynes, 13 Cal. 145.

4. This is one of the "special cases," of which the constitution provides that the county judge may take cognizance when authorized by the legislature. Id.

WHEN ACTION WILL LIE.

5. This writ is to prevent the usurpation of any office, franchise, or liberty, as also to afford a remedy against corporations for a violation of their charters, tending to a forfeiture thereof.

Ex parte Attorney-general, 1 Cal. 85.

6. The code provides a remedy against any person who usurps, intrudes into, or unlawfully holds or receives any public office, civil or military, or any franchise in the state.

People v. Olds, 3 Cal. 167.

7. The distinction between writs of mandate and quo warranto, as held in England, is not abolished by the statutes of this state, but is fully recognized. Id.

8. An information in the nature of a quo warranto is the proper proceeding to try the title to an office.

People v. Scannell, 7 Cal. 432.

9. Quo warranto lies to test the right of an appointee of the board of pilot commissioners. Palmer v. Woodbury, 14 Cal. 43.

10. An action under section 310 of the practice act may be maintained against one in possession of an office to which he has not been duly elected, who holds a certificate of election proper in form from the board of election canvassers.

People v. Jones, 20 Cal. 50.

11. A person holding a certificate of election without the right and legal title to the office, is an intruder within the meaning of the act. Id.

12. The real right or title to the office comes from the will of the voters as expressed at the election. If the office was in fact given by the voters to another, the possession by the defendant of the certificate affords him, at most, but a color of title, and does not invest him with the right which belongs to another. Id.

13. A certificate of election is not necessary to enable a party, claiming to have been elected, to bring his action by quo warranto. Magee v. Calaveras Co., 10 Cal. 376.

14. Such certificate is only prima facie evidence of title to the office—not conclusive. Nor is it the only evidence by which the title may be established. It is the fact of election which gives title to the office, and this fact may be established, not only without, but against the evidence of the certificate. Id.

15. In the case of an election to office by the people, the issuance of a commission is a mere ministerial act.

Conger v. Gilmer, 23 Cal. 75.

See sec. 18.

PROCEEDINGS IN.

Complaint.

16. In quo warranto to determine the right to an office, an allegation that defendant is in possession of the office without lawful authority, is a sufficient allegation of intrusion and usurpation.

Palmer v. Woodbury, 14 Cal. 43.

17. If the complaint be defective in this particular, the defect must be reached by special demurrer. Id.

18. The use of an abbreviated corporate name by the officers of a corporation organized under a particular name, is not an usurpation, nor will it support a proceeding by quo warranto to oust them from the enjoyment of their franchise.

People v. Bogart, 45 Cal. 73.

19. In an action by one claiming to have been elected to an office against his predecessor, to compel a surrender of the books, papers, etc., belonging to the office, plaintiff must show prima facie that a vacancy existed in the office, and that he was elected to fill it. Doane v. Scannell, 7 Cal. 393.

20. Pleadings in proceedings by quo warranto to try rights to the exercise of corporate powers.

O. & V. R. Co. v. Plumas Co., 37 Cal. 354.

Answer—Defense.

21. In quo warranto for an alleged usurpation of office of pilot for the port of San Francisco, the complaint avers that defendants hold, use, exercise, usurp, and enjoy the office without a license, and also certain allegations as to the right of relator to the office: Held, that these allegations as to relator's right can not be reached by general demurrer, the complaint being good as against the defendants; that they are not interested in the question as to the right of relator, but only in the determination of their own right to the office.

Flynn v. Abbott, 16 Cal. 358.

22. In a proceeding to contest the election of defendant as district judge, the ineligibility of the candidate receiving the highest number of votes, the defendant being next on the list, is no defense; because this matter, if true, could not protect the incumbent from the consequences of an unauthorized possession of the office.

Saunders v. Haynes, 13 Cal. 145.

23. The fact that the candidate receiving the highest number of votes at an election by the people is ineligible, does not give the office to the next highest on the list. Id.

24. In a special case to contest an election under the statute, the county court has no power to grant a new trial, and an appeal to the supreme court must be taken from the judgment, and a statement on appeal be made and settled to enable the supreme court to review the proceedings below outside the judgment roll.

Casgrave v. Howland, 24 Cal. 457.

Judgment.

25. In an action of quo warranto to determine the right to an office where the relator claims the incumbent, the court may not only determine the right of the defendant, but of the relator also; and if it determine in favor of the relator, may render judgment that the defendant forthwith deliver up to the relator the office.

People v. Banvard, 27 Cal. 470.

26. Contestant can not take judgment by default. Keller v. Chapman, 34 Cal. 635.

FORMATION AND POWERS.

1. The statute relating to the formation of railroad corporations is substantially complied with, if the only defect in the papers necessary to constitute a corporation is the omission of the words "in good faith," in that portion of the affidavit attached to the certificate relating to the payment of the ten per cent.

People v. S. & V. R. R. Co., 45 Cal. 306.

2. The treasurer of a company about to form a railroad corporation may receive from the subscribers payment of the ten per cent. required by law to be paid to him, in bank checks drawn by the subscribers, and payable in presenti, provided they are drawn against a sufficient fund and the banks will pay the checks on presentation, and the same are drawn in good faith and with no intention to evade the law. Id.

3. Under the act of May 20, 1861, providing for the incorporation of railroad companies (stats. 161, p. 607), and requiring at least one thousand dollars per mile to be subscribed, and ten per cent. thereof in cash, to be actually and in good faith paid in before incorporation: Held, that payment of such ten per cent. could not be made in a check on a bank, drawn by a person who had not on deposit funds sufficient to meet it, even though it appeared that such check would have been paid if presented.

People v. Chambers, 42 Cal. 201.

4. Under the act for the incorporation of railroad companies, passed May 20, 1861, railroad corporations possessed all the powers and privileges, for the purpose of carrying on the business of the corporation, that private individuals and natural persons had. The power to make and execute contracts the act has committed to the directors of the corporation, and declared, among other things, that "no contract shall be binding upon the company unless made in writing."

Pixley v. W. P. R. R. Co., 33 Cal. 183.

5. The provision in the act concerning railroad corporations, that "no contract shall be binding on the company unless made in writing," refers only to contracts wholly executory; but the action against the corporation on such verbal executory contracts must be brought upon an implied promise, and the recovery must be limited to the value of the benefit received by the corporation.

Foulke v. San Diego & S. P. R. R. Co., 51 Cal. 365.

PROPERTY OF.

6. The property of a railroad corporation is vested in its trustees, to be preserved by them as a fund to secure the creditors of the corporation.

S. F. & N. P. R. R. Co. v. Bee, 48 Cal. 398.

7. When railroad lands, granted to the Pacific railroads, are withdrawn from pre-emption and sale by the direction of the secretary of the interior, it will be presumed that the railroad company had filed a map designating the general route of the road.

Weaver v. Fairchild, 50 Cal. 360.

RIGHT OF WAY.

8. The act of congress of August, 1852, which gives to railroads and other companies, on complying with certain conditions, a right of way over the public lands, does not confer upon the companies availing themselves of its provisions the right to enter upon premises in the actual occupancy of a settler without compensating him for the damage done to his possession.

N. R. R. Co. v. Gould, 21 Cal. 254.

9. The purpose of the act of congress was merely to give a right to enter upon the public lands, assuming them to be vacant, and its effect is to relinquish to the companies complying with its requirements any claim for compensation that might belong to the United States, as proprietor, under any proceeding, by virtue of a state law, to appropriate the land for public use. Id.

10. The grant by congress of the right of way over the public lands to the Central Pacific railroad company vests in the company the full and ample right to enter upon the four hundred feet in width and use the same for railroad purposes, and a mere naked possessor can not prevent such entry, or recover damages for an injury necessarily done to his possession or improvements by such entry.

Doran v. C. P. R. R. Co., 24 Cal. 245.

11. The right of way over a strip of land two hundred feet in width on each side of its road, granted to the Central Pacific railroad company by the second section of the act of congress, passed July 1, 1862, extends to and covers all public lands, whether mineral or not. Id.

12. The proviso to section 3 of the act, excepting mineral lands from its operation, refers to the alternate sections granted to the Central Pacific railroad company, and has no reference to the grant of the right of way in section 2. Id.

13. The right of way granted to the Central Pacific railroad company of California, over the public lands of the United States, for its road, became perfect upon the filing of the plat of the location of the railroad in the proper land office, as against pre-emptioners who had not perfected their pre-emption right by payment of the price of the land. W. P. R. R. Co. v. Tevis, 41 Cal. 489.

14. Congress has the power to grant a right of way for a railroad over public lands which are occupied by persons who have the right to pre-empt, but have not yet perfected that right by proving up and making payment for the land. Id.

15. A claimant of public land, within the meaning of the third section of the act of congress granting a right of way over the public lands to the Union and Central Pacific railroad companies, is one who has an interest in the land recognized by the laws of the United States. One who is a pre-emptioner, but has not paid for the land, is not such claimant. Id.

16. The neglect of the company to build the fence does not operate to dispossess the occupant of his entire field, or prevent him from making a lawful use of it.

McCoy v. Cal. P. R. R. Co., 40 Cal. 532.

17. There is no statute in this state requiring railroad corporations to fence in their track.

Richmond v. S. V. R. R. Co., 18 Cal. 351.

18. The act of 1861, requiring railroad companies to maintain a sufficient fence on both sides of their property, without prescribing what a sufficient fence shall be, must be considered as referring to and adopting the general law fixing the standard of lawful fences.

Enright v. S. F. & S. J. R., 33 Cal. 230.

See secs. 33, 34.

BONDS OF.

19. The act of 1860 (stats. 1860, p. 90), authorizing Butte county to purchase and hold two hundred thousand dollars of the first mortgage bonds of the California Northern railroad company, and to issue county bonds in payment of the same, as amended by the act of 1860 (stats. 1860, p. 133), the fourth section of which authorizes the supervisors to issue the bonds if, at the election by the people, to whom the matter is submitted, the issuance of the bonds be authorized, is a law, and not a mere transfer to the people of the county of the power to pass laws. The fact that the issuance of the bonds depends upon the will of the people is a mere condition affixed by law; and as the legislature, in the absence of constitutional restrictions, have the right to exercise an unqualified power, they may add, as is done here by this condition, a qualification to the power. Hobart v. Butte Co., 17 Cal. 23.

20. Under the second section of the act no proceedings can be taken by the company against the board for refusal to issue the bonds until ten days from the time of this decision upon the "estimate of expenditures" presented by the company. During that period any taxpayer has a right to institute proceedings in the district court to review the action of the board.

C. N. R. R. Co. v. Butte Co., 18 Cal. 671.

21. Under the act of 1860 (stats. 1860, p. 133), relative to the issuance of the bonds of Butte county to the California Northern railroad company in certain contingencies, the basis upon which the supervisors are to proceed in estimating the work done by the company, so as to entitle it to bonds, is the actual expenditure by the company, and not the value of the work. This actual expenditure, connected with proof of the other facts required by the statute, prima facie constitutes the company's claim on the county for the bonds. Id.

22. The county might refuse to issue the bonds if the expenditures were not really made, or if fraud had been committed in the contracts for such expenditures. Id.

23. The act of the legislature, passed April 4, 1864, authorizing the board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco to compromise and settle all claims upon the part of the Western Pacific railroad company and the Central Pacific railroad company, for bonds claimed by said companies for said city and county, under the act of April 22, 1863, fully empowered said board of supervisors to make a settlement with said Central Pacific railroad company, by the terms of which the company released its claim for the six hundred thousand dollars of bonds claimed under the act of 1863, and accepted in place thereof bonds of said city and county to the amount of four hundred thousand dollars, and the city and county released its right to stock in the company, and withdrew its subscription to the capital stock of the same. Said act also fully empowered and authorized the said city and county to compromise with the Central Pacific railroad company, without compromising with the Western Pacific railroad company also.

People v. Coon, 25 Cal. 635.

24. A railroad corporation has power, upon a sufficient consideration, to guarantee the payment of the bonds of another railroad corporation.

Low v. C. P. R. R. Co., 52 Cal. 53.

STREET RAILROADS.

25. The act of 1870 (stats. 1869-70, p. 786), granting to city councils the power to authorize street railroads to be laid down in streets in a city, does not prohibit such councils, when there is one railroad track in a street, from granting the right to construct another in the same street.

O. R. R. Co. v. O. B. & F. V. R. R. Co., 45 Cal. 365.

26. While a street railroad company has a right to run its cars on a public street, yet the public have also a right to travel on the street, and the railroad company must exercise such care and precaution for the purpose of avoiding accidents and endangering property or person as a reasonable prudence would suggest.

Shea v. P. & B. V. R. R. Co., 44 Cal. 414.

27. A street railroad company has only an equal right with the traveling public to the use of the street where its track is laid, with a few exceptions, such as that the cars run on a track, and when a vehicle meets a car it must give way.

Id.

28. A person is entitled to walk on a street railroad track in a public street, using reasonable care and prudence to avoid injuries; but he is not required to abandon the track in order to avoid possible injuries which may result from the carelessness of the company, and if he is injured by the carelessness of the company while walking on the track, the fact that he might have walked by the side of the track is not contributory negligence on his part.

Id.

29. The mere consequential disadvantages of a street railroad to a particular locality, and its consequential detriment to property along its line, can not be the subject of a private action, and such injury must be regarded as damnum absque injuria.

Carson v. C. R. R. Co., 35 Cal. 325.

30. If an act of the legislature grants the right to build a street railroad with the proper and necessary switches and turnouts, and a turnout and short side track are made from the main track towards and along the sidewalk, upon which the cars run for the purpose of standing until other cars pass and stop to allow passengers to make an exchange of cars, this is a switch and turnout within the meaning of the act, and the presumption is that it is a proper and necessary turnout.

Id.

31. When a company is authorized by law to construct a railroad in a public street, and necessary switches and turnouts, and the road is built having switches and turnouts, the presumption of law is that the switches and turnouts are necessary, and one complaining that they are a nuisance has cast upon him the burden of proving that they are so.

Id.

32. Where a street railroad company is authorized by law to build necessary switches and turnouts, and constructs them, a plaintiff who sues to abate a turnout as a nuisance can not introduce evidence of the damage he has sustained until he has first introduced evidence tending to show that the switch and turnout are not necessary.

Id.

33. If a party dedicates a public street through his land, and a railroad company afterwards procures a condemnation of land along the street for its track, and damages are awarded to him therefor, this is no reason why he should not be awarded further damages, to be paid by another railroad company, which seeks to build another track on the same street.

S. P. R. R. Co. v. Reed, 41 Cal. 256.

34. If the authorities of a city grant to a railroad company the right to lay its track along a public street, this grant does not preclude the owners of lots along the line of the street from recovering such damages as they sustain thereby.

Id.

35. A person who owns lots fronting on a street dedicated by himself to the public use, is entitled to damages, if a railroad company lays its track along the street, and by that means obstructs it for the use of teams and vehicles, and if the value of his lots is diminished thereby.

Id.

36. Under section 499 of the civil code, in no case may a street be occupied by two railroads, whether belonging to corporations or private persons, for a distance of more than five blocks; and an ordinance permitting is void.

People v. Rich, 54 Cal. 74.

37. The maintenance of a horse railroad on the streets of a city is a mere special mode of using the street, and does not exclude the public from the use of the street, nor prevent the crossing of its track by another railroad, provided the crossing is effected with as little damage as may be.

Market St. R. Co. v. C. R. Co., 51 Cal. 583.

38. If one street railroad company is occupying or using a street without proper license to do so, it is no concern of another railroad company having a railroad on the same street, but must be inquired into by proceedings on behalf of the public. Id.

39. A franchise conferred by the legislature on private persons, to construct a railroad track through the streets of a city, and to run cars thereon, and prescribing certain conditions to be performed by the grantees, is not a contract in such sense as to exempt the corporation operating the road from proper police regulations, or from taxation by the municipal authorities in cases authorized by law.

San Jose v. S. J. & S. P. R., 53 Cal. 475.

40. The fact that the railroad extends and cars are run beyond the corporate limits does not exempt the occupation from taxation by the municipality. Id.

SUBSIDIES TO RAILROADS.

41. A board of supervisors may call a special meeting for the purpose of calling an election to vote on the question of issuing the bonds of the county to a railroad company, to aid in the construction of a railroad, under the act of April 4, 1870, commonly known as the five per cent. act.

Cohlan v. Board of Supervisors, 50 Cal. 493.

42. Aid under said act may be voted and granted to a railroad company which is organized for and proposes to build a railroad between certain points, even if not incorporated until after the order has been made calling the election. Id.

43. Under said act, after a company has proposed to build a road upon a certain route, and the question has been submitted to the electors and they have voted to grant aid, and the board of supervisors has accepted the proposition and resolved to extend the aid, it may authorize the railroad company to deliver from the proposed line of road in part. Id.

44. If a subsidy in bonds is granted by a city to a railroad company to aid in the construction of a railroad from the city in the direction of another city, the bonds to be delivered when a certain number of miles of railroad are constructed, the company does not forfeit its right to the subsidy by the fact that it purchases and adopts as a part of its line a section of a railroad already constructed on a portion of the route on which the proposed railroad was to be built.

Stockton R. R. Co. v. Stockton, 51 Cal. 328.

45. If a subsidy in bonds is granted by a city to a railroad company, to aid in the construction of a railroad from said city through the county in which it lies, up the valley of a river in the direction of a town in another county which lies south of the city, the company does not forfeit the subsidy by the fact that the first few miles of a railroad runs east from the city, and then turns south, provided it is built in the valley of the river and in the direction of the town. RECEIVER.

1. APPOINTMENT—JURISDICTION.
20. BONDS OF.
21. RIGHTS AND DUTIES OF.
33. VACATING ORDER OF APPOINTMENT—REMOVAL OF.

APPOINTMENT OF.

1. Under the statute, the county judge may grant an injunction in cases in the district court, but he can not appoint a receiver; at least, not a thing distinct from the injunction. Ruthrauff v. Kresz, 13 Cal. 639.

2. Courts of equity have the power to appoint receivers, and to order them to take possession of the property in controversy, whether in the immediate possession of the defendant or his agents; and in proper cases they can also order the defendant's agents or employees, although not parties to the record, to deliver the specific property to the receiver. Ex parte Cohen, 5 Cal. 494.

3. The purchaser at judicial sale of a mining claim, may, where the judgment debtor remains in possession, working the mining claims, and is insolvent, have a receiver appointed to take charge of the proceeds, during the period allowed by the statute for redemption. Hill v. Taylor, 22 Cal. 191.

4. In proceedings supplementary to execution, the court may appoint when it has all the parties before it.

Hathaway v. Brady, 26 Cal. 581.

5. A court of equity has no jurisdiction over corporations for the purpose of restraining their operations or winding up their concerns. Such court may compel the officers of the corporation to account for any breach of trust, but the jurisdiction for this purpose is over the officers personally, and not over the corporation; hence, in this case, it was error in the court below to appoint a receiver and decree a sale of the property and a settlement of the affairs of the corporation. Neall v. Hill, 16 Cal. 145.

6. In this case it was error in the court below to appoint a receiver and decree a sale of the property and a settlement of the affairs of the corporation. Id.

7. Such decree necessarily results in the dissolution of the corporation, and would be doing indirectly what the court has no power to do directly. Id.

8. When the allegations of the bill are general in their nature, and the equities are fully denied by the answer, such a case is not presented as will justify the appointment of a receiver, the withdrawal of property from the hands of one intimately acquainted with all the affairs of the concern, and placing it in the hands of another, who may not be equally competent to manage the business. Williamson v. Monroe, 3 Cal. 383.

9. In a case where one partner has filed his bill for a dissolution of the partnership and the appointment of a receiver, it seems that until a dissolution has been judicially declared, and a receiver ordered to make a pro rata distribution of the assets among the creditors, they are not prevented from resorting to adverse proceedings, and thereby gaining a preference.

Adams v. Hackett, 7 Cal. 187.

Adams v. Woods, 8 Id. 152; 9 Id. 24.

Naglee v. Lyman, 14 Id. 450.

10. Where it appears that the partners, parties to the suit for a dissolution, held a judgment against a third party which was never reduced to the possession nor under the control of the receiver, the appointment of the receiver would not operate as an assignment or transfer of any property not so reduced to possession within a reasonable time. Adams v. Hackett, 7 Cal. 187.

11. The transfer to a receiver by order of court of the effects of an insolvent in the suit of a judgment creditor, is not an assignment absolutely void under the insolvent act of 1852, according to any decision of the supreme court, but only void against the claim of creditors.

Naglee v. Lyman, 14 Cal. 450.

12. After verdict and judgment for plaintiff, in an action to recover possession of real estate, and while a motion for a new trial is pending, a receiver of the rents and proceeds of the property in dispute may be appointed, if the facts of the case are such as warrant it.

Whitney v. Buckman, 26 Cal. 447.

13. If notice is given of an application for an injunction, and the petition prays for an injunction, the judge, on the hearing, may appoint a receiver, if the facts make out a proper case for a receiver, and no objection is made on the ground of want of notice of the application. Id.

14. In an action to recover the possession of land, after verdict and judgment for the plaintiff, if the defendant in possession is receiving monthly large sums of money from the sale of the waters of mineral springs on the land, and is insolvent, a receiver may be appointed, pending the further litigation on motion for new trial. Id.

15. Under the provisions of the code of civil procedure, section 939, a direct appeal from an order made before judgment appointing a receiver is not allowed, nor is such an order subject to be reviewed upon an appeal from the final judgment. Such an order, if it is in excess of the jurisdiction of the court in which it is entered, is therefore subject to review under section 1068 of the code of civil procedure.

French Bank case, 53 Cal. 495.

16. The general and ordinary jurisdiction of courts of equity does not embrace the power to appoint a receiver of the property of a corporation in aid of a suit prosecuted against the corporation by a private person, but such power, if it exist at all, must be derived from a statute conferring it upon the court. Id.

17. Section 564 of the code of civil procedure does not confer it. Id.

18. Under the code of civil procedure, the district court had no jurisdiction to appoint a receiver in an action of ejectment; and an order making such appointment should be annulled.

Bateman v. Superior Court, 54 Cal. 285.

19. Subdivision 6, of section 564 of the code of civil procedure, is but declaratory of the equity jurisdiction conferred upon the district courts by the former constitution, in giving them jurisdiction of "all cases in equity," and includes only the suits in which it has been the usage of courts of equity to appoint a receiver; their jurisdiction in this respect would have been the same in the absence of the statutory provision. Id.

BONDS OF.

20. Where plaintiff filed a bill in equity for the appointment of a receiver and other relief, and the court refused to appoint a receiver on condition that defendant file a bond to account as receiver, which defendant did, a judgment for twenty thousand dollars was rendered against defendant in this suit, and proper demand being made and refused, suit was brought by plaintiff on the bond, which was made payable to the people of the state of California: Held, that the plaintiff could recover thereon. Baker v. Bartol, 7 Cal. 551.

RIGHTS AND DUTIES OF.

21. Receivers, or other custodians of money in the hands of a court, who are receivers except in name, as they are bound to obey the orders of the court in their relation to the fund, as well as regards its safe custody as its return, are correlatively entitled to the protection of the court against loss for disbursements which were necessary and proper, and such as a reasonable and prudent man, acting as a receiver, would have been justified in expending.

Adams v. Haskell, 6 Cal. 475.

22. An order of court directing a referee "to ascertain and report the amount of disbursements and expenses made with, or under the direction and authority of the court," by a receiver or custodian of money in the hands of the court, is too narrow to do him justice, and should be so enlarged as to allow for all reasonable and proper expenses incident to the receivership. Id.

23. And this, although the claim is for disbursements, etc., incurred by the custodian of the fund, under an appointment as assignee in a proceeding in insolvency, which was afterwards held to be void. Id.

24. Upon the application of the receiver, in the suit for dissolution, he can obtain the necessary proceedings for procuring a correct application of the balance of a judgment held by the partnership against a third party, after paying the judgment creditor of the partnership.

Adams v. Hackett, 7 Cal. 187.

25. A fund in the possession of a receiver can only be distributed by the order of the court in whose custody it is, and no party can, by adverse proceedings, acquire a lien over it. Id.

26. A receiver having the right to stipulate with the counsel employed by him, that the counsel shall rely upon the allowance made by the court for his services, it is the duty of the receiver to report, among his disbursements, the claim of the counsel, leaving the amount to be fixed by the court; and if the counsel, or any other person employed by the receiver, feels aggrieved by the order of the court thereon, he can appeal therefrom. Adams v. Woods, 8 Cal. 306.

27. In such a case it would only be necessary for the court below to order the receiver to retain the amount of the disputed items; and the interest of all parties concerned is better subserved by a single appeal upon the entire allowance. Id.

28. A receiver is appointed on behalf of all the parties who may establish rights in the cause, and the money in his hands is in custodia legis. Id.

29. In a suit for a dissolution of partnership, the appointment of a receiver is only a means to attain the end contemplated by the plaintiff; and so is the employment of counsel by the receiver. Id.

30. Generally a receiver can pay out nothing except on order of court, but there are exceptions to the rule; nor will he be denied reimbursement in every case in which he neglects to obtain the order, especially in a court of equity.

Adams v. Woods, 15 Cal. 206.

31. Where a receiver was authorized, by order of the court appointing him, to prosecute suits for the recovery of assets of the estate he represents, and, certain important mercantile books belonging to such estate being lost, the receiver paid one thousand one hundred and twenty-seven dollars for their recovery, without an order of court: Held, that he was entitled to a credit for this sum as part of the necessary or appropriate expenditures of his office. Id.

Whitney v. Buckman, 26 Cal. 447.

VACATING ORDER OF APPOINTMENT—REMOVAL OF.

33. On an appeal from an order made after final judgment, directing a receiver to pay over to the prevailing party moneys in his hands, the supreme court can not review the order appointing the receiver.

Whitney v. Buckman, 26 Cal. 447.

Copper Hill M. Co. v. Spencer, 25 Cal. 11.

35. Where, pending an action, a receiver has been appointed, and on the trial judgment of nonsuit is rendered against the party at whose instance the receiver was appointed, a motion for a new trial suspends the operation of the judgment so as to prevent it from operating as a discharge of the receiver, unless an order is made discharging the receiver. Id.

36. The pendency of a motion for a new trial does not operate as a stay of proceedings, so as to deprive the court of the power of vacating an order appointing a receiver made before the trial. Id.

48. REPORT OF REFEREE.
66. OBJECTIONS TO REPORT.
70. CONFIRMING REPORT.
74. SETTING ASIDE REPORT.

ORDER OF REFERENCE.

1. An order of court is necessary to constitute a reference under the code, and no reference would be good, as such, without an order. Heslep v. San Francisco, 4 Cal. 1.

2. A reference or arbitration in which there is no order of court or agreement filed with the clerk or entered on the minutes, is a voluntary withdrawal of the case from the jurisdiction of the court, by which it loses all control over the case, and has no authority to enter judgment upon the finding, except by consent of parties. Id.

3. A stipulation to refer the whole matter, is a waiver of any objection that the motion for a new trial and to set aside the award was not made within the statute time. Id.

4. The whole issue in divorce cases can not, even by stipulation of parties, be referred; and where a reference is had, the referee can not pass upon the testimony. If he make any statement or finding of facts, the court is obliged to disregard it, and base its decree only upon the legal testimony taken.

Baker v. Baker, 10 Cal. 527.

5. The court has no power, without the consent of the parties, to order a reference for the trial of any other issue of fact than that involved in the examination of an account in an equity case.

Williams v. Benton, 24 Cal. 424.

6. The court has no power, when either of the parties object, to order a reference, with directions to the referee to report a judgment. Id.

7. The court may order a reference in equity cases without consent of parties.

Smith v. Rowe, 4 Cal. 6.

Still v. Saunders, 8 Id. 261.

8. The consent of a party to an order of reference must be in writing, or entered on the minutes. Smith v. Pollock, 2 Cal. 92.

9. When this court decided in Pollack v. Smith & Wilson, that a reference could not be ordered without the consent of the parties, it intended that decision to apply to a case of common law, in which the party was entitled to a jury trial, and not to extend to cases in equity. Smith v. Rowe, 4 Cal. 6.

10. An order of reference can not be made without the consent of the adverse party.

Benham v. Rowe, 2 Cal. 261.

11. Where an entry upon the minutes recites that "the parties came by their attorneys, and defendant by his attorney moved the court that the cause be referred:" Held, that such reference was made on the appellant's motion, and in one of the modes pointed out by law, "by oral consent, in open court, entered on the minutes."

Bates v. Visher, 2 Cal. 355.

12. Defense, payment by a promissory note. Replication, that plaintiff was induced to receive the note by fraudulent representations: Held, that the case was not referable under the statute, without the written consent of both parties.

Seaman v. Mariani, 1 Cal. 336.

13. In an equity case, where the trial of an issue of fact is involved, requiring the examination of a long account on either side, the court may order a reference, with directions to the referee to report upon the account, or any issue of fact involved in the account. Williams v. Benton, 24 Cal. 424.

14. In an action to dissolve a partnership and obtain a settlement of the partnership accounts, the court has power to order a reference for the trial of all the issues of fact relating to the condition of the partnership accounts; but it has no power, if objection is made, to order a reference of the trial of any other issue or issues in the case, nor to direct the referee to report a judgment. Id.

15. Where the taking of an account is required, it is in the discretion of the court to take the account, or to refer it to a commissioner or referee to state it.

Hidden v. Jordan, 28 Cal. 301.

16. The court may order a reference to ascertain the damages sustained by reason of an injunction issued without cause.

Russell v. Elliott, 2 Cal. 245.

17. A reference, with directions to the referee to take proofs concerning the confession of a judgment by the defendant, and the judgment roll in the case, and whether the same was filed in the clerk's office, and to report the testimony, with a finding of facts and a judgment, does not submit to the referee the question as to what amount, if any, is still unpaid on the judgment.

Solomon v. Maguire, 29 Cal. 227.

18. If the order of reference fails to direct a return of the evidence to the court, the party objecting to the report must see that such testimony as he relies on is properly certified.

Goodrich v. Marysville, 5 Cal. 430.

19. An order of reference can not go beyond the pleadings of the parties.

Brauger v. Chevalier, 9 Cal. 353.

20. The appointment of referees in actions for partition is governed by the general provisions of the practice act, and can only be made upon the agreement of all the parties, except in cases falling within the provisions of section 183 of the act.

Hastings v. Cunningham, 35 Cal. 549.

21. It is erroneous for the court to order a reference for the purpose of trying all the issues in an action for partition, in which there is a party whose name is unknown, and whose consent can not, therefore, be procured; and all proceedings thereon must fall.

Id.

22. A court has no power to send an ordinary suit at law to a referee for trial against the objection of either party; and this, whether the suit requires the examination of a long account or not. And a statute authorizing a reference in such case would be unconstitutional.

Grim v. Norris, 19 Cal. 140.

23. Our statute, as to referring cases, applies solely to equity causes. The right of trial by jury in all common law actions is secured by the constitution of this state. Id.

24. In an action of law, the necessity of taking a long account will not authorize the court to refer the case without the consent of parties. Id.

25. And even if one of the parties subsequently waived his objection to the reference, that will not be sufficient. Id.

26. The court has no power, without the consent of the parties, to order a reference for the trial of any other issue of fact than that involved in the examination of an account in an equity case.

Williams v. Benton, 24 Cal. 424.

27. The court has no power, where either of the parties object, to order a reference with directions to the referee to report a judgment. Id.

28. When the court has decided the principles upon which an account should be taken and settled, upon an order of reference, it is not competent for the referee to review the action of the court; but it is his duty to take the account in pursuance of the principles thus settled.

Smith v. Walker, 38 Cal. 385.

POWERS AND DUTIES OF REFEREES— TRIAL BY REFEREES.

Powers and Duties.

28a. Referees have no power to allow the parties to alter the pleadings after a case has been submitted to them.

De la Riva v. Berreyesa, 2 Cal. 195.

29. Under a reference to try the issues and report a judgment the referee can exercise all the powers of a judge in relation to the trial of the cause referred to him.

Plant v. Fleming, 20 Cal. 92.

30. The referee in divorce cases, under the statute, is simply a master to take testimony.

Baker v. Baker, 10 Cal. 527.

31. It is the duty of a referee to act upon the questions committed to him, and to report whatever he is required to report by the order under which he acts.

Hihn v. Peck, 30 Cal. 280.

Smith v. Walker, 38 Cal. 385.

32. If the legislature had intended that referees should be sworn it would be presumed in this case that they were sworn, the contrary not appearing.

Sloan v. Smith, 3 Cal. 406.

33. The statute concerning references does not require that referees should be sworn. The imposition of an oath by the court would be of no effect, other than to put it in the power of the referee to commit a moral perjury, without becoming amenable at law. Id.

HEARING AND EVIDENCE.

34. A trial before a referee should be conducted in the same manner as before a court, and the evidence should be embodied in a bill of exceptions, and certified by the referee. Goodrich v. Marysville, 5 Cal. 430.

35. Trials before a referee are conducted in the same manner as before courts; and exceptions must be taken to the rulings of the referee, in the progress of the trial, in the same manner as they must be taken before a court; and such exceptions must be embodied in the report of the referee, or made part thereof by his proper certificate.

Phelps v. Peabody, 7 Cal. 50.

36. Hearsay and irrelevant testimony should be excluded by referees.

De la Riva v. Berreyesa, 2 Cal. 195.

37. Referees should exclude items barred by the statute of limitations, if objected to.

Id.

38. Where a referee admits the testimony of a witness against the objection of the defendant, such testimony can not, after the case has been submitted, be thrown out, without first giving to the adverse party the opportunity of otherwise supplying the excluded testimony.

Monson v. Cooke, 5 Cal. 436.

39. Where a reference is had to take an account, it is within the discretion of the referees to open the case, after it has been once closed, for the purpose of receiving additional testimony. The exercise of such discretion, except in case of gross abuse, will not be reviewed on appeal.

Marziou v. Pioche, 10 Cal. 545.

40. If a conveyance is set aside at the suit of the grantor, because of his insanity at the time of its delivery, the account taken under the decree should include such property only as passed into the hands of the grantee under the transfer.

Crowther v. Rowlandson, 27 Cal. 376.

41. When the referee excludes proper or admits improper evidence, or does any other act materially affecting the rights of either party, during the progress of the trial before him, then such party should except, and see that the exception is truly stated in the report.

Branger v. Chevalier, 9 Cal. 353.

FINDINGS OF REFEREE.

42. Finding of a referee conclusive as to the facts, on conflicting evidence.

Knowles v. Joost, 13 Cal. 620.

Muller v. Boggs, 25 Id. 179.

Peck v. Vanderberg, 30 Id. 11.

43. Where the record on appeal contains a report of a referee by whom the case was tried below, in which is a finding of the facts by him, and no statement on motion for new trial appears in the transcript, it will be presumed that the findings of the referee were based upon sufficient evidence.

Donahue v. Cromartie, 21 Cal. 80.

44. Where a cause is tried by a referee, and the testimony is conflicting, the supreme court will not disturb his findings of fact.

Muller v. Boggs, 25 Cal. 175.

45. A finding of facts by a referee that an alleged judgment more than five years old was properly entered, and is a good and valid judgment, does not support a judgment reported by him, that the plaintiffs have execution on the judgment.

Solomon v. Maguire, 29 Cal. 227.

46. When the order of reference requires the referee to try the issues, and report his finding thereon, the referee may make a general finding upon the facts put in issue, stating the facts according to their legal effect.

Id.

47. A case was submitted to a referee to find the interest of R., and the value of such interest, in a vessel and cargo. He found such interest and value in the ship, but not in the cargo, and reported that he was unable, for want of evidence, to find the value of R.'s interest in the cargo: Held, that this was equivalent, for the purpose of legal adjudication, to finding no value whatever.

Montfiori v. Engels, 3 Cal. 431.

REPORT OF REFEREE.

48. The report of a referee upon the facts of a case will be considered the same as the verdict of a jury.

Walton v. Minturn, 1 Cal. 362.

49. The report of a referee upon conflicting testimony must be treated in the light of a verdict of a jury, and will not be disturbed in this court upon an appeal from an order refusing to grant a new trial in the court below.

Kitchie v. Bradshaw, 5 Cal. 228.

50. The facts found in the report of a referee are conclusive in the absence of the testimony, or where the testimony is not properly brought before the court.

Goodrich v. Marysville, 5 Cal. 430.

51. The report of a referee, like the finding of a court, should state the facts found, and the conclusions of law thereupon.

Lambert v. Smith, 3 Cal. 408.

52. When the report of a referee found generally a sum of money for the plaintiff, without finding the facts out of which this finding arose: Held, that it was error.

Id.

53. The report of a referee can not be attacked, except for error or mistake of law, apparent on its face, or by motion for new trial upon exceptions taken at the trial, or the evidence certified.

Goodrich v. Marysville, 5 Cal. 430.

54. The provision of section 187 of the practice act, as to the time within which a referee must file his report, is merely directory. A failure to file within the time will not invalidate the report or the judgment rendered thereon.

Keller v. Sutrick, 22 Cal. 471.

55. A jury was waived by the parties, and the case submitted to the court; the trial made some progress, when, on motion of plaintiff's attorney, the case was referred, "to ascertain the damages sustained by plaintiff:" Held, that the case having been submitted to the court, it was the duty of the court to find upon the facts adduced by the parties, and not the facts presented in a referee's report.

Geeseka v. Brannan, 2 Cal. 517.

56. If a report of a referee under the statute contain sufficient on which to base a judgment, it is the duty of the court below to enter judgment in accordance with the report, so far as it concerns the matter referred; and it has no right to entertain any objection whatever.

Headley v. Reed, 2 Cal. 322.

57. The report of a referee under the statute has the same legal effect as the award of an arbitrator. Id.

58. Our statute concerning referees is in aid of the common law remedy by arbitration, and does not alter its principles.

Tyson v. Wells, 2 Cal. 122.

59. The report of a referee, and the award of an arbitrator, are in all essentials the same.

Grayson v. Guild, 4 Cal. 122.

60. When a referee reports his decision upon the whole case, his report stands as the decision of the court; when he reports the facts only, his report is a special verdict.

Harris v. S. F. S. R., 41 Cal. 393.

61. When a collateral question, not made an issue by the pleadings, is referred to a referee, his finding of the facts does not take the place of a special verdict, as provided in section 187 of the code, and is not binding on the court until adopted by it. Id.

63. If a referee tries a collateral question, not made an issue of fact by the pleadings, his action thereon may be reviewed by the court, by exceptions to the report, without a motion for a new trial, and his report is not binding on the court until adopted by it. Id.

64. When a case has, by the stipulation of the parties, been referred to a referee, and he reports a judgment which is entered, and the court grants a new trial, it can not, without a new consent of the parties, again refer the case to the same or any other referee. Upon the report of the referee, and the entry of the judgment, the stipulation ceased to have further effect.

Daverkosen v. Kelley, 43 Cal. 477.

65. A referee appointed to try and determine a case is, quoad the trial of the case, in the place of the court, and his findings and report are the equivalent of the findings and decision of the court itself.

Thompson v. Patterson, 54 Cal. 542.

OBJECTIONS TO REPORT.

66. Errors in the report of a referee must be taken advantage of by written objections to entering judgment on it, or by a motion for a new trial. Porter v. Barling, 2 Cal. 72.

67. The supreme court will not review a judgment entered on the report of a referee if no objection was made to the report in the court below. Id.

68. A report which is not made immediately after the close of the testimony, by the one hundred and ninety-first section of the practice act is deemed as excepted to.

Headley v. Reed, 2 Cal. 322.

69. A specification in an objection to the confirmation of the report of the commissioners appointed to estimate benefits and assess damages to lot-owners for widening Kearny street in San Francisco, that "the commissioners have assessed some lots far beyond, and others much below the proper sum," is too general to admit proof that a lot in which the objector had no interest was assessed relatively too low in comparison with another lot in which the objector has no interest. Brooks v. Josepha, 32 Cal. 559.

See sec. 63.

CONFIRMING REPORT.

70. Where a referee reported as facts the existence and validity of a judgment more than five years old, and also reported a judgment that execution issue on the same, but stated that he had not passed on the question whether the judgment had been paid by an alleged accord and satisfaction: Held, that an order of court confirming the report of the referee does not authorize the issuance of an execution on the judgment.

Solomon v. Maguire, 29 Cal. 227.

71. The decision of referees upon a question of fact will be regarded on appeal as conclusive as the verdict of a jury, and will not be interfered with.

Gunter v. Sanchez, 1 Cal. 45.

Walton v. Minturn, Id. 362.

72. A referee has no right to bring in and file an additional or amended report. Where such amended report is filed, the case will be reviewed with reference to the original report alone. Headley v. Reed, 2 Cal. 322.

73. The supreme court will not review the findings of a referee to ascertain whether they are contrary to the evidence, except on appeal from an order denying a new trial.

Peck v. Vandenberg, 30 Cal. 11.

SETTING ASIDE THE REPORT.

74. Failure to appear and prosecute a motion to set aside the report of a referee and for new trial, is an abandonment of motion, and the order made denying the motion for such failure to appear is not the subject of review on appeal.

Mahoney v. Wilson, 15 Cal. 42.

Frank v. Doane, Id. 302.

75. If the commissioner, to whom a case has been referred to take an account, commits an error at the threshold, which unsettles the account, the court is not bound to go over the account and correct the error, but may set aside the report and again refer the case.

Hidden v. Jordan, 32 Cal. 397.
28 Id. 301.

76. A reference is a substitution for a jury; and a judgment should be had upon their report as upon a verdict, and a motion to set aside the report of referees is necessary before the appellate court be required to examine the report, and set the same aside.

Gunter v. Sanchez, 1 Cal. 45.

77. Court has power to set aside report of referee, and grant new trial, on the ground that the evidence before the referee did not justify his decision.

Cappe v. Brizzolara, 19 Cal. 607.

78. The provisions of the practice act relating to new trials are general, and vest in courts the same power in cases tried by a referee as in cases tried by the court itself, or by a jury.

Id.

79. If a referee tries a question of fact raised by the pleadings, the court can not review his action on such issues, unless a motion is made for a new trial.

Harris v. S. F. S. R. Co., 41 Cal. 393.

80. If there be no exception taken to the ruling of a referee, and the rule of law by which he arrived at his conclusions be not disclosed, the court can not disturb the report, and an order granting a new trial in such case will be reversed.

Tyson v. Wells, 2 Cal. 122.

Grayson v. Guild, 4 Id. 122.

Butte Co. v. Morgan, 19 Id. 609.

81. The court will not disturb the award of an arbitrator or report of a referee, unless the error complained of, whether of law or fact, appear on the face of the award or report.

Tyson v. Wells, 2 Cal. 122.

82. If there be no exceptions embodied in the report, showing that the referee erred in fact, and the rule of law by which he arrived at his conclusions be not disclosed, the court can not disturb the report; and an order granting a new trial in such cases will be reversed.

Id.

Butte Co. v. Morgan, 19 Cal. 609.

83. The decision of a referee can only be set aside for fraud or gross error in law.

Headley v. Reed, 2 Cal. 322.

84. After the rendition of the judgment, the court may award a new trial, and set aside the report for any reason that would be sufficient to set aside the award of an arbitrator, and for no other.

Id.

85. Judgment is entered upon a report of referees as matter of course, and the only mode to take advantage of it is by moving to set it aside, as on motion for a new trial.

Sloan v. Smith, 3 Cal. 406.

86. When a case is referred to a referee under the statute to hear and determine the issues of fact and of law, and report the same to the court, and he makes a report, on the face of which no errors of law or fact appear, or if there have been any, no exceptions have been taken before him to point them out, or to show that his decision was objected to, it is erroneous in the court below to set aside the report and grant a new trial.

Grayson v. Guild, 4 Cal. 122.

87. A court can interfere and set aside the report of a referee, upon the same ground as it will proceed to set aside the verdict of a jury.

McHenry v. Moore, 5 Cal. 90.

88. In a suit in chancery it is perfectly competent for the judge who tried the cause, after exceptions have been filed to the report of a referee upon the facts, and the report set aside for cause shown, to take up the testimony reported by the referee, find the facts, and render a decree in the cause.

Id.

89. Where there is a large mass of contradictory evidence reported, it will be presumed that the court below weighed the evidence properly, in setting aside the finding of the facts by the referee.

Id.

90. It is error for the court to set aside the report of a referee upon an examination of testimony which was not properly before it.

Goodrich v. Marysville, 5 Cal. 430.

91. If the order of reference fails to direct a return of the evidence to the court, the party objecting to the report must see that such testimony as he relies on is properly certified.

Id.

92. It would be a gross abuse of discretion for a court to set aside a report of a referee, correct in all its parts, without any other apparent reason than the mere volition of the judge.

Id.

93. The decision of a referee upon a question of fact will not be set aside where the evidence upon such question is conflicting, and where the testimony of some of the witnesses, if credited, supports the finding.

Brady v. Brown, 20 Cal. 520.

94. A finding of fact by a referee will not be set aside where the evidence is conflicting.

Keeler v. Sutrick, 22 Cal. 471.

95. Though a plea would be bad upon demurrer, yet, if no objection be taken at the time, and the case be submitted to a referee, the defect of the plea is not sufficient reason to set aside the report.

Ritchie v. Davis, 5 Cal. 453.

96. When the alleged error consists in the final conclusion of law or fact drawn from the testimony, and the evidence is certified to the court by the referee, the proper course is to move to set aside the report, and for a new trial.

Branger v. Chevalier, 9 Cal. 353.

97. If a referee reports the facts upon all the issues but draws an erroneous conclusion of law from the facts found, and also reports a judgment in accordance with his conclusions of law, the court, before a judgment is entered, may set aside the conclusions of law, and direct a proper judgment to be entered. Calderwood v. Peyser, 31 Cal. 333.

98. The time within which a notice of motion must be filed to set aside the report of a referee, and a statement be prepared for that purpose, will depend on the character of the reference; whether it be special, to report the facts, or general, to report upon the whole issue. Peabody v. Phelps, 9 Cal. 213.

99. In the former case, the report has the effect of a special verdict; in the latter, it stands as the decision of the court, and judgment may be entered thereon, exceptions taken, and reviewed, as if the action had been tried by the court. Id.

100. Upon facts found, whether by report of the referee, or special verdict of a jury, the direct action of the court must be invoked before judgment can be entered. Hence, the time within which the notice of motion to set aside the report or verdict must be given should date from the filing of the report, or the rendition of the verdict. Id.

101. A mandamus lies to compel the judge of a district court to enter judgment on the report of a referee.

RELEASE

1. A. sued B. & C. for forcible entry and detainer, and obtained judgment against them, with damages, and afterwards took a deed from B. for the premises, procured D. to indemnify B. against the judgment, and verbally promised not to prosecute B. on the judgment: Hell, that C. was thereby released from the judgment as to the damages.

Ransom v. Farrish, 4 Cal. 386.

2. A release of one joint debtor is a release of the others, but it must be a technical release under seal.

Armstrong v. Hayward, 6 Cal. 183.

3. A receipt given to one joint debtor on a note, for a part payment, coupled with the words, "which is in full on his part on the within note, and the said A. B. is hereby discharged from all obligation on the same," is not such a release as will discharge the others. Id.

4. Nor would the non-payment of the consideration expressed in the release affect the instrument as a valid release. The obligation to pay the consideration was created by the acceptance of the release, and is not dependent upon the contingency of a recovery in the action. See facts.

Paige v. O'Neal, 12 Cal. 483.

5. Where there is no estate in a releasee to support a release, or upon which it can operate, a release is void.

Branham v. San Jose, 24 Cal. 585.

6. A release, unless the releasee is in possession, is void. Id.

7. A covenant not to sue made to a portion of joint debtors does not release any of them. Matthey v. Gally, 4 Cal. 62.

8. The second of a foreign bill of exchange, drawn here, payable at sight, was presented to the drawee, and payment being refused, it was duly protested. Afterwards, and before suit was brought, the first bill of exchange was paid to the holder with interest and protest fees: Held, that the drawer was released from payment of damages for the dishonor of the second of exchange.

Page v. Warner, 4 Cal. 395.

9. A release of the indorser of a note by the indorsee, such indorsee being a secret partner of the maker, will not release the maker. Tomlinson v. Spencer, 5 Cal. 291.

10. Where a creditor of a corporation, by an instrument under seal, releases a stockholder from all personal liability for his debt, he thereby discharges the corporation, and other stockholders, to the same extent as the one to whom the release is executed.

Prince v. Lynch, 38 Cal. 528.

11. If the release be for the releasee's proportion of the indebtedness of the corporation, the company and the other stockholders are only released pro tanto. Id.

12. Such release will be sufficient to support the plea of payment made by a stockholder in an action against him for his proportion of the debts of the corporation, under the sixteenth section of the act concerning corporations, as amended by act of 1863. Id.

13. The entering of a discharge of a mortgage by the mortgagee does not of itself discharge the debt, but only the security. Sherwood v. Dunbar, 6 Cal. 54.

14. Neglect to sue a contractor for his breach of contract does not operate so as to release his sureties for subsequent breaches.

Sacramento v. Kirk, 7 Cal. 419.

15. A voluntary release of the property levied on by the plaintiff in execution could not revive the obligation on the mortgage given to secure the judgment.

People v. Chisholm, 8 Cal. 30.

16. A part payment of a demand of one of two debtors will not discharge such debtor making the payment from the payment of the balance. His obligation is to pay the whole. Griffith v. Grogan, 12 Cal. 317.

17. Where the vendee of a lot of wheat released his vendor from all damages, by reason of an implied warranty of the title to the wheat, which was then in litigation between the vendee and a third party, such release made the vendor a competent witness. Paige v. O'Neal, 12 Cal. 496.

18. Nor would the non-payment of the consideration expressed in the release affect the instrument as a valid release. The obligation to pay the consideration was created by the acceptance of the release, and is not dependent upon the contingency of a recovery in the action. Id.

19. If much time intervenes between demand and notice, in transfers after maturity of bills of exchange and promissory notes, the question may arise whether the delay has not released the indorser after maturity. Thompson v. Williams, 14 Cal. 160.

REMITTITUR.

1. The court below can not refuse to give effect to the judgment of this court; and a judgment entered by the clerk, in such case, is just as binding as if entered in the supreme court itself.

McMillan v. Richards, 12 Cal. 467.

2. Where a case is appealed from the district court to the supreme court, and the supreme court reverses the judgment of the district court, and directs the entry of a final judgment, such judgment can be entered by the clerk of the district court in the vacation. Id.

3. The act of the clerk in entering the judgment is a mere ministerial act. Id.

4. The remittitur from this court is, by the direction of the three hundred and fifty-eighth section of the practice act, to be attached by the clerk of the district court to the judgment roll, and a minute of the judgment entered on the docket, against the original entry; the judgment of this court then stands as the judgment of the district court. If it award a new trial, the clerk will place the cause on the calendar; if costs, he will, on the application of the party, issue execution for the same.

Marysville v. Buchanan, 3 Cal. 212.

5. When a remittitur has been duly and regularly issued from the supreme court, and filed in the court below, and all the proceedings have been regular, the supreme court loses all jurisdiction over the case, and from that time can exercise no further control. Rowland v. Kreyenhagen, 24 Cal. 52.

6. If a petition for rehearing is deposited in an express office (the usual mode of conveyance), addressed to the clerk, in time to have reached him before the period for rehearing expires, and is delayed, or lost without fault of the attorney, so that it does not reach the clerk's office in time, and a remittitur issues, the remittitur will be recalled.

and the attorney will be allowed to file the petition. Bernal v. Wade, 46 Cal. 640.
See De Baker v. Carillo, 52 Cal. 473.

7. When a remittitur is improperly issued, the court still retains jurisdiction of the case, and the remittitur will be recalled.

Hanson v. McCue, 43 Cal. 178.

8. Where an order of the supreme court reverses an order of the district court, by which a judgment in a county court modifying a judgment in a justice's court, has been modified, and remands the cause with directions to vacate the judgment of the county court, the district court has power under the remittitur from the supreme court to do nothing further than to vacate the order of the county court; it can not render judgment for the defendant unless so expressly ordered by the supreme court.

Will v. Sinkwitz, 41 Cal. 588.

9. Where, in such a case, the district court renders judgment in accordance with the order of the supreme court, but the clerk of the district court uses an improper form in entering the judgment, by which the court is represented as dismissing the cause, the mistake of the clerk does not change the judgment; it is a clerical blunder. Id.

10. In the case stated, the result of the judgment of the supreme court was to leave the cause in the county court in the condition in which it stood when the papers were filed therein on appeal from the justice's court. Id.

11. Where an order of a superior court is filed in a county court, vacating a previous order of the latter court which modified a judgment in a justice's court, and the county court directs its previous order to be vacated in accordance with the decision of the superior court, it is error for the county court to grant a motion for judgment on the pleadings and the justice's record in the case, the motion having been made prior to its order vacating the previous judgment. Id.

12. In such a case, the annulling of the judgment of the county court makes a new trial of the cause indispensable. Id.

13. The district court has no authority to prevent the immediate execution of the judgment of this court so remitted.

Marysville v. Buchanan, 3 Cal. 212.

14. The judgment of this court upon appeal, and the costs consequent thereon, are final. Id.

15. The clerk of this court, in entering up the judgment, adds the words "with costs," and annexes to the remittitur a copy of the bill of costs filed. These words are a sufficient awarding of costs for the clerk of the court below to issue execution for the same. Id.

16. The court loses all control and juisdiction over a case after the remittitur has been filed in the court below.

Blanc v. Bowman, 22 Cal. 23.

17. A motion, therefore, to vacate a judgment, on the ground that it was not rendered by the proper members of the court, can not be entertained after the remittitur has been filed below. Id.

18. District court has no power to modify judgment of supreme court.

Argenti v. San Francisco, 30 Cal. 458.
Meyer v. Kohn, 33 Id. 484.

19. When a remittitur is sent down, the clerk of the district court may issue execution for costs.

Mayor of Marysville v. Buchanan, 3 Cal. 212.
Affirmed in 20 Cal. 51.

20. Where a judgment is against two, one only of whom appeals, and the appeal is dismissed with twenty per cent. damages, the damages with the costs do not become part of the original judgment, and the redemptioner is not bound to pay them when he redeems from a sale under the judgment. The clerk below can issue execution for the damages and costs.

McMillan v. Vischer, 14 Cal. 232.

21. The clerk of the court below can issue an execution, if required by the prevailing party, for the costs included in the memorandum, and the costs of the clerk of the supreme court as certified by him on the remittitur. Ex parte Burrill, 24 Cal. 350.

1. The desertion of the husband entitles the wife to her own domicile.

Moffat v. Moffat, 5 Cal. 280.

2. The phrase "resident of this state," used in the second section of the homestead act, means an actual and not a constructive presence.

Rix v. McHenry, 7 Cal. 89.

3. A person who is domiciled in and has become a resident of a place does not lose his residence by going to and stopping at another place, not to reside there permanently, but only for a limited time.

Dow v. Gould & Curry M. Co., 31 Cal. 629.

4. The domicile of the husband is also the domicile of the wife.

5. The fact of the residence of defendant in a particular township is jurisdictional, but the practice act does not require its existence to be recorded in the justice's docket, or be made to appear in any written evidence of the proceedings in the action, nor does it provide in what manner such facts as are not required to be entered in the docket or other written proceeding, shall be made to appear or be proved: Held, further, that in such case it was error for the court to reject parole evidence that said defendant, at the time said action was commenced, resided in the township where it was commenced.

Jolly v. Foltz, 34 Cal. 321.

10. The presumptions are in favor of the regularity of the acts of the officer, and a return which simply states that the property was attached is sufficient, prima facie, to show a due and proper execution of the writ.

REWARD.

1. An agreement by one who has lost property by fire or theft, to pay a certain sum to any one who will secure the arrest and conviction of the criminal, is not a nude pact; but may be enforced by a person performing the service. Ryer v. Stockwell, 14 Cal. 134.

2. The offer of a reward or compensation by public advertisement, either to a particular person or class of persons, or to any and all persons, is a conditional promise; and if any one to whom such offer is made shall perform the service before the offer is revoked, such performance is a good consideration, and the offer becomes a legal and binding contract. Until performance, the offer may be revoked at pleasure. Id.

3. Such advertisements, upon acceptance of their terms and performance of the service, become written contracts. Id.

4. Where the reward was for such information as would lead to the arrest and conviction of the criminal, there could be no claim for the money until trial and conviction. The statute of limitations begins to run from that time, and the limitation would be for four years, as on a written contract. Id.

5. Where a reward is offered in the usual way in the public newspapers or by hand-bills for the arrest and delivery to the proper authorities of persons suspected of the crime, and a party accordingly arrests and delivers the persons suspected, who are tried and convicted: Held, that the demand for the amount of the reward is neither an "unliquidated demand," nor an "account," within the fourth section of the practice act; and hence, that the assignor of such demand is a competent witness for the assignee in suit against the persons offering the reward.

Rochester v. See Yup Co., 18 Cal. 413.

6. In an action brought to recover a reward which had been offered by the defendants for the arrest and conviction of the person guilty of a robbery, the record of a con- viction of a person for the robbery is admissible in evidence to show a conviction, but not admissible to show that the person convicted was the robber.

Burke v. Wells Fargo & Co., 34 Cal. 60.

7. If a reward is offered for the arrest and conviction of a robber, and an arrest is made and conviction had, and the reward paid, and it turns out that the person arrested was not the robber, it is doubtful whether the persons offering the reward are liable for the subsequent arrest and conviction of the real robber. Id.

8. An offer, by a party who has been robbed, of a reward for the arrest and conviction of the robbers, is not earned by one who merely communicates to the party robbed his suspicion that a certain person is guilty, with a statement that others were satisfied of his guilt, and that circumstances pointed strongly towards him, and who does not claim the reward until after the arrest and conviction of the robbers. Barbour v. Pierce, 42 Cal. 657.

2. In order to maintain a right of way acquired by parol license, as against a purchaser from the one who gave the license, the one claiming such right of way must show a right based on prescription. Id.

3. The use of a way which began under a parol license, may, by prescription, ripen into a perfect title; but in such case the user must have been exercised under a claim of right for the period prescribed for the statute of limitations. Id.

4. A right of way over private lands for a road does not vest in the public until the land-owner has been paid or tendered the damages awarded or adjudged to him for the land taken. The recovery by the land-owner of a judgment for his damages does not authorize the public to remove his fences and open the road.

72. INJURIES TO ROADS.

GENERAL PRINCIPLES.

1. All that part of a bay or river below low water or low tide is a public highway, common to all citizens, and if any person appropriates it to himself exclusively, the presumption is that it is a detriment to the public. Gunter v. Geary, 1 Cal. 462.

2. The phrase "private road" is unknown to the common law. All "roads" are public. Sherman v. Buick, 32 Cal. 241.

3. Roads leading from the residences or farms of individuals to the main road which runs through the country, called in the statute "private roads," are of public concern, and under the control of the government, and are open to every one who may have occasion to use them, and are therefore public roads. Id.

4. A person through whose lands a proposed road will pass is beneficially interested, and is a proper party to contest the legality of the proceedings for the establishment of the road.

Danrell v. San Joaquin Co., 40 Cal. 154.

5. The viewers of a road, appointed under the act of April 19, 1859, must view and mark out the line of the road as proposed in the application, and state the probable cost of its construction, and must also give notice to the owners of the land through which the proposed road will pass, of the time and place of the meeting of the viewers, in accordance with the provisions of the act. Id.

6. The application must state that the proposed road will be located within some portion of the county in which the application is made. Id.

7. The provisions of the San Mateo county road law (stats. 1867-8, p. 283), in reference to the notice to be given of a proposed alteration of a public road, and requiring persons claiming compensation for land to be taken to present their claims within a certain time, or be deemed as waiving all right to damages, do not violate section 8 of article I of the constitution. Potter v. Ames, 43 Cal. 75.

8. Where a statute for the alteration of a public road required as a preliminary, the publication of a notice stating, with particularity, the starting point, and the course and terminus of the proposed alteration, and that those claiming compensation for land to be taken should present their claims within a certain time thereafter, or be barred (stats. 1867-8, p. 283): Held, that a notice of an alteration to run northerly from one point to another, "over the most practicable route for a road," was insufficient. Id.

9. Where a public road in San Mateo county was altered, and the owner of land taken therefor brought suit against the township trustees for damages, quare clausum fregit, and it appeared on the trial, and the court found, that the notice of the proposed alteration required by law (stats. 1867-8, p. 283) was such that the plaintiff could not ascertain therefrom the amount and character of his land which would be affected by the proceedings, and that his damages, if such notice was insufficient to authorize the alteration, amounted to five hundred dollars: Held, that plaintiff was entitled to judgment on the findings for that amount. Id.

OPENING ROADS.

10. An order of a board of supervisors laying out a road, which is unconstitutional and null and void upon its face, does not affect or cloud the title to the land over which it passes, and an injunction will not be granted to restrain the carrying of the order into effect, but the party will be left to his remedy at law. Leach v. Day, 27 Cal. 643.

11. Whether a given road will subserve the public need or convenience is a question for the government alone to determine. The courts have nothing to do with it. Sherman v. Buick, 32 Cal. 241.

12. If an applicant for damages for laying out a road refuses to accept the sum awarded him by the road viewers, and commences suit in the district court, the public do not acquire a right of way until the damages are ascertained in the suit, and a final judgment is rendered thereon, and the damages are paid or provided to be paid. Grigsby v. Burnett, 31 Cal. 406.

13. Until the question is finally settled as to the amount of damages a person is entitled to for opening a road over his land, and the money is paid or provided to be paid, neither the supervisors nor the road master can remove the fences or open the road. Id.

14. Where lots are sold as fronting on or bounded by a certain space designated in the conveyance as a street, the use of such space as a street passes as appurtenant to the grant, and vests in the grantee in common with the public the right of way over the same. Kittle v. Pfeiffer, 22 Cal. 484.

Brannan v. Mecklenburg, 49 Cal. 672.

16. An administrator, as such, has no power to bind the heirs by consenting to a proceeding under the provisions of the political code for laying out a highway over the lands of the estate, by which such heirs are divested of their estate in the lands.

People v. Turley, 50 Cal. 471.

17. The consent of an administrator to the laying out and opening a highway under the provisions of the political code across the land of the estate, confers no right and is void. Id.

See secs. 5, 6, 8.

CONDEMNATION OF LANDS, AND COMPENSATION FOR.

18. Where the compensation for land taken by a county for public use, as for a road, does not precede or accompany the taking, the entire action of the county authorities is void.

Johnson v. Alameda Co., 14 Cal. 106.

19. A suit, in such case, against the county for the compensation, does not lie. Id.

20. It is competent for the legislature to fix the mode of condemnation of land for public highways, and the method by which damages shall be ascertained, and the proceedings to be had for their recovery, and as strict a compliance with the act is required by those claiming damages as by the public making the condemnation.

Lincoln v. Colusa Co., 28 Cal. 662.

21. A statute for the condemnation of the land owned by individuals for road purposes, which fails to provide a method of ascertaining the compensation to be paid to the owner, and the way and means of paying the same before the road is opened, is unconstitutional. Curran v. Shattuck, 24 Cal. 427.

22. The tender of the money awarded by the road viewers to an applicant for damages for opening a road does not give a right to open the road if the applicant sues to recover his damages.

Grigsby v. Burtnett, 31 Cal. 406.

23. A person through whose land a road has been projected, in accordance with the provisions of the road law of 1861, and who presents his claim for damage to the road viewers, must thenceforward pursue the remedy pointed out by that statute, by either accepting the award of the viewers, agreeing with the board of supervisors, or commencing within the time limited an action against the county. By neglecting to follow the statutory remedy, he waives his claims and is barred from bringing any action for damages.

Harper v. Richardson, 22 Cal. 251.

24. A law providing for opening a road from the farm or residence of A., across the land of B., to a main road leading through the country, upon just compensation being made, does not have the effect of taking the private property of B. and applying it to the private use of A.

Sherman v. Buick, 32 Cal. 241.

25. In proceeding by a board of supervisors to take private land for a public highway, an appearance before the board of one of the persons whose land is about to be taken, is a waiver of service of notice upon such person.

Kimball v. Supervisors, 46 Cal. 19.

26. Boards of supervisors, if authorized by law, may exercise the judicial powers necessary to be called into exercise in taking private lands for public highways, and the exercise of such powers is not repugnant to that clause in the constitution which declares that private property shall not be taken for public use without due process of law. Id.

27. The statute devolves upon boards of supervisors the management and control of bridges in their respective counties, and upon road overseers of the county the duty of keeping bridges on the public highway in repair; and if any remedy exists for injuries resulting from neglect to keep such bridges in repair, it must be sought against the road overseers or supervisors personally.

Huffman v. San Joaquin Co., 21 Cal. 456.

28. The relation between a county and its road overseer bears no resemblance to that of master and servant, nor to that of employer and employee.

Crowell v. Sonoma Co., 25 Cal. 313.

29. The levy upon and sale of a road, by virtue of an execution, gives to the purchaser no right or title to the same; for, being the property of the public, the defendant in the execution has no interest therein which can be conveyed by the officer.

Wood v. Truckee T. Co., 24 Cal. 474.

See secs. 9, 12, 13.

See EMINENT DOMAIN.

INJUNCTION.

30. Injunction is the proper remedy to stay a threatened injury to a right of way.

Kittle v. Pfeiffer, 22 Cal. 484.

31. Where the statute under which proceedings for the condemnation of land for road purposes is taken is unconstitutional, or its provisions are not strictly pursued, or notice is not given to the owner of the land, or the compensation is not tendered to him, a perpetual injunction against opening the road will be granted.

Curran v. Shattuck, 24 Cal. 427.

Creanor v. Nelson, 23 Cal. 464.

DEDICATION OF.

San Francisco v. Scott, 4 Cal. 114.

34. Where there is no abandonment or dedication of the land, the use for a limited time by the public can not fairly raise the presumption of a dedication. Id.

35. To constitute a dedication of land for the purposes of a rural highway, no particular formality is necessary. The intention on the part of the owner to so dedicate is the vital question.

Harding v. Jasper, 14 Cal. 642.

36. Dedication is a conclusion of fact to be drawn by the jury from the circumstances of each case. And the quantum and kind of evidence of the intention to dedicate depend somewhat upon the peculiar circumstances of the country. Id.

37. This intention may be manifested with or without writing, by any act of the owner, as throwing open his land to public travel, platting it and selling lots bounded by streets designated on the plat, or acquiescence in the use of land as a highway; and, hence, time is not an essential ingredient to the act of dedication. Id.

38. Time, though often a material ingredient in the evidence, is not an indispensable ingredient in the act of dedication. If the soil be accepted and used by the public in the manner intended by the owner, the dedication is complete, precluding the owner, and all claiming in his right, from asserting any ownership inconsistent with such use. Id.

39. Stronger proof of dedication is required in cases of roads in the country than in cases of streets or lands in a town or city. Id.

40. Where a portion of land claimed under a Mexican grant, being uninclosed and waste, has been used as a road for public travel for a series of years, pending proceedings by the claimant for confirmation of his grant, the land being for the most part in the actual occupation of settlers, and the claimant being aware that the land was so used, and not objecting to it: Held, that this does not constitute a dedication of the land used as a road to public use; that, the land being in litigation between the government and claimant, both as to the right and the boundaries, the claimant had a right to wait, under the statute, until after a patent issued, without prejudice to his right of action by lapse of time; that he was not bound to fence in the whole land to rebut the presumption of dedication of a small part. Id.

41. An order of the board of supervisors of a county, that "all roads now traveled by wagons and pack mules within the limits of the county be, and the same are, hereby declared public highways," though not valid as transferring the title of the land to the public, still may be good evidence, in connection with other proof, to show a control on the part of the county over a road as a public highway, and a knowledge of such control on the part of the owners of the land, and thus to furnish a circumstance from which a dedication may be inferred. Id.

TURNPIKES.

42. If a corporation has constructed a turnpike road for the purpose of collecting tolls from travelers, and the board of supervisors has once fixed the rates of toll, a person who, as the agent of the company, demands and receives toll, is a "toll gatherer" within the purview of section 518 of the civil code, which fixes a penalty for demanding or receiving too much toll, even if more than one year has elapsed since the rates of toll were fixed.

Brown v. Rice, 51 Cal. 489.

43. The directors of a corporation formed for the construction of plank or turnpike roads are not vested with any power by the statute until the stockholders have adopted by-laws defining their powers, and the same have been filed in the recorder's office.

Hall v. Crandall, 29 Cal. 567.

44. An order of the board of supervisors authorizing the directors of such corporation to establish toll-gates at such places as the directors may designate, does not confer on the corporation the franchise to collect tolls.

Waterloo T. R. Co. v. Cole, 51 Cal. 381.

45. In such case, a person traveling on the road may defend successfully in an action brought against him to collect the tolls. Id.

46. A promise made by one who has traveled on a turnpike road to pay tolls, is nudum pactum if the promisor was under no obligation to pay the tolls. Id.

47. Under the act of May 12, 1853, for the incorporation of turnpike road companies, it is competent for a majority of the stockholders, assembled in stockholders' meeting, to authorize the board of directors to execute a promissory note of the company; but if a note is executed by the board of directors without such authority, a subsequent resolution adopted by a majority of the stockholders levying an assessment to pay the note, is a ratification, and makes the note the note of the company.

Forbes v. San Rafael T. Co., 50 Cal. 340.

48. It requires the vote of two thirds of the stockholders of a turnpike company to enable the board of directors to mortgage the property of the company, and if, without such vote, a mortgage is given, it requires a two third vote to ratify it. The facts, that by a majority vote of the stockholders an assessment is levied to pay the mortgage, and that two thirds of the stockholders pay the assessment, do not prove a ratification. Id.

49. A promissory note of a turnpike company is not void because made before it has filed a copy of its by-laws with the county recorder. Id.

50. Corporations organized for the construction of a plank or turnpike road can not acquire or hold lands, or the possessory right thereto, or any interest therein, beyond the easement or right of way over the same.

Wood v. Truckee T. Co., 24 Cal. 474.

51. A corporation organized for the purpose of building a turnpike road and collecting tolls thereon must have the number and location of its toll-gates fixed by an order of the board of supervisors of the county; and in the absence of such order it has no power to collect tolls, even if the board of supervisors fixes the rates of toll.

Waterloo T. R. Co. v. Cole, 51 Cal. 381.

52. Corporations for the construction of turnpike roads can hold only such real estate as the purposes of the corporation may require.

Coleman v. S. R. T. R. Co., 49 Cal. 517.

53. Although the act for the formation of plank and turnpike road companies denominates companies which may be formed under its provisions "joint stock companies," still the powers, rights, and liabilities of these companies, as provided for in the act, show that they are corporations.

Blanchard v. Kaull, 44 Cal. 440.

54. If a plank and turnpike road company effects a preliminary organization and adopts a code of by-laws, and in good faith thereafter acts as a corporation, it becomes a corporation de facto, although a final organization is not effected.

S. & L. G. R. Co. v. S. & C. R. Co., 45 Cal. 680.

55. If a corporation de facto is in the actual possession of a public highway, under a grant of a franchise to improve and collect tolls on the same, a mere trespasser can not justify his entry thereon on the ground that it was only a corporation de facto, and was not de jure entitled to the franchise. Id.

56. A mere intruder upon the property of a corporation de facto can not inquire into its right as a corporation to hold such property. Id.

TOLL ROADS.

57. The state does not possess the exclusive authority to construct a road over the public domain, or over any land within the state; but any person who can procure from the land-holder a right of way, may construct and maintain a road.

Bartram v. Central T. Co., 25 Cal. 283.

58. The right to collect tolls on a road when constructed is a franchise, and can not be exercised except it be granted by the legislature or some branch of the government vested by the legislature with the power to grant the franchise. Id.

59. The grant of a franchise to collect tolls on a particular road does not, by implication, prohibit the construction of roads parallel to the one vested with the franchise. Id.

60. Every traveler has the same right to use the road of a turnpike company upon paying the toll established by law that he has to use any other public highway.

Wood v. Truckee T. Co., 24 Cal. 474.

61. The road of a turnpike company is not the private property of the company, but belongs to the public, and all the interest the company has in it is the right and power to collect tolls on the line of the road as a compensation for building it. Id.

62. A board of supervisors of a county have no authority to convert a public highway into a toll road, and to grant to an individual the right to collect tolls of persons traveling on the same.

El Dorado Co. v. Davison, 30 Cal. 520.

63. The grant by a board of supervisors to an individual of a right to collect tolls on a public road is a grant to do an illegal act. Id.

64. If the owner of land used and occupied by another as a toll road is excluded from the same unless he pays toll and then is allowed to use it only for the purpose of passing over it, the exclusion is a disseisin.

Mahan v. San Rafael T. R. Co., 49 Cal. 269.
Sec. sec. 29.

LOCAL LAWS.

65. The effect of the proviso in the twelfth section of the act of 1860, concerning roads and highways in the counties of Humboldt, Napa and Siskiyou, is to limit the power of contracting, in reference to roads and highways, to the mode there pointed out; and this limitation applies as well to the board of supervisors as to the overseer; and a contract made in any other manner is not binding upon the county.

Murphy v. Napa Co., 20 Cal. 497.

66. The plaintiff proved that he did work and furnished materials for repairing a public bridge in Napa county, at the request of the board of supervisors of the county, and that the board promised to pay him for the same; but he neither proved nor attempted to prove a compliance with the statute of 1860 in awarding the contract: Hehl, that he was properly nonsuited at the trial. Id.

67. There is nothing contained in the act of 1857, submitting to the people of Sacramento and El Dorado counties a proposition to appropriate money for the construction of a wagon road from Sacramento county, through El Dorado county, to Carson valley, or in the acts amendatory thereof, which gives to the two counties, or either of them, the exclusive right to construct or maintain a road along the intended route; nor does the act of 1862, authorizing the board of supervisors of El Dorado county to lease said road, grant to El Dorado county or the lessee such exclusive right.

Bartram v. Central T. Co., 25 Cal. 283.

68. The provisions of the act of 1861, entitled "an act to provide for the establishment, maintenance, and protection of public and private roads," apply to the county of San Mateo. Perry v. Ames, 26 Cal. 372.

69. The prohibitory provisions of the ninth and tenth sections of the act of April 18, 1857, entitled "an act to reorganize and establish the county of San Mateo," are inconsistent with and repugnant to the fifteenth section of the act of 1861, entitled "an act to provide for the establishment, maintenance, and protection of public and private roads, and are repealed by it as to the subject-matter of the act of 1861. Id.

70. The act of March 24, 1863, entitled "an act to allow James E. Nuttman, Marcus Harlow, and their associates or assigns, to construct a toll road in the county of San Mateo," does not confer upon said Nuttman and Harlow, and their associates or assigns, the right to appropriate the county road then in use in San Mateo county to their use and purposes for such toll road.

Mahoney v. Nuttman, 27 Cal. 342.

71. The act for opening roads in Santa Clara county provides for compensation to be made for the land taken for the road.

Sherman v. Buick, 32 Cal. 241.

INJURIES TO ROADS.

72. The use of a public highway for storing merchandise is not the use of the same as a public easement, and the persons who thus use it are trespassers.

Coburn v. Ames, 52 Cal. 385.

73. The owner of the fee of the land, subject to an easement over the same for a public highway, may maintain ejectment against an intruder who takes possession of it and uses it for other than road purposes. Id.

74. The owner of the fee of the land over which a public road has been established may, if he suffers special damage from an obstruction of the same, beyond that suffered by the public, maintain an action for damages, and to abate the nuisance. Id.

RULES OF COURT.

1. IN GENERAL.

14. RULES OF SUPREME COURT.

IN GENERAL.

1. A rule of court which deprives a party of a statutory right is void.

People v. McClellan, 31 Cal. 101.

2. Parties have no unqualified right to stipulate for the abrogation of rules prescribed by this court.

Reynolds v. Lawrence, 15 Cal. 359.

3. Rules adopted by a court are always under its control, and if there is any reason to apprehend that they will work injustice if strictly adhered to, they should be made to yield to the superior calls of justice.

People v. Williams, 32 Cal. 280.

4. The court, equally with suitors, is bound by its rules, and they must be construed as statutes would be construed.

Hanson v. McCue, 43 Cal. 178.

5. The appellate court will not presume what are the rules of the court below when they are not in the record.

Warden v. Mendocino Co., 32 Cal. 655.

6. A rule of a district court, requiring a party, on motion for a new trial, or for judgment on a special verdict, to prepare and submit a statement of the evidence at the trial, does not apply to issues submitted to a jury in a chancery cause.

Purcell v. McKune, 14 Cal. 230.

7. If there is a rule of the district court requiring instructions to be handed to the judge by a certain time in the progress of the trial, it is not error for the court to refuse to give instructions not handed to the judge in time. Waldie v. Doll, 29 Cal. 555.

8. A rule of court which requires each counsel to submit such instructions as he intends to ask, to the opposite counsel, before his final argument, under the penalty of having the same refused, may in many cases work injustice if strictly adhered to.

People v. Williams, 32 Cal. 289.

9. Instructions upon a material point in a criminal case should not be refused because not submitted to the opposing counsel before his final argument in obedience to a rule of court requiring it to be done. Id.

10. When a rule of court requiring counsel to file and submit to the court any instructions they may offer before the argument is closed, to the jury, does not operate where the cause is submitted without argument. Tinney v. Endicott, 5 Cal. 102.

11. Courts have the right to make a rule in criminal cases, that written instructions must be handed to the court before the argument of the case commences.

People v. Sears, 18 Cal. 635.

12. The supreme court does not take judicial notice of the rules of the district courts. When a party relies on such rules he should have them incorporated in the record. Cutter v. Caruthers, 43 Cal. 178.

13. Rules of court are but a means to accomplish the ends of justice; and it is always in the power of a court to suspend its own rules; or to except a particular case from their operation, whenever the purposes of justice require it.

Pickett v. Wallace, 54 Cal. 147.

RULES OF SUPREME COURT.

Reinstating Cases.

14. The supreme court has the power, under its rules, to reinstate cases which have been dismissed at a previous term.

Haight v. Gay, 8 Cal. 297.

15. An appeal, which had been dismissed for failure to file the transcript in time, was reinstated upon cause shown.

Stark v. Barnes, 2 Cal. 162.

16. Where an appeal has been dismissed by reason of the failure of the appellant to file the transcript of the record in the supreme court within the time required by the rules, the order of dismissal will not be vacated and the appeal restored, unless the appellant shall make it appear, not only that there has been no want of diligence on his part, but also shall show that, at least in the opinion of his counsel, the appeal has been taken in good faith, and that there are substantial errors in the record which ought to be corrected by the supreme court.

Hagar v. Mead, 25 Cal. 599.

Clerk's Fees.

17. When an appeal is dismissed upon a certificate filed in accordance with rule 4 of the supreme court, the same fees must be paid as when a transcript is filed.

Bolander v. Gentry, 36 Cal. 105, 127.

Original Transcript.

18. The justices of the supreme court do not take from the clerk's office, or examine, the original transcript, unless it contains the only copy of a map or survey.

Franklin v. Goodman, 31 Cal. 458.

Transcript—Certificate and Service.

19. Rule 9 of the supreme court is in harmony with the three hundred and forty-sixth section of the practice act, as amended in 1864.

Estate of Boyd, 25 Cal. 511.

20. The object of the rule allowing attorneys to stipulate to the correctness of a transcript, was to enable the attorney for the appellant, with the consent of the opposite attorney, to make up the record, and omit all useless and superfluous matter, and thereby save expense, and facilitate the examination, and hasten the decision of causes. Id.

21. The failure of the attorney for appellant to serve a copy of the transcript upon the attorney for respondent before or at the time of filing is not a ground for dismissing the appeal, if reasonable diligence is used; but the respondent may object to a hearing at the first term, if service is not made in time for him to prepare for argument. Id.

22. When the appellant prints the transcript, service should be made before or at the time of filing, and when sent to the clerk to be printed, the appellant should direct the clerk to forward him copies, as soon as printed, for service. Id.

Dismissal of Appeal, etc.

23. Where the record contains a stipulation that there is no error therein to the prejudice of the appellants, provided the title to the whole of a tract of land did not pass by a certain deed in controversy, and the case is argued by appellant's counsel on that theory in his opening brief, and the court holds that the title to the whole tract did not pass, it will not notice other alleged errors on petition for rehearing.

Hihn v. Courtis, 31 Cal. 398.

24. On motion to dismiss an appeal on the ground that an undertaking on appeal is not shown by the transcript to have been filed, the appellant may suggest a diminution of the record, and obtain an order directing the clerk of the court below to certify a copy of the undertaking to the appellate court.

Wakeman v. Coleman, 28 Cal. 58.

Defects in Transcript.

25. Appeal dismissed under peculiar state of facts.

Lynch v. Dunn, 34 Cal. 518.

26. The objection that the transcript does not contain all that is required by the thirty-fourth section of the practice act must be made before the argument, so that appellant may have an opportunity of supplying the missing papers. Solomon v. Reese, 34 Cal. 28.

Death of Party.

27. The death of an appellant after the argument of his case on appeal does not constitute any ground for delaying a decision or departing from the ordinary course of procedure, except as to the entry of judgment which may be rendered. The entry should be a day anterior to the appellant's death.

Black v. Shaw, 20 Cal. 68.

28. The rule is different if the death occurs previous to the argument; in that event further proceedings can only be had upon leave given after suggestion of the death is made. Id.

29. Where, after the death of the appellant, the appellate court, not being aware of the death, rendered a judgment of affirmance, upon subsequent suggestion of the fact the judgment will be vacated and a judgment of affirmance rendered as of a day previous to the death, nunc pro tunc. Id.

Placing Cause on Calendar.

30. A party moving under rule 15, to place a cause on the calendar for failure to comply with rule 2 as to filing briefs, must show the opposite party was in default at the time the calendar was to be made up.

Himmelman v. Haskell, 45 Cal. 269.

Appellants' Points.

31. Points upon which the appellant relies to reverse the judgment should be made in his opening brief.

Hihn v. Courtis, 31 Cal. 398.

Hickinbotham v. Monroe, 28 Cal. 489.

Holm v. Roach, 25 Id. 37.

Edmondson v. Alameda Co., 24 Id. 349.

33. When an appeal is taken on the judgment roll alone, and no statement is made, a specification of grounds of error is not required to be inserted in the transcript. But when the court comes to examine the case, and no brief or statement of points and authority has been furnished by the appellant as required by rule 17, the judgment will be affirmed without examination.

Hutton v. Reed, 25 Cal. 478.

Limiting Argument of Counsel.

34. The establishment and enforcement of rules limiting the argument of counsel to a certain time, are matters resting in the sound discretion of the court, and unless it appear that injustice has thereby been done, form no ground of appeal.

People v. Tockchew, 6 Cal. 636.

Rehearings.

35. This court may, after its judgment has been pronounced, direct a rehearing at any time before the remittitur has been sent to and filed in the clerk's office of the court below; after that has been done, the jurisdiction of this court to order a rehearing ceases: but held, that after an order had been made granting the rehearing, and the remittitur was filed with the court below, the jurisdiction to reconsider the cause was not taken away. Grogan v. Ruckle, 1 Cal. 193.

36. On a rehearing a party will not be permitted to raise any point which was not urged on the first argument. Id.

37. Hereafter, the rule is established that rehearings will not be granted with the same indulgence as formerly.

Andrews v. Mok. Hill Co., 7 Cal. 330.

38. A refusal to give an instruction can not be urged as error for the first time on a petition for rehearing in the supreme court. Payne v. Treadwell, 16 Cal. 220.

39. The employment of new counsel, after decision rendered, is no ground for an extension of the time prescribed by the rules of the court for filing a petition for a rehearing. Ferris v. Coover, 10 Cal. 589.

40. A cause can not be reheard in the supreme court on application of counsel, except upon petition filed, and the party applying for the rehearing should include in his petition all the grounds upon which the rehearing is claimed, and those not included are deemed waived.

Willson v. Broder, 24 Cal. 190.

41. An equal division of the justices of the supreme court upon the question of granting a rehearing is a denial for the rehearing asked for.

Ayres v. Bensley, 32 Cal. 632.

42. Where a cause in the supreme court is submitted on briefs, the order of submission providing that a copy of the briefs be served on the opposite party, he to have a certain time thereafter to answer, and no copy is served, and the court decides the case against him without any brief on his part, a rehearing will be granted on his application without reference to the merits of the case. Patterson v. Ely, 19 Cal. 23.

43. It is not the practice of the supreme court to make a material modification of the judgment rendered by that court on a petition for rehearing, but if made at all, it is to be done after a hearing is granted.

Argenti v. San Francisco, 30 Cal. 458.

44. Counsel should state all the points on which they rely in their briefs; and if they fail to do so, and reserve points to be urged in a petition for a rehearing after a decision of the case, a rehearing will not be granted. Dougherty v. Henarie, 49 Cal. 686.

Remittitur.

45. The presiding judge of the highest court in a state has no power to grant a stay of proceedings on a judgment rendered in that court until an application can be made to some justice of the supreme court of the United States to issue a citation on a writ of error. Greely v. Townsend, 25 Cal. 605.

De Baker v. Carillo, 52 Cal. 473.

LOCATION.

1. The land upon which the city of Sacramento is situated is within the exterior limits of the grant to Sutter, of June 18, 1841. Cornwall v. Culver, 16 Cal. 423.

2. The territory of the county includes the city, but the city forms but a portion of the county, and their respective limits are kept distinct in the act; the powers of the board of supervisors being different in respect to the two. The county and city constitute a corporation for some purposes, while they are distinct as to others.

People v. Mullins, 10 Cal. 20.

INCORPORATION, POWERS OF.

3. It was not the intention of the legislature, by the passage of the act of April 24, 1850, repealing certain acts, "and to incorporate the city and county of Sacramento," to repeal the law by which the county of Sacramento was created. Id.

4. Where the city authorities have the right to erect, repair, and regulate wharves and the rates of wharfage, and the banks of the river in front of the city are dedicated to the public, it follows that the right to collect wharfage devolves on the corporation.

Sacramento v. New World, 4 Cal. 41.

OFFICERS — POWERS, RIGHTS, AND DUTIES.

5. If the auditor of the city of Sacramento, in drawing a warrant on the treasurer, incorrectly designates the fund out of which the demand should be paid, it is not the duty of the president of the board of trustees to sign it. People v. Swift, 28 Cal. 397.

6. Under the consolidation act of 1858, the board of supervisors of the city and county of Sacramento have the power to levy a license tax upon the business of a merchant, and to collect such tax by ordinary suit.

Sacramento v. Crocker, 16 Cal. 119.

7. An ordinance graduating the amount of such tax according to the amount of the monthly sales of the merchant, is not unconstitutional because the tax is unequal. The tax is not on the goods, but on the business, and the provision for determining the amount of the tax is uniform and equal, applying to all persons in the same category. Id.

8. Under the consolidation act of 1858, the board of supervisors of the city and county of Sacramento have no power to create the office of assistant clerk to the board, nor to raise the salaries fixed in the twenty-fourth section of the act, and their action in creating such office and raising such salaries may be reviewed on certiorari.

Robinson v. Sacramento, 16 Cal. 208.

9. That act is an enabling statute, creating a board with special powers and jurisdiction, and the board has only the power conferred by the act. Id.

10. As to how far and when the proceedings of such boards are judicial, and hence reviewable on certiorari, and how far and when legislative, and hence not so to be reviewed, discussed. Id.

11. The president of the board of trustees of the city of Sacramento has no authority to sign a warrant drawn by the auditor on the treasurer, payable out of the "water-works fund," for fitting up the police court-room, though the room is in the water-works building. People v. Swift, 28 Cal. 397.

12. Suits brought by the district attorney of the city and county of Sacramento to collect delinquent taxes under the acts of 1860 and 1861 (stats. 1860, p. 139; stats. 1861, p. 119), and pending when his successor in office was qualified, must be turned over to such successor. Cole v. McKune, 19 Cal. 422.

13. Seemle, that a ratable proportion of the percentage received by the successor after the termination of the suits, should go to the district attorney commencing them; but this point is not decided. Id.

14. Prior to the consolidation act the recorder of the city of Sacramento was entitled to collect the same fees as a justice of the peace for service in criminal cases; but he was bound to pay them over to the city treasurer. Curtis v. Sacramento, 13 Cal. 290.

15. Such recorders are not within article VI, section 2 of the constitution, inhibiting judicial officers, except justices of the peace, from taking fees. Id.

16. The constitution, when it exempted justices from the operation of this restraint, meant to exempt, also, those by whatever name called, who are intrusted with the duties assigned by the law to those officers. Id.

17. The recorder of the city of Sacramento has no jurisdiction in cases of forcible entry and unlawful detainer.

Cronise v. Carghill, 4 Cal. 121.

18. It is the duty of the treasurer of Sacramento county to advertise for proposals for the redemption of bonds issued to the Central Pacific railroad company, whenever there are two thousand dollars or upward remaining of the "interest tax" after payment of the interest then due.

Crocker v. Wolson, 30 Cal. 663.

19. Under the consolidation act of 1858, the treasurer of the city and county of Sacramento is entitled to receive for his official services only three thousand dollars per annum. He is not entitled to the percentage allowed by the state to county treasurers for money paid by them into the state treasury. This percentage belongs to the city and county of Sacramento.

Sacramento v. Bird, 15 Cal. 294.

20. An action against a defaulting treasurer and his securities, for money belonging to the county of Sacramento, if the defalcation occurred after the passage of the act of April 25, 1863, providing for the government of the county of Sacramento, is properly brought in the name of the board of supervisors of the county of Sacramento, instead of that of the people of the state of California. Sacramento v. Bird, 31 Cal. 66.

21. The warden of the county jail, appointed by ordinance, in pursuance of the fifty-third section of the consolidation act of the city and county of Sacramento (stats. 1858, p. 284), is not bound to pay into the treasury of the said city and county moneys received by him from the authorities of Yolo county for keeping prisoners from that county. Such money is received by the warden in his own right. In taking charge of prisoners from Yolo, he acts as an officer of that county, and he alone is responsible to it. Sacramento v. Hardy, 18 Cal. 412.

FLOATING DEBT.

22. The act of 1854, to fund the floating debt of the city and county of Sacramento, forbidding the redemption of any warrants accruing prior to a certain date, is obligatory upon county officers. The legislature is the paramount political power, and can control and direct them in this respect.

McDonald v. Maddux, 11 Cal. 187.

23. The board of supervisors, therefore, has no power to direct and authorize the treasurer to pay warrants in violation of the provisions of the statute. Id.

24. The act of 1854, entitled "an act to fund the floating debt of Sacramento county and to provide for the payment of the same," authorizing the issuance of bonds, payable in ten years, for the indebtedness of the county then due, and making it the duty of the county authorities to assess annually, in addition to the taxes then authorized by law, a tax of one fourth of one per cent. upon all the taxable property of the county as a sinking fund for the gradual redemption of the bonds issued under the act, when executed by the county creditors, by accepting the bonds in lieu of their former claims, became an inviolable contract, and the county authorities are bound to levy the tax for the sinking fund.

English v. Sacramento, 19 Cal. 172.

25. This provision in the act, for assessing an annual tax as a sinking fund, becomes, upon the execution of the bonds and cancellation of the original claims, a part of the contract, and is the sanction and security provided by the law for the performance of the contract. This annual tax is a fund pledged. Id.

26. The case might be different if the bonds had been executed before the passage of the law, and then provision had been made by the act for levying the tax for their payment.

The act in such case would be an ordinary act of legislation, subject to repeal, a mere voluntary provision by the debtor, or on his behalf, for payment of his debt. Id.

27. When the county issued the bonds and received therefor the evidences of its original indebtedness, the county made a contract with the creditors to collect their tax; and this contract can be enforced as well as the claim of the creditors to the money, if it were collected and in the treasury, could be enforced; and such a claim would be perfect. Id.

28. The facts that the act of 1854 cast the duty of levying this tax upon the court of sessions, and that by the general act of 1855 the powers other than criminal, conferred on such court by any law were cast upon the board of supervisors, do not impair the obligation of the provisions of the act of 1854 as a contract between the bondholders and the county. Such a change in the tribunal directed to levy the tax is within the power of the legislature. Id.

29. If the consolidation act for Sacramento be in conflict with the fifth section of the act of 1854, the former must yield. Id.

MISCELLANEOUS DECISIONS.

30. The "interest tax" collected under the act of April 25, 1863, to authorize the city and county of Sacramento to subscribe to the capital stock of the Central Pacific railroad company, must be paid solely for interest on the bonds issued under said act, and for the redemption of the same.

Crocker v. Wolson, 30 Cal. 663.

31. The defendant attempted to show an ordinance of the city of Sacramento, but offered only a newspaper copy of it. In support of this, as secondary evidence, the counsel for the defendant swore to a search for the original, which he himself had made in a book of ordinances handed by the keeper of the city archives: Held, that the evidence was properly excluded, because this was an insufficient predicate.

Norris v. Russell, 5 Cal. 249.

32. A demand against the city of Sacramento for work performed without any contract with the city, does not become a claim to be paid out of the revenues of the year in which it originated, until it has been assumed by an ordinance, and it is to be paid out of the revenues of the year in which it was assumed, and not of the year in which the work was performed.

SALARY.

1. The legislature having, by a general law, fixed the compensation of county treasurers at a certain percentage on money received by them, boards of supervisors have no power to allow such treasurers a salary out of the county funds, unless specially authorized by law; and the act of March 20, 1855, creating such boards, confers no such authority. San Joaquin v. Jones, 18 Cal. 327.

2. A law which provides for the amount of fees attached to the service to be performed in an office, and at the same time provides that the officer shall pay a part of these fees into the treasury, the title to which is, "an act to regulate fees in office," is not liable to the constitutional objection that it embraces more than one object, and that that is not expressed in the title.

Ream v. Siskiyou Co., 36 Cal. 620.

3. An act which provides in one section that a tax collector shall receive the fees allowed by law, and in another section that he shall pay a part of these fees into the treasury for the benefit of the county, does not take private property for public use. Id.

4. The legislature may, without violating the constitution, provide by law that a collector of taxes shall pay a part of the fees and compensation allowed by law into the county treasury, for the benefit of the general fund. Id.

5. A justice of the peace may refuse to send up the transcript of a cause tried before him, until his fees are paid by appellant; but if he sends it up without receiving his fees, the fact that they are not paid is no ground for dismissing the appeal.

Bray v. Redman, 6 Cal. 287.

6. An offer to pay the justice his costs, on appeal, so soon as the appeal papers are ready to transmit to the county court, is not a sufficient tender under the statute. The fees must be tendered unconditionally.

People v. Harris, 9 Cal. 571.

7. The justice is not bound first to make out the papers, and then rely on his fees being afterwards paid. Id.

8. The salaries of teachers, under the consolidation act, should be paid in the same manner as other claims against the treasury. Knox v. Woods, 8 Cal. 545.

9. The special act of the legislature, approved April 4, 1857, fixing the compensation of the county clerk of the county of Placer at three thousand dollars, was intended in lieu of all fees for services rendered the county.

Mitchell v. Stoner, 9 Cal. 203.

10. The salary of an office is incident to its title, and not to its occupation, and one elected to an office who has qualified and is ready to perform its duties is entitled to its salary, even if it is occupied by an intruder. Carroll v. Liebenthaler, 37 Cal. 193.

11. A salary of an office which is fixed at a monthly rate, becomes due and payable monthly. Id.

12. The occupation of an office by an intruder does not have the effect of deferring the time of payment of the salary until the intruder is ousted. Id.

13. The act of February 25, 1858, concerning the office of county clerk of Placer county (stats. 1858, p. 29), does not limit the salary of the clerk to the amount of fees received by him; and if the fees collected for any one month do not amount to the salary to which he is entitled, he can recover the difference from the county.

Sewell v. Placer Co., 42 Cal. 650.

14. Where a statute concerning the office and fixing the salary of a county clerk provided that he should collect all official fees, and at the first of every month pay the same over to the county treasurer, "less his salary for the next preceding month;" and the fees for several months being less than the salary, it was claimed that the salary was only payable out of the collected fees: Held, that he was entitled to his full annual salary, and that there was no legislative intention to limit the salary to the amount of fees received. Id.

15. Section 4330 of the political code, as amended by the act of March 28, 1872, was intended to regulate the salaries of district attorneys, as contradistinguished from fees to which they were entitled under existing laws, and does not repeal prior statutes allowing fees in addition to salaries.

SALE AND DELIVERY OF PERSONAL PROPERTY.

1. On a sale of chattels, where no time of payment and no time for delivery are agreed upon, delivery and payment are concurrent acts, and neither party can maintain an action for non-performance, without showing a readiness and willingness to perform on his part. Cole v. Swanston, 1 Cal. 51.

2. Where on a sale of personal property "the right to receive payment before delivery is waived by the seller, and immediate possession is given to the purchaser, and yet by express agreement the title is to remain in the seller until the payment of the price upon a fixed day, such payment is strictly a condition precedent, and until performance the right of property is not vested in the purchaser."

Putnam v. Lamphier, 36 Cal. 151.

3. If the owner of a piano deliver the same to another person, under an agreement in writing, stating its value, and that such person agrees to pay a specified sum monthly for the use of it, and that it is to be sold for a price therein mentioned, and that a specified sum is to be paid each month until the agreed price is paid, when a bill of sale will be given, the agreement does not constitute an absolute sale of the piano.

Kohler v. Hayes, 41 Cal. 455.

4. Under such agreement the title does not pass, and the party receiving the piano can not sell the same until the purchase price is paid. Id.

5. A sale of personal property passes to the purchaser only such title as the vendor had.

Robinson v. Haas, 40 Cal. 474.

6. A sale of personal property is not completed so as to pass the title to the property, so long as anything remains to be done to the thing sold, to identify it or to discriminate it from other things.

Caruthers v. McGarvey, 41 Cal. 15.

7. An offer to sell personal property, when no time is given, must be accepted at once, or within a reasonable time, and six months afterwards, is not a reasonable time, as matter of law, to accept the offer.

Roberts v. Evans, 43 Cal. 381.

8. If one party negotiates the purchase of personal property, and another furnishes him with the money to pay for it, and for his security takes the bill of sale from the seller in his name, and takes possession, and it is agreed that the property shall belong to the negotiator when he pays the money, the legal title to the property is vested in the person who furnishes the money, and to whom the bill of sale was made.

Johnson v. White, 46 Cal. 328.

9. The same would be the result if the person to whom the bill of sale is given, instead of loaning the money, obtained it by signing with the negotiator a joint note to a bank, or by indorsing a note given by the negotiator to the bank, provided the note is afterwards paid by him. Id.

10. In such case the person to whom the bill of sale is given has a good title to the property as against the attaching creditors of the negotiator. Id.

11. Roberts owned personal property, and offered to sell it to Ellsworth, but his offer was not accepted. More than six months afterwards, Ellsworth went with a servant of Evans and took the property, and delivered it to Evans, who kept and used it, and paid Ellsworth for it. Roberts afterwards wrote to Ellsworth to pay him for the property, but not being paid sued Evans for its value: Held, that Roberts' right of action against Evans was not waived by this offer to accept of pay from Ellsworth, and that his purchase from Ellsworth did not release him from liability to Roberts for the value of the property. Id.

Polhemus v. Heiman, 45 Cal. 573.

13. Where the purchasers from a common vendor are equally innocent, or equally in fault, the first purchaser is entitled to the goods. Vance v. Boynton, 8 Cal. 554.

14. A. purchased of the plaintiffs, in the city of New York, certain merchandise, and gave his promissory note, payable in six months, for the purchase money. The goods were shipped for San Francisco, and, by the bill of lading as well as by the agreement of the parties, were deliverable to the order of the shippers; but they were insured for, and on account of A.; at the time of the purchase, he received a bill of sale, gave his note for the purchase money, and took a receipt for its payment; and the acts of the plaintiffs in New York, and of their agents in San Francisco upon the arrival of the goods there, as well as the conduct of A., indicated that all parties considered the transaction as a sale of the goods to A., subject to the right of the plaintiffs to retain possession until the payment of the note given by A.: Held, in an action by the plaintiffs against the master of the vessel on which the goods were shipped, to recover the market value thereof at San Francisco, on account of his having delivered them to A. without the orders of the shippers, that the transaction between the plaintiffs and A. was a sale, and transferred to the latter the property in the goods, subject to a lien thereon for the purchase money in favor of the plaintiffs, and that the master of the vessel was liable to the plaintiffs only for the value of the plaintiffs' property in the goods with interest. Perse v. Cole, 1 Cal. 333.

15. But where the sale was not made for money, and the vendor, under the power, received instead an article of fluctuating value, he is clearly chargeable with the highest market value of the lot sold, to be credited to the account of the mortgagor. Benham v. Rowe, 2 Cal. 387.

16. As to when the contract of sale is complete before actual delivery, so as to throw the risk of loss on the vendee, etc., see the opinion of the referee reported in this case. Tyson v. Wells, 2 Cal. 122.

17. As between the parties to a sale of goods on store in a warehouse, the delivery of an order on the warehouseman for the goods by the seller to the buyer is a delivery, and passes the title to the latter so as to render him liable for the price.

Ghirardelli v. McDermott, 22 Cal. 539.

18. Where a sale of goods was made through a broker and perfected by delivery of an order for the same upon a warehouseman, which order the buyer shortly after returned to the broker to deliver to the seller, with notice that the goods would not be taken, and the broker tendered the order to the seller, who refused to receive it: Held, that the broker, in receiving the order from the buyer, acted as his agent, and that the reception of it by him did not effect a rescission of the contract. Id.

19. A delivery of a warehouse receipt, stating that the goods named therein are deliverable on the return of the receipt, is sufficient prima facie to pass the title. There is no substantial difference in this respect between a warehouse receipt and a bill of lading. Horr v. Barker, 8 Cal. 609.

20. When the defendants show that the person to whom, in his own name, the receipt was given, and who passed it to plaintiff, was their agent, or broker, acting for them, but permitted to keep it on storage in his own name, they do not rebut the prima facie case made out by the plaintiffs, by the possession of the receipt. Id.

21. Where one purchases land and receives a conveyance therefor, and at the same time buys personal property on the land, the question whether the vendee had actual possession of the personal property is an important one in determining whether there was an actual delivery of possession of the land. Cahoon v. Marshall, 25 Cal. 197.

22. It is no answer to action for non-delivery of lumber, that the plaintiff resold it soon after the purchase; it appearing that the purchaser from the plaintiff had a claim against him for non-delivery.

Gunter v. Sanchez, 1 Cal. 45.

23. Warehousemen who give their receipt for goods on storage are estopped from setting up a want of segregation of the goods receipted for from other goods, in an action against them by the holder of the receipt, for a conversion of the goods by a seizure in an action against a vendor of the plaintiff. Goodwin v. Scannell, 6 Cal. 541.

24. And this, although the warehousemen are the attaching creditors, and although the sheriff making the seizure was not liable, by reason of there being no segregation. Id.

25. If a contract for the sale and assignment of certificates of stock of a corporation is entered into in another state, but the certificates are afterwards delivered in this state, the legality of the sale and assignment must be determined by the laws of this state.

Dow v. Gould & Curry M. Co., 31 Cal. 241.

26. The doctrine of continuous possession of personal property after sale or mortgage does not apply to the case of a paper, the mere evidence of a debt.

Hall v. Redding, 13 Cal. 629.

27. To enable a vendor of goods to rescind the sale, he must offer to return the notes given for the goods; but this offer can be made at, or any time before, the trial.

Coghill v. Boring, 15 Cal. 213.

28. A contract of sale of personal property provided for the immediate delivery of the property sold to the vendees, for the payment, in gold coin, of one half of the purchase price down, and the balance, likewise in gold coin, in four monthly installments, with a provision that the vendor might retake possession of said property, "and terminate" the contract, in case of a default in payment of said monthly installments, or any of them. In accordance with the contract, the property had been delivered to the vendees, and the said half of the purchase price and the first installment thereon paid, but the vendees made default in the payment of the second and third installments, whereupon the vendor immediately retook possession of said property. At the time the said last installment fell due, the vendees tendered to the vendor the full amount remaining due on said contract, together with such other charges and demands, arising under said contract, as the vendor should have against them, and at the same time demanded the return of said property, which said tender and demand were refused, whereupon the vendees demanded the repayment, in gold coin, of the money paid to the vendor by them on said contract of sale, which demand was likewise refused by the vendor, who thereafter sold and delivered possession of the property to other parties. Thereafter the vendees sued the vendor to recover, in gold coin, the amount of their payments on said sale, with interest from the times of said payment: Held, first, that upon this state of facts, and under the terms of the contract, the vendor alone had the right to rescind said contract, and that he did not rescind it; second, that upon no hypothesis, other than that the contract had been rescinded, could the plaintiffs recover back the said purchase money sued for; third, that upon said state of facts, the available remedy of plaintiffs against the vendor, was to recover the value of the property less the amount of said purchase money unpaid at the time of the tender, and the necessary expenses incurred by defendants in removing and taking care of it.

Miller v. Steen, 34 Cal. 138.

29. Plaintiff held a public sale of cattle on his farm, the terms being cash, or notes with approved sureties at sixty days. Defendant bid off two bulls for two hundred and three dollars. The bulls remained on plaintiff's farm at defendant's request, and subject to his control, plaintiff agreeing to keep them until a particular time, when defendant was to send for them, and the persons in charge of them were directed to deliver them to defendant when called for. About two weeks after the expiration of this time, defendant sent for the bulls, but meanwhile they had died. No cash was paid nor any notes given for the bulls. Plaintiff sues for the price bid: Held, that there was such a delivery and acceptance of the bulls as to complete the sale; that the circumstances were such as to authorize the inference of change of ownership; and that plaintiff, in taking charge of the cattle after the sale, acted simply as agent of defendant, and is entitled to recover.

Clark v. Rush, 19 Cal. 393.

30. It was not necessary that the cattle should have been actually removed from plaintiff's farm. It was sufficient that there were circumstances authorizing the inference of a change of ownership; and it was for the jury to draw this inference, and it was competent for them to consider any and all acts of the parties tending to prove that the defendant had acquired and assumed control of the cattle as owner. Id.

31. In connection with these acts, and in explanation of them, the declarations of the parties, showing the nature of their agreement, were admissible in evidence. Id.

32. Where a contract stipulated for the delivery of a vessel, but designated no particular place for such delivery: Held, that a notice of a readiness to deliver must be treated under the contract as an actual delivery. Albertson v. Hooker, 5 Cal. 176.

33. Plaintiff also asked this instruction: "That a delivery at the wharf is not sufficient, unless notice be previously given to the vendee of their arrival, and that sufficient time be allowed to enable him to receive and remove them:" Held, that this proposition is not strictly correct; that if the trees bargained for were put out on the wharf, marked for W., with the intention of his taking them, and if this were done by his order, they would vest in him, especially if he was willing to consider this a good delivery; that there is in the testimony here, no predicate laid for the doctrine of stoppage in transitu, or that plaintiff claimed the right to stop the trees.

Thompson v. Paige, 16 Cal. 77.

34. Plaintiff had two stacks of hay, and contracted to sell to defendant one stack, together with enough off of the other stack to make sixty tons. The price was to be eighteen dollars per ton; and the hay was to be baled by plaintiff, and piled up in a corral, and then he was to be paid. Plaintiff had sixty-two tons and four hundred and thirty pounds of hay baled, and piled up in the corral, the surplus over sixty tons being by mistake of the man employed to bale. The bales were of different weight. Plaintiff then went to the house of defendant, and told him that the hay was baled and piled up in the corral, and that there were two tons and some hundreds of pounds over the sixty bales piled up together, and asked defendant whether he would take the surplus. Defendant said he would be over soon, and see about taking the surplus. Defendant then paid plaintiff two hundred dollars. Plaintiff sues for nine hundred and nineteen dollars balance due on the hay. The court instructed the jury that if they believed from the evidence that it was the understanding of the parties, upon the payment of the two hundred dollars by defendant, the right and possession was deemed to have accrued to defendant to take the quantity bought as baled and stacked up in the corral, the plaintiff is entitled to recover, even though the bargain was not concluded as to the excess: Held, that the instruction was right; that the question was, whether there had been a delivery, and any agreement of the parties upon the subject was legitimate matter for the jury; that the fact that the hay purchased by defendant was mixed with other hay belonging to plaintiff, made no difference, if defendant agreed to accept it in that condition, and to consider it as delivered—the contract for delivery would be fully executed.

Smith v. Friend, 15 Cal. 124.

34a. On the above facts, defendant asked the court to instruct the jury that "if plaintiff sold to defendant sixty tons out of sixty-two tons and four hundred and thirty pounds of hay, the same being in bales of different and unequal weights, and containing different quantities, and all being in the same pile, there was no delivery without division had." The instruction was refused: Held, that the refusal was not error, because the instruction assumed that there could not have been a delivery, whatever may have been the understanding of the parties, until the exact quantity contracted for was segregated and set apart for the defendant. Id.

DELIVERY TO WRONG PERSON, EFFECT OF.

35. Where warehousemen gave the wheat to the wrong claimant they became responsible for its value to the right one.

Hanna v. Flint, 14 Cal. 73.

36. Delivery of goods by a carrier to a wrong person by mistake, or by gross imposition, will not discharge his responsibility to the owner for the value of the goods.

Adams v. Blakenstein, 2 Cal. 413.

37. Authority to deliver goods, confers no authority to take them back, or to countermand the shipment. Id.

38. In an action upon an account, the question was whether a bill of sale of a quantity of wheat, executed by the defendant to the plaintiffs, was an absolute sale in satisfaction of the debt, or was only by way of security; and the court instructed the jury to the effect, that the bill of sale purporting to be an absolute sale, they should find it to be such, unless it appeared from a preponderance of evidence that it was given as security, and that both parties so understood it: Hell, that the last clause of the instruction was erroneous.

EXTENT AND BOUNDARIES.

1. In the plan of the city of San Francisco, the survey into blocks, lots, and streets, extended into the tide waters in front of the city, the object of which was to reach a sufficient depth of water, on the land line, for the convenience of shipping.

Eldridge v. Cowell, 4 Cal. 81.

2. The act of March 26, 1851, which requires the city of San Francisco to deposit in the office of the secretary of state a map of the water lot property granted to the city by the same act, does not make such map conclusive evidence of the extent of said property, as the boundaries are completely specified in the act, and the question of what was the water line of the city, at the date of the act, is one of fact.

Cooke v. Bonnett, 4 Cal. 397.

3. If the state land commissioners, appointed under the act of May 18, 1853 (stats. 1853, p. 219), changed the red line, or water front of San Francisco, as laid down by the act of March 26, 1851 (stats. 1851, p. 307), an alleged adoption and recognition by the state of the acts of the commissioners would not effect a change or create an estoppel in pais as against the state, unless it should be shown that the legislature and other officials, while adopting and recognizing such acts, knew that they had changed the line. People v. Klumpke, 41 Cal. 263.

4. The question of the location of the San Francisco red line, or water front, established by the act of March 26, 1851 (stats. 1851, p. 307), is a question of fact; and the acts of official surveyors and boards in running and mapping out the line, though they tend to show its position, yet, as they could not change, they do not conclusively fix it. Id.

5. As the act of March 26, 1851, establishing the red line, or water front, of San Francisco (stats. 1851, p. 307), mentioned a number of points on it with the same certainty as the initial point, the true position of the line between any two of such points can be ascertained by drawing a line between them, and it is unnecessary for a survey to commence at the initial point. Id.

6. In an action of ejectment by the state for land in San Francisco claimed to be outside of the red line, or water front: Hell, that the map purporting to have been made in 1864 by order of the state harbor commissioners, but not shown to have been approved or adopted by them, was not competent evidence in their favor to show the true location of the red line. Id.

7. The board of state land commissioners, appointed under the act of May 18, 1853, establishing such board (stats. 1853, p. 219), was authorized to find the red line, or water front, of San Francisco, as established by the act of March 26, 1851 (stats. 1851, p. 307), and their map is competent evidence tending to prove the position of that line. Id.

8. In an action of ejectment by the state for land in San Francisco between Jackson and Pacific streets, and claimed by it to be outside of the red line, or water front: Hell, that deeds of the state land commissioners, appointed under the act of May 18, 1853 (stats. 1853, p. 219), for lands to the south of Jackson street, were not admissible for the purpose of showing the position of the red line. Id.

9. In a suit by the state, for land in San Francisco, outside of the red line, or water front, claimed by defendants under deeds from the board of state land commissioners, appointed under the act of May 18, 1853 (stats. 1853, p. 219): Hell, that as the board was destitute of authority to sell such lots, it was no error to exclude defendants' proffered evidence of the reports of the board to the legislature, and the controller's receipts for the purchase money paid. Id.

10. Deeds from the state land commissioners, appointed under the act of May 18, 1853 (stats. 1853, p. 219), so far as they include lands in San Francisco, lying outside of the red line, are void. Id.

CHARTER AND ITS AMENDMENTS.

11. The place called Punta Yerba Buena, on which the city of San Francisco now stands, seems never to have been a pueblo separately from the Presidio, which was founded in 1776.

Welch v. Sullivan, 8 Cal. 165.

12. The first charter of the city of San Francisco does not authorize the creation of a sinking fund commission in terms; nor is there any clause under which it can be exercised even by implication.

Smith v. Morse, 2 Cal. 524.

13. The power to sell does not include an authority to create a new department of city government, to divert the revenues from their legitimate source, and place them in hands neither chosen by, nor responsible to, the corporators. Id.

14. The charter of the city of San Francisco provides that no ordinance or resolution shall be passed except by a majority of all the members elected. The number of members elected being eight: Held, that an ordinance passed by a vote of four in the affirmative to three in the negative, was not passed by a majority of all the members elected, and was therefore void.

San Francisco v. Kelsey, 5 Cal. 169.

15. Under the charter of San Francisco in 1853, no ordinance could have any validity, unless it received the votes of a majority of all the members elected to the board of aldermen. The board consisted of eight members. One of the members elected that year was an alien, and ineligible, yet he was sworn in, and entered upon the discharge of his duties: Held, that there were eight members elected, and that it required five votes to pass an ordinance.

Satterlee v. San Francisco, 23 Cal. 314.

16. The thirty-second section of the charter of 1855 of the city of San Francisco was designed as a check upon the city government under that charter, leaving the previous indebtedness to stand as a matter the legislature could not interfere with.

Soule v. McKibben, 6 Cal. 142.

16a. The act of April 20, 1858, authorizing the issuance of bonds by the city and county of San Francisco, is valid.

Blanding v. Burr, 13 Cal. 343.

17. The provision in section 5, article III of the charter of 1851, as to not creating liabilities beyond fifty thousand dollars over and above the annual revenue of the city, etc., is directory, and not a limitation upon the power of the city to contract debts.

McCracken v. San Francisco, 16 Cal. 591.

18. The charter of the city of San Francisco vested the legislative power of the city in a common council, consisting of a board of aldermen and a board of assistant aldermen, each composed of eight members, and provided that no ordinance or resolution should be passed unless by a majority of all the members elected to each board. On the fifth of December, 1853, the mayor of the city approved of what purported to be an ordinance passed by the common council, providing for the sale of certain slip property of the city. This ordinance is designated in the official book of the city ordinances as ordinance No. 481. At the time the ordinance was presented to the board of assistant aldermen, there was a vacancy in the board, occasioned by the resignation of one of its members, so that there were but seven members in office; of these seven, four members voted for the ordinance, and three against it: Held, that the ordinance not having received a majority of the entire board, of the constituent members, was never passed, but was in fact rejected. Id.

19. The fifth section of the charter refers only to the acts or contracts of the city, and not to liabilities which the law may cast upon her. It was intended to restrain extravagant expenditures of the public moneys; not to justify the detention of the property of her citizens which she may have unlawfully obtained, and where, as in this case, plaintiff claims that the city has got his money without consideration, by mistake, and has appropriated it to municipal purposes, she is bound to refund; because the law—not her contract or permission—renders her liable. Her liability in this respect is independent of the restraining clauses of the charter; it arises from the obligation to do justice, to restore what belongs to others, which rests upon all persons, whether natural or artificial. Id.

20. The restriction contained in the fifth section of the charter can, in any view, only apply to liabilities dependent for their creation upon the volition of the common council, and hence does not include liabilities arising from torts, or trespasses, or mistakes. Id.

20a. Ordinance No. 505 of the city of San Francisco, passed January 10, 1854, by which the mayor and land committee were authorized to pay out of moneys in their hands arising from the sale ordered by ordinance No. 481, the salaries of the members and officers of the police for the months of November and December of the previous year, does not ratify ordinance No.

481 because appropriating the proceeds of the sale. It assumes that ordinance No. 481 was valid, and there is nothing in the appropriation from which an intention to ratify can be implied. If the intention to ratify under some circumstances could be thus implied, the implication would be of no avail in the present case, as the common council were at the time laboring under the mistaken impression that ordinance No. 481 had become law. Ratification, to be effective, must be made with the full knowledge of all facts relating to the act ratified. To entitle any proceedings of the common council to the slightest consideration as evidence of ratification, it must be shown that those proceedings were taken with full knowledge that the ordinance had never passed, and that the sale thereunder was an absolute nullity. Id.

21. The alleged ordinance No. 481 authorized and required the mayor and joint committee on land claims of the city to sell the property specified at public auction to the highest bidder, at such time and place as they might think advisable, after not less than ten days' advertisement. The sale was advertised for December 26, 1853. Within one hour previous to the sale the common council passed an ordinance, designated in the official book as ordinance No. 493, appropriating certain proceeds of the intended sale: Held, that this recognition of the existence of ordinance No. 481, and the appropriation of a portion of the proceeds of the sale, did not constitute an adoption and approval of what had been previously done, or might be subsequently done according to the terms of that ordinance, so as to give validity to the sale which took place. Id.

22. The only authority the common council possessed to sell city property was derived from the thirteenth section of article III of the charter, and this section provides for the sale of property in one way only, to wit, by the passage of laws, which term is synonymous with ordinances, when applied to acts of municipal corporations. This mode of selling the property, having been pointed out by the charter, was restrictive; no other mode could be followed. Id.

23. The only way in which the common council could give validity to a sale, was by passing a law directing it. Ordinance No. 493 does not purport to provide for any sale, but simply assumes that an ordinance ordering a sale had already passed; but this assumption could impart no vitality to the alleged ordinance No. 481. The common council could pass a law or ordinance only in one way, and that was by voting for it. Id.

24. The land directed by the terms of ordinance No. 481 to be sold was set apart and dedicated as a public dock by an ordinance passed in 1852, and while this dedicating ordinance remained in force, no sale could be legally had. In dedicating the land to public use, the common council exercised powers purely of a governmental nature, and not those of a mere property-holder. It was by legislation that the dedication was made, and only by legislation could the public franchise be destroyed. Id.

25. Inasmuch as by article VI, section 6 of the charter of San Francisco of 1851, the common council could authorize a sale of city property at public auction only, ratification of a previous sale is impossible. The object of the ratification is to vest in the previous purchaser the title; but at public auction there would be no certainty of this, for at the auction every one would be at liberty to bid, and the property would fall to the highest bidder. Id.

26. The city of San Francisco is not estopped from denying the sale made under ordinance No. 481, and asserting title to the property sold. The matters relied upon by way of estoppel, with the exception of ordinance No. 493, occurred after the sale, and could not have influenced the plaintiff in his purchase. Ordinance No. 493, directing an appropriation of a portion of the anticipated proceeds, was passed within one hour of the sale, and it nowhere appears that the same was ever brought to the notice of the plaintiff. Nor does it appear that there was any fraud or intention to deceive on the part of the common council. They acted, in passing ordinance No. 493, and in the subsequent use of the proceeds, upon the impression that a valid ordinance authorizing the sale had been passed. Id.

27. The charter of the city of San Francisco of 1851 gave the city power to open streets and alleys, and to alter and improve the same, and this power includes authority to enter into contracts for that purpose, binding upon the city. And this notwithstanding section 2, article V of that charter, providing that the adjacent property shall bear two thirds of the expense of every improvement. This section simply made the property-holders liable to the city for the two thirds, and the remedy of the city was by assessments on the property, and such assessments, when collected, go into the city treasury, to be used as the city sees fit.

Argenti v. San Francisco, 16 Cal. 255.

CONSOLIDATION ACT.

28. The corporation, the city of San Francisco, was not destroyed by the consolidation act, but continued. Its name only was changed, and the change in this respect did not require any alteration in the pleadings or any suggestion of record in an action pending against the city at the time the act was passed.

Frank v. San Francisco, 21 Cal. 668.

29. Where an action was commenced against the city of San Francisco previous to the passage of the consolidation act, but judgment was not recovered until after the passage of the said act: Held, that the judgment was binding against the existing corporation, the city and county of San Francisco. Id.

30. The design and only effect of this section is to exempt the city and county from the liability for injuries which would otherwise attach to it, by reason of the exclusive control of the streets and public highways conferred upon it by other sections of the statute, and to transfer such responsibility to individual officers, agents and employees of the corporation.

Eustace v. Jahns, 38 Cal. 3.

Chambers v. Satterlee, 40 Cal. 497.

32. Under section 90 of the consolidation act, a demand upon the treasury for the monthly salary of an officer of the city and county of San Francisco must be presented for payment properly audited, within one month after such demand shall have become due and payable; otherwise it will be forever barred.

Paxon v. Holt, 40 Cal. 466.

33. It did not require the signature of the persons composing the board of engineers to be attached to the maps and profiles prepared under the statutes 1863-4, to establish the lines and grades of streets in the city and county of San Francisco, in order that they should become valid. Their approval by the board of supervisors was sufficient for that purpose.

Chambers v. Satterlee, 40 Cal. 498.

34. The consolidation act gives the officers named in the fourteenth section two days after the meeting of the board of supervisors in which to file new bonds. The meeting taking place on the ninth of July, the officers had the whole of the tenth and eleventh of July to execute and present their bonds.

Doan v. Scannell, 7 Cal. 393.

35. The defendant being elected sheriff of the county of San Francisco, in September, 1855, on July 26, 1856, and after the consolidation act went into effect, one of the defendant's sureties applied to the county judge to be released from further liability; on the sixth of August the judge declared the office vacant, by reason of the failure of defendant to file new bonds: Held, that the county judge had no jurisdiction, the new law then in force vesting the power of approving the bonds of such officer, in the county judge, auditor, and president of the board of supervisors.

People v. Scannell, 7 Cal. 432.

36. The provisions of section 2 of the act approved March 5, 1864 (stats. 1863-4, p. 139), are sufficient to authorize the harbor commissioners of San Francisco to institute actions in rem, as provided in section 317 of the practice act, and generally to pursue all remedies that a private person could under the same circumstances.

People v. Steamer America, 34 Cal. 676.

37. The provisions of section 11 of said act (stats. 1863-4, p. 144) which provide for the collection of "all tolls, dockage and wharfrage charges authorized and required to be collected, shall be due and collectible exclusively in gold and silver money of the United States," do not come within the provisions of the specific contract act; but as charges upon property to raise money for public purposes, they do come within the principles laid down in Perry v. Washburn, 20 Cal. 350, and are valid. Id.

38. It seems that the act consolidating the city and county of San Francisco is not unconstitutional. People v. Hill, 7 Cal. 97.

39. An account audited against the city of San Francisco, but not paid at the time the consolidation act went into effect, need not again be audited to entitle it to payment.

Knox v. Woods, 8 Cal. 545.

40. The legislature had the right to provide, in the act known as the consolidation act for the government of the city and county of San Francisco, that the owners of lots in said city should keep the streets in front of their lots in repair.

Hart v. Gaven, 12 Cal. 476.

Attorney-general v. Brown, 16 Cal. 441.

42. The provisions of the fourth section of the consolidation act, respecting the pre-existing indebtedness of the city of San Francisco, was not a mere legislative declaration of good faith towards the public creditors, but a requirement imposing upon the board of supervisors the duty of providing for the payment of that indebtedness.

Frank v. San Francisco, 21 Cal. 668.

CORPORATE POWERS, RIGHTS, ETC.

Over its Lands.

43. The act of congress of 1851 vested the title of the ungranted lands within the city limits, in the city of San Francisco, and a sheriff's sale in 1852, under a judgment against the city, entered in September, 1851, passed the title of the city in the purchaser. Welch v. Sullivan, 8 Cal. 165.

44. A sale of the municipal land of the city in January and February, 1852, on an execution issued under a judgment against the city, rendered September 18, 1851, conveyed a legal title to the land, upon which ejectment can be maintained. Id.

45. In cases involving questions of confirmation, a party is not necessarily presumed to know the law. This is a fact to be established, and even admitting the presumption to arise, it is not conclusive as against facts which go to establish ignorance of the law.

Holland v. San Francisco, 7 Cal. 361.

46. The charter of the city of San Francisco gives her the power to convey her property by law, and if an ordinance for this purpose is a law, it must be governed by the same rules of construction as other laws. Id.

47. Hart v. Burnett, 15 Cal. 530, holding, first, that San Francisco was, at the date of the conquest and cession of California, and long prior to that time, a pueblo, entitled to and possessing all the rights which the law conferred upon such municipal organizations; second, that such pueblo had a certain right or title to the lands within its general limits, and that the portions of such lands which had not been set apart or dedicated to common use, or to special purposes, could be granted in lots, by its municipal officers, to private persons in full ownership; third, that the authority to grant such lands was vested in the ayuntamiento, and in the alcaldes, or other officers who, at the time, represented it, or who had succeeded to its "powers and obligations;" fourth, that the official acts of such officers, in the course of their ordinary and accustomed duties, and within the general scope of their powers, as here defined and explained, will be presumed to have been done by lawful authority, affirmed.

Payne v. Treadwell, 16 Cal. 220.

48. Where an assessment is laid upon land in the city of San Francisco, it is not within the province of a court to interfere and order a sale of the land by a decree rendered in an injunction suit, instituted by the owner of land for the purpose of preventing a sale under an ordinance of the city.

Weber v. San Francisco, 1 Cal. 455.

49. The fact that the board of supervisors of San Francisco, by an order, ratified by the legislature, gave the company the privilege of laying pipes along the public streets of that city, does not operate as a restriction upon the right to condemn private lands under the act of 1858, in cases where the purposes of the company require the use of such lands. Heyneman v. Blake, 19 Cal. 579.

50. Where defendant, in September, 1851, on sale under judgment against the city, had purchased her title to a portion of the ground covered by said East street, between Clay and Jackson; and had subsequently purchased the state's interest in the same, these purchases being prior to any acts by the city declaring the street open as a public street: Held, that defendant owns the property as against the city; that her ordinances laying out this street being passed subsequently to defendant's acquisition of the city title, have no effect upon the defendant, because the proper proceedings were not taken to condemn the land to public use.

People v. Kruger, 19 Cal. 411.

51. The city of San Francisco, as successor of the pueblo of that name, had the right to take pueblo lands in the possession of others for public squares without making compensation therefor.

Sawyer v. San Francisco, 50 Cal. 370.

52. The act of 1858, ratifying and confirming ordinances 822 and 845 of the common council of the city of San Francisco, approved of the map of the western addition to said city, with streets and public squares thereon delineated, which was reported by the commissioners appointed by said council, and by said council approved. Id.

53. The decree of the circuit court of the United States confirming to the city of San Francisco four square leagues of pueblo lands, did not confirm to said city land which by executive proceedings had been reserved for public uses by the United States.

Nagle v. Palmer, 50 Cal. 611.

54. The act of congress of July 1, 1870, relinquishing the interest of the United States in certain lands to the city and county of San Francisco, did not impart validity to alcaldes' grants. The only persons who were beneficiaries under said act were those who were in possession of land at the date of the passage of the act, or had been deprived of the possession thereof by the military authorities of the United States. Id.

55. One who was not a beneficiary under the said act can not question the right of the city to convey land, under the provisions of the act, to another. Id.

56. A person who was in the mere naked possession of pueblo land in San Francisco, and who did not hold the same under a grant from the authorities of the pueblo, was not a beneficiary under the decree of the circuit court confirming said lands to the city. McManus v. O'Sullivan, 48 Cal. 7.

57. A person who was in possession of pueblo lands in San Francisco prior to 1861, but who was ousted therefrom, did not become a beneficiary under the act of congress of March 8, 1866, and ordinance No. 800 of said city, and the act of the legislature confirming it, unless he had recovered possession. Id.

58. A lot of land in the harbor of San Francisco, lying within the line of streets as laid down and recognized by the city on its official map, and being in the actual possession of a person who claims to be the owner, can not be taken from him and appropriated to the public use, without paying him a just compensation. Gunter v. Geary, 1 Cal. 462.

59. Where the city of San Francisco, so far as she had any rights in the premises, had by her own voluntary acts parted with them, any attempt on her part to resume them, by depriving the public of the easement, or denying to purchasers of lots the right of way, except on payment of wharfage, etc., was clearly illegal.

Breed v. Cunningham, 2 Cal. 361.

60. The act of March 26, 1851, operated as a grant, by which property-holders along the line of Market street, and the public are entitled to the free enjoyment of the same; and this right or privilege could not be resumed by the state, and was not resumed by the act of April 28, 1851, confirming the contract between the appellant and the sinking fund commissioners. Id.

61. Where lots are sold as fronting on, or bounded by, a certain space, designated in the conveyance as a street, the use of such space as a street, passes, as appurtenant to the grant, and vests in the grantee in common with the public right of way over said street. Such acts on the part of the grantor constitute a dedication of such street, and he can not so sell or dispose of it as to alter or defeat such dedication. Id.

Over its Water Front.

62. The act of April 5, 1850, incorporating the city of San Francisco, did not confer upon the common council of that city the power to create by ordinance a sinking fund to pay the indebtedness of the city, nor did it confer upon said common council the power to convey, by ordinance, the city front or wharves in the harbor to said board.

People v. Broadway Wharf Co., 31 Cal. 33.

63. The conveyance made by the common council of San Francisco, by ordinance of August 23, 1850, to the board of commissioners of the sinking fund, of Broadway wharf, was void for want of power, and the lease of the wharf to Francis Salmon by said board on the thirteenth of February, 1851, was also void for the same reason, as was also the conveyance of said wharf, made by said board of commissioners on the twenty-fourth of May, 1851, to the commissioners of the funded debt, created by the act of May 1, 1851. Id.

64. The charters of San Francisco of 1850 and 1851, by which the power was conferred on the mayor and common council "to erect, repair, and regulate public wharves and docks, and to regulate the erection and repair of private wharves, and to fix the rates of wharfage thereat," did not vest in the city any proprietary interest in the wharves. Id.

65. The act of the first of May, 1851, authorizing the city of San Francisco to "construct wharves at the ends of all the streets which terminate on the bay," etc., and extend the streets six hundred feet into the bay, did not relinquish to the city of San Francisco a proprietary interest in the wharves built on the streets outside the beach and water lot line. Id.

66. In case of purpresture, or encroachment by the erection of a wharf in the bay of San Francisco beyond the city front, the right to recover possession is in the people, and not in the owner of the land adjoining on the city front.

Dana v. Jackson St. Wharf Co., 31 Cal. 118.

67. The owner of a lot upon the water front of San Francisco, as established by statute, below low-water mark, is not a "riparian proprietor" in the sense in which that term is used in the law of tide waters, for the water front of San Francisco is of statutory creation. Id.

68. In case of an increase of land by the accretion of alluvion in the bay on the water front of San Francisco, as established by statute, the owner of the lot adjacent has no right of entry thereon to the exclusion of the state, nor can he maintain ejectment against a stranger. Id.

69. The commissioners appointed under the act of May 18, 1853, to sell land belonging to the state on the water front of San Francisco, had no power to sell any of said land without the "red line map" of the water front, required to be made by the fifth section of the act of March 26, 1851, commonly called the beach and water lot act.

Knight v. Haight, 51 Cal. 169.

70. The deed of May 24, 1851, from the commissioners of the sinking fund to the commissioners of the funded debt of San Francisco, transferred to the latter the title to the tide land on Mission bay, vested in the city of San Francisco by the act of March 26, 1851. Friedman v. Nelson, 53 Cal. 589.

71. Where a deed granted "all that beach and water property lying between Folsom street on the north, ship's channel on the east, the city limits on the south, and Price street on the west, and known on the said map as blocks numbers one (1) to thirty-two (32) inclusive;" Held, that a block of "beach and water property" lying within the exterior boundaries was included, notwithstanding it was numbered thirty-three (33) on the map referred to in the deed. Id.

72. The legal title of the city of San Francisco, in the beach and water lots granted to her for the term of ninety-nine years, by the act of March 25, 1861, vested, by virtue of the deed of the commissioners of the sinking fund, and the act of May 1, 1851, and by the acceptance by the city of the terms of that act, and its consent to the transfer, in the commissioners of the funded debt. Le Roy v. Dunkerly, 54 Cal. 452.

73. In this state, all beneficial estates, whether legal or equitable, are liable to be taken on execution; and, therefore, a purchase under an execution sale of the interest of the city in the beach and water lots, and the sheriff's deed made in pursuance thereof, operated as an assignment of the equitable estate remaining in the city after the legal title vested in the commissioners of the funded debt. Id.

Miscellaneous Provisions.

74. The common council of the city of San Francisco must exercise the functions imposed by their charter, and have no power to delegate them to others.

Smith v. Morse, 2 Cal. 524.

75. The common council of the city of San Francisco has no authority, under the charter of the city, to impose a penalty of one per cent. per day for the non-payment of an assessment.

Weber v. San Francisco, 1 Cal. 455.

76. The act of 1852 authorized the plaintiff to erect a powder magazine in the city of San Francisco, reserving certain rights to the state. The second section provides "that after notice of twenty days in the newspapers of the said city having been given by the superintendent of the magazine of the erecting thereof as provided by this act, no person shall keep in any one house or place within said limits, more than five (afterwards increased to twenty-five) pounds of gunpowder at any one time under penalty of one hundred dollars." The ninth section enacts that the common council of San Francisco shall have power to authorize by ordinance the building of other powder magazines, and to appoint superintendents. The owners of powder may store in either of the magazines created by ordinance or law, paying the fees, etc., allowed, where the same is stored. The city had the right under her charter, prior to the act of 1852, to have a powder magazine, and had exercised the right, and was in the exercise of it when the said act was passed; but had passed no ordinance on the subject after the passage of the act, but continued to exercise the right under her charter: Held, that the act of 1852 did not give to the superintendent of the magazine authorized by it, the exclusive right to store all the powder in the city; that the right existing in the city at the passage of the act was not repealed by it; and that the right of the city to her magazine for the storage of powder was concurrent with that of the grantee in the act.

Harley v. Heyl, 2 Cal. 477.

LIABILITIES UNDER THE CHARTER.

77. The ayuntamiento of San Francisco, in 1850, by an order authorized its alcalde to grant to plaintiff "a quantity of land, in conformity with the survey of the town, as near as possible to the location of" certain other lots which plaintiff was to surrender to the town. The alcalde accordingly conveyed, by deed, to plaintiff, a lot which had been previously granted by the town to one Gerke: Held, that an action for the breach of covenants of warranty in this deed will not lie against the city.

Findla v. San Francisco, 13 Cal. 534.

78. The true meaning of the order is that the alcalde was to grant the city's land only, and neither the town nor its successor is bound for an act done beyond the limit of its authority. Id.

79. The prohibition against contracting debts over a certain amount, contained in the charter, applies to contracts and appropriations, but does not affect liabilities which the law may cast upon the city.

Holland v. San Francisco, 7 Cal. 361.

80. If the city obtain the money of another by mistake, or without authority of law, it is her duty to refund it, not from any contract entered into by her upon the subject, but from the general obligation to do justice which binds all persons, whether natural or artificial. If the city obtain other property which does not belong to her, it is her duty to restore it, or if used by her, to render an equivalent to the true owner, from the like general obligation.

Argenti v. San Francisco, 16 Cal. 255.

81. To fix the liability of the city in respect to money or other property, the money must have gone into her treasury, or been appropriated by her, and the property must have been used by her, or be under her control. Id.

82. In case of services rendered, the acceptance of the services must be evidenced by ordinance to that effect. Their acceptance by the city, and the consequent obligation to pay for them, can not be asserted in any other way. If not originally authorized, no liability can attach upon any ground of implied contract. Id.

83. That doctrine applies to cases where money or other property of a party is received under such circumstances that the general law, independent of express contract, imposes upon the city the obligation to do justice with respect to the same. Id.

84. In these cases, the city does not make any promise, but the law implies one, and it is no answer to a claim resting upon such implied contract, to say no ordinance has been passed, or that the liability of the city is void when it exceeds the limitation of fifty thousand dollars prescribed by the charter. Id.

85. Purchasers at the sales of the city slip property in San Francisco, in December, 1853, under alleged ordinance No. 481, acquired no title or claim of title by their bids and the payment of their money. The city obtained the money without consideration and used it, and is legally bound to refund it, unless some subsequent matter has released her from liability.

Gorgan v. San Francisco, 18 Cal. 500.

86. The several cases which have been before this court in relation to the liability of the city of San Francisco to the parties who bid off the city slip property at the attempted sale by the city authorities in December, 1853, under an alleged ordinance, designated as ordinance 481, commented upon, and held to have decided and settled the following points: First, that the ordinance, so called, was never passed, and was, therefore a nullity; second, that the sale made in pursuance of it was, therefore, invalid, and passed no title to the bidders; third, that the bidders were entitled to recover back from the city the purchase money paid by them, and received and appropriated by the city authorities; fourth, that they were not precluded from a recovery, either, first, by reason of any want of privity between themselves and the city; or, second, by the alleged subsequent adoption by the city authorities of the ordinance directing the sale; or, third, by reason of a subsequent alleged ratification of the sale by an appropriation of the proceeds; or, fourth, by the clause in the city charter restraining the corporation from contracting liabilities beyond the sum of fifty thousand dollars; or, fifth, by the act of the legislature of 1858, authorizing the city treasurer to execute deeds to the purchasers on certain conditions.

Pimental v. San Francisco, 21 Cal. 351.

87. The C. H. and R. association made application to the board of supervisors of San Francisco for a parcel of the outside lands, under the ordinances of the city and county and statutes of the state, applicable to the disposition of such lands; caused its claim to be delineated on the "outside land map," paid the assessments and taxes thereon, and proved its right and possession to the satisfaction of the board. A portion of the land claimed was taken for a park, under the ordinances and statutes aforesaid. The plaintiffs had themselves previously conveyed to the association: Held, that plaintiffs, who now claim an interest in the land awarded to the C. H. and R. A., but who made no application to the supervisors, nor notified the board of their claim, who did not have their claim delineated on the map, nor pay any assessments or taxes, can not maintain an action against the city and county of San Francisco for a part of the assessed value of the lands so taken for the park. Clark v. San Francisco, 53 Cal. 306.

88. The provisions of the statute under which the fire department of San Francisco is organized, do not create a liability on the part of the city for acts of negligence committed by the members of its fire department while engaged in duties pertaining to the department.

Howard v. San Francisco, 51 Cal. 52.

OFFICERS — POWERS, RIGHTS, DUTIES, ETC.

Election of.

89. The act to reincorporate the city of San Francisco, passed the fifteenth of April, 1851, provides that the first election for city officers should be held on the fourth Monday of April, 1851; and thereafter annually at the general election for state officers. The general election was appointed by law to be held on the first Monday in September of each year. At the first election for city officers, held on the fourth Monday of April, as above directed, the respondent was elected mayor of the city, was qualified, and was in the exercise of the functions of his office. At the general election held on the first Monday in September following, the relator received one thousand and one hundred votes for mayor (the whole number given), was qualified, and claimed the office of the respondent on the twenty-fourth of the same month. No notice of the latter election was given, or other measures pursued by the city council, under the fourth section of the second article of the charter. The respondent refused to surrender the office, and the relator filed this bill asserting his right to it, etc.: Held, that the election of the relator was valid, and that the means of bringing about the election and the irregularities therein should be disregarded.

People v. Brenham, 3 Cal. 477.

89a. Under the sixth section of the San Francisco consolidation act of 1856, it was intended that a superintendent of the public streets and highways of that city and county should be elected at the general election in the fall of that year; and the person then elected held his office for the full term of two years.

People v. Hossefross, 17 Cal. 137.

90. The act of April 2, 1866 (acts 1865-6, p. 719), relative to elections and officers in San Francisco, applies only to officials holding office at the time of its passage, and was not intended to supply the rule applicable to the filling of vacancies, should any occur, after the expiration of the terms of such incumbents. Tillson v. Ford, 53 Cal. 701.

91. The first chapter of title 2, part 4 of the political code, which treats of "the board of supervisors," does not apply to the city and county of San Francisco. Id.

92. The municipal elections and terms of municipal officers in San Francisco are provided for in the consolidation act. Id.

93. Where a vacancy occurs in a municipal office in San Francisco by the death of the incumbent, a person elected by the board of supervisors to fill the vacancy is entitled to the office only until his successor is elected by the people. Id.

94. The act of May 17, 1861, to fix the fees of officers in the city and county of San Francisco, is amendatory of, and supplemental to, the act of April 19, 1856, incorporating said city and county, and is continued in force by the political code.

Adams v. San Francisco, 50 Cal. 117.

95. Under the supplementary act of April 3, 1876, relating to the construction of the new city hall in San Francisco, and directing the payment of certain outstanding warrants, out of a fund arising from the sale of bonds referred to in the act, it was the duty of the treasurer to pay the interest as well as the principal of said warrants so long as there was any money in the fund.

Jordan v. Hubert, 54 Cal. 260.

96. The statute providing for the payment of a salary to the sheriff of the city and county of San Francisco is continued in force by the political code.

Adams v. San Francisco, 50 Cal. 117.

97. The fire department of San Francisco is not a mere voluntary association, but is a branch of the municipal government of that city.

Whitney v. Fire Dept., 14 Cal. 479.

98. The police judge of the city and county of San Francisco, who is appointed to fill a vacancy, holds the office for the same term his predecessor would have held it if no vacancy had occurred. His term does not expire when his successor is elected and qualified, but continues until the first day of January following. People v. Rix, 33 Cal. 503.

99. The street commissioner of the city of San Francisco is empowered to use the necessary force to prevent an injury to the public streets of the city, and no action can be sustained against him, or those who act under his orders, for using such force.

Clark v. McCarthy, 1 Cal. 453.

100. The qualification of a person elected to the office of street commissioner must be made before a proper officer, and can not be made before the mayor of the city, who has no power to administer the oath of office.

Payne v. San Francisco, 3 Cal. 122.

101. A joint resolution of the city council, approved by the mayor, recognizing a party as street commissioner, will not enable him to recover for services rendered in that capacity, upon a quantum meruit. Id.

102. To entitle a party to recover as street commissioner of San Francisco, he must show, not only that he had discharged his duties, but, first, that he had been lawfully elected; second, had qualified himself to hold the office, by taking the oath and filing the bond, at the time and in the manner required by law. Id.

Board of Supervisors.

103. Section 95 of the consolidation act, with reference to auditing claims, does not apply to judgments recovered upon the pre-existing indebtedness of the city.

Frank v. San Francisco, 21 Cal. 668.

104. The restrictive clauses of that section and of other sections of the act must be read in connection with the fourth section, and receive such a construction that the provisions of all may stand. Id.

105. There being no discretion as to the duty to be performed, there is none as to the use of the means required in performing it. If the means require the passage of an ordinance, the supervisors have no discretion to refuse to pass the ordinance. They have not in such case the right to vote at their option either for or against the ordinance. Id.

106. In imposing upon the supervisors the duty of providing for the payment of the city indebtedness, the legislature authorized them to take all the ordinary measures essential to its complete performance. The duty carries with it the means. The board can appropriate from the revenues or levy a tax, and the adjusting of the details is a mere matter of administration, which can be had under the direction of any of the officers of the corporation designated for that purpose. Id.

107. The board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco have authority, and it is their duty to provide for the payment of judgments recovered against the city of San Francisco. They have no discretion except between two courses of procedure. They must either appropriate for this purpose money already in the treasury, or they must raise the money by taxation. Id.

108. Mandamus is the appropriate remedy to enforce the performance of this duty by the board of supervisors. Id.

109. The act of 1851, creating the board of supervisors of San Francisco county, and authorizing the board "to sue and defend on behalf of the county," did not authorize the board to bring suits on behalf of the county in its own name; nor did it render the board liable to be sued directly for a claim against the county.

Hastings v. San Francisco, 18 Cal. 49.

110. Liability to suit has no necessary connection with ability to sue. Boards of supervisors and bodies like them, without any legislative provision, by general law, are subject, with certain exceptions, to mandamus to enforce the performance of the duties devolved upon them, and to the writ of certiorari, for the review of their acts when partaking of a judicial character, and in other ways are within the control of judicial proceedings. Id.

111. Where the board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco at a special meeting pass a resolution authorizing Burr, as president of the board, to redeem certain city property sold at sheriff's sale, and the resolution does not authorize the expenditure of any money on the part of the city and county, and was not published, with ayes and noes, in a newspaper before final action, according to the sixty-sixth section of the consolidation act of 1856: Held, that such resolution was sufficient authority to the president to make the redemption on the part of the city and county, even though the money for that purpose came from private hands. Seale v. Doane, 17 Cal. 476.

Commissioners of Funded Debt.

112. The act of the city of San Francisco creating the board of sinking fund commissioners, and the deed executed to them of all the property of the city, is void for want of power in the city, and because said deed is within the statute of frauds.

Smith v. Morse, 2 Cal. 524.

113. The board of commissioners of the old sinking fund of 1850, created by an ordinance of the city of San Francisco, had no power to sell the real estate of the city, the ordinance being void. But this decision has no application to the board of commissioners of the funded debt, organized after the dissolution of the first board of the sinking fund commissioners.

Heydenfeldt v. Hitchcock, 15 Cal. 514.

114. The sales of land made by the commissioners of the sinking fund of San Francisco on the twenty-fifth day of January, 1851, were void for want of power in the commissioners. Ellis v. Eastman, 32 Cal. 447.

115. The act of 1851, creating the board of fund commissioners of San Francisco, was a law authorizing a contract between the city and her creditors, who surrendered the old indebtedness and took a new security, bearing a different rate of interest. This transaction was in the nature of a new contract, and the law authorizing it entered into and became part thereof, and can not be altered or amended so as to impair or destroy the rights of parties under the contract.

People v. Woods, 7 Cal. 579.

116. The act of 1851 is a law as well as a contract. And those provisions, which are mere modes of giving effect to the substantial purposes of the act may be revised and altered. The constitution forbids impairing the obligation of contracts, but does not inhibit legislation respecting them.

Thornton v. Hooper, 14 Cal. 9.

117. If, under the act, a large surplus accumulates, it may be applied to the purchase of bonds, even if no provision exist in the act for payment before the bonds are due. Id.

118. The act of May 1, 1851, providing for the funding of the floating debt of the city of San Francisco, authorized a contract between the city and her creditors, and the contract having been executed, its obligation can not be impaired by any subsequent modification or repeal of the act.

Babcock v. Middleton, 20 Cal. 643.

119. The provisions of the act, as such, are mere legislative modes to give effect to the substantial purposes of the act; may be altered, provided the alteration does not affect the security of the creditors, who have accepted the bonds of the city under the act. Id.

120. The object of the provision of the act requiring a public sale of the property conveyed to the commissioners of the funded debt, when a sale is made, is to secure a fair price from the purchasers. If this object can be accomplished by a sale in any other mode, the obligation of the contract is not impaired by legislation authorizing such other mode. Id.

121. The city of San Francisco, under the charter of 1851, had the power, by resolution of the two boards of aldermen, to reserve the lots in question from sale and keep them for school purposes, subject only to the superior title of the commissioners of the funded debt; and the fourth section of the act of 1858, validating the Van Ness ordinance, so far as it mentions property reserved and set apart for school sites, was intended to embrace such property as was reserved and set apart by resolution of the two boards.

Board of Education v. Fowler, 19 Cal. 11.

122. The commissioners of the funded debt of the city of San Francisco are the exclusive judges of the necessity for the sale or lease of the property of the city held by them in trust, until the trust is finally closed, and their action can not be interfered with, nor their discretion be controlled by the city, or its assignee, except on the ground of fraud, or a gross abuse of discretion by the trustees.

Ellis v. Commissioners, 38 Cal. 629.

123. If it appear from the entire instrument that the grantors in the deed intended to execute the same in their official capacity as "commissioners of the sinking fund of the city of San Francisco," though attaching thereto their private seals and signatures only, it comes within the purview of the statute of March 25, 1858 (stats. 1858, p. 84), which was intended to validate such sales and conveyances of the commissioners.

Ellis v. Eastman, 38 Cal. 195.

124. The provisions of the consolidation act of 1856, requiring that the sinking fund created by the act of 1851 should be first exhausted by the redemption of certificates of stock, before the treasurer should make payment annually of the sum of fifty thousand dollars set apart by the first act for the payment of interest and for the sinking fund, are unconstitutional.

People v. Woods, 7 Cal. 579.

Board of Education v. Fowler, 19 Cal. 11.

126. The execution by the city of San Francisco of the bonds authorized by the funding act of May 1, 1851, in pursuance of and to give effect to the act, amounts to an acceptance by the corporation of the act of the legislature in all its parts; and this would be sufficient to give validity to the entire act, if, by force of the legislative will alone, the act, as a conveyance of the property of the city, would not be effectual. Id.

127. The purpose and effect of the act in this aspect of it, that is, as a conveyance or the authority for a conveyance of this city property, are that it is a conveyance to the commissioners of this property upon certain express trusts, to be used only for such trusts; and the title to return to the city upon the fulfillment of the trusts. If the debts were paid by the city, or the creditors released their claims, the property would become again the property of the city in full ownership. The legal title, as in other cases of trust deeds for the security of debt, was in the grantee; the equity of redemption, and the residuum after the satisfaction of the trust debts, in the city. The city could still sell or dispose of this residuary interest, could take care of and preserve the estate—perhaps could go in possession of it, subject only to the superior right of the commissioners, so long as the debts were unpaid. Id.

128. People v. Bond, 10 Cal. 563, holding the funding act of 1851 to be a contract, and therefore that the legislature could not withdraw the property conveyed in the deed to the commissioners of the funded debt from the creditors of the city taking bonds under the act, affirmed. Id.

129. The act of 1858, amendatory of the act of May 1, 1851, authorizing the "funding of the floating debt of the city of San Francisco, and to provide for the payment of the same," is constitutional. The amendment that the commissioners may purchase stock at five per cent. above par does not affect injuriously the creditors under the act of 1851. Thornton v. Hooper, 14 Cal. 9.

130. By act of April 2, 1866, the commissioners of the funded debt were authorized, in certain cases, with the consent of the board of supervisors, to make conveyances of the trust lands; and they executed a deed to the plaintiffs, but whether with the consent of the supervisors, the record did not show: Held, first, that even if the deed was unauthorized by the trusts as originally defined in the act of May 1, 1851, or as modified by that of April 2, 1866, it operated to transfer to the grantees the legal estate, and the defendants, being mere intruders, could not assert the breach of trust as a defense to an action at law to recover the land; and, second, that the consent of the city was unnecessary, as the plaintiff had, under the sheriff's deed, succeeded to all the rights of the city, including the right to consent to the conveyance.

Le Roy v. Dunkerly, 54 Cal. 452.

131. A conveyance of the city's interest in tide lands by a majority of the commissioners of the funded debt, and held to be ineffectual by the decision in Leonard v. Darlington, 6 Cal. 123, for the reason that two of the five commissioners did not sign the deed, is cured by the act of April 14, 1857, ratifying and confirming such conveyance. Friedman v. Nelson, 50 Cal. 589.

132. The commissioners of the funded debt are not successors in interest, judgment debtors, or judgment creditors, and therefore not redemptioners, nor are they so in their individual capacity of citizens and taxpayers. Thorne v. San Francisco, 4 Cal. 127.

133. The commissioners of the funded debt of San Francisco are not officers within the meaning of article XI, section 7, of the constitution, and the term during which the commissioners are authorized to act is not limited to four years.

People v. Middleton, 28 Cal. 603.

134. The commissioners of the funded debt of the city of San Francisco are not private agents; they are public officers, clothed with important trusts, for the due administration of which they have executed bonds, with security.

San Francisco v. Commissioners, 10 Cal. 585.

135. The rule which governs in this case and alone entitles the parties to intervene to restrain the proceedings, or control the action of the trustees, is that the fund is in danger of being wasted or impaired; or, that a liability will be incurred, or an injury done by threatened or probable malfeasance, for which the agents' bond or personal responsibility would afford no probable or adequate redress. Until this is shown no injunction can issue to prevent them as such commissioners from receiving the trust fund. Id.

136. The act of April 14, 1862, authorizing the commissioners of the funded debt to compromise and settle certain claims made to real estate held by them, and to convey such real estate, is not unconstitutional. Its only object is to provide a new mode for the disposition of those portions of the property which can not be advantageously disposed of at public sale, in consequence of existing doubts as to the title of the commissioners. Babcock v. Middleton, 20 Cal. 643.

137. The commissioners of the funded debt of the city of San Francisco have power, under the twelfth section of the act of May 1, 1851, authorizing them to sell the realty conveyed to them by the commissioners of the sinking fund, created by ordinance of said city, to receive the "three per cent. scrip" of the city instead of cash on the sale, it being conceded that the assets of the city were sufficient to pay all debts.

Davis v. Middleton, 14 Cal. 540.

138. The fourteenth section of article III of the act of April 15, 1851, incorporating San Francisco, taken in connection with the act of May 1, 1851, funding the floating debt of said city, did not give the commissioners of the funded debt of said city any control over or interest in the public wharves in the streets extending beyond the water front, or their revenues.

People v. Broadway W. Co., 31 Cal. 33.

139. The lease of Broadway wharf in San Francisco, made by the commissioners of the funded debt of San Francisco on the thirty-first of January, 1861, was not valid, and did not confer upon the lessees any right to the same as against the state. Id.

140. The act of May 1, 1851, to fund the floating debt of San Francisco, and creating a board of commissioners of the funded debt, did not vest in said board the title to any wharf in San Francisco which belonged to the state. Id.

141. Without express authority, neither the mayor nor the commissioners of the funded debt of San Francisco, nor any or either of them, by virtue of their offices or otherwise, are authorized to redeem, under the act of April 29, 1851, lands of the city sold under executions against her; neither can the city attorney ratify their act of redemption by plea, after suit brought.

Thorne v. San Francisco, 4 Cal. 127.

142. The authority of the board of commissioners, under the act of May 1, 1855, relative to a sale of the state's interest in the water-line front of the city of San Francisco, as defined by the act of March 26, 1851, is limited to the property within the boundaries defined by the act; and a sale by them of lots not within those boundaries is a nullity, and can not constitute cloud of title. Hence an injunction against such sale will not lie. Kisling v. Johnson, 13 Cal. 56.

Miscellaneous Decisions.

143. The board of education of the city and county of San Francisco is a legal body, capable of suing for lots conveyed to them by the fund commissioners.

Board of Education v. Fowler, 19 Cal. 11.

144. The collector of taxes for the city and county of San Francisco is not entitled to any commissions or salary for the collection of that portion of the revenues assessed and collected for the use of said city and county. People v. San Francisco, 28 Cal. 429.

145. The clerk of the city and county of San Francisco is not in default for not countersigning the bonds required to be issued by the act of 1863, authorizing said city to subscribe to the capital stock of the Central Pacific railroad of California, until the board of supervisors direct him to countersign the same or afford him an opportunity to do so in their presence, and he refuses.

People v. San Francisco, 27 Cal. 635.

146. The act of 1864, entitled "an act concerning the salary and fees of the coroner of the city and county of San Francisco," reduces the salary of the coroner of said city and county from four thousand to two thousand dollars per annum. The fifth section provides that "this act shall not affect the salary of the present incumbent during the term for which he is elected." Held, that the fifth section did not apply to a successor of the then incumbent, appointed after his death to fill his unexpired term.

People v. Hale, 27 Cal. 148.

147. Under the act of April 26, 1858, entitled "an act to authorize the treasurer of the city and county of San Francisco to execute certain deeds and cancel certain claims," and providing that the treasurer shall receive from purchasers at the sale of the city slip property in December, 1853, any sum remaining unpaid by them respectively for the property sold under ordinance No. 481, payable in—among other items—"any genuine city controller's warrants," issued on or after May 1, 1851, the treasurer had no authority to receive any controller's warrants except such as represented a genuine indebtedness of the city. It was not sufficient that the warrants were genuine in the sense that the signatures of the officers attached to them were not forged; but they must have been issued by authority of the city and have been a valid obligation against the city.

Grogan v. San Francisco, 18 Cal. 590.

148. Where the treasurer received in payment of sums remaining unpaid upon the sales of December, 1853, controller's warrants not representing any legal or equitable indebtedness of the city, and executed a deed under the act of 1858, which was accepted by the purchaser, the treasurer acted without authority, and his deed is inoperative to pass any interest in the property; the title remains in the city, and the purchaser may recover from her the money paid upon the alleged sale in December, 1853. Id.

149. Deeds executed by the treasurer of the city and county of San Francisco in accordance with the act of April 26, 1858, above named, do not pass to the purchasers the title of the city to the slip property sold in December, 1853, under ordinance No. 481, for the reason that the city has never accepted that act; and without such acceptance the legislature could not divest the estate of the city acquired by the legislative grant under the water lot act of 1851. Id.

150. There is no difference, in the inviolability of a contract, between a grant of property to an individual and a like grant to a municipal corporation. So far as municipal corporations are invested with subordinate legislative powers, for local purposes, they are mere instrumentalities of the state for the convenient administration of the government, and their powers are under the entire control of the legislature; they may be qualified, enlarged, restricted, or withdrawn at its discretion. But when they are empowered to take and hold private property for municipal uses, such property is invested with the security of other private rights. Id.

151. The board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco have no control over the treasurer, in the payment of the interest and principal of the sinking fund of that city. The allowance or disallowance, auditing or refusing to audit, of the board, are alike immaterial.

People v. Supervisors, 12 Cal. 300.

152. A public officer, who stands in the relation of agent of the government or of the public, is not personally liable upon contracts made by him as such officer and within the scope of his legitimate duties; but the public administrator of the county of San Francisco is not a public officer within the meaning of the rule, and is personally liable upon a contract made in relation to estates upon which he administers, unless the idea of such personal liability be excluded by the contract.

Dwinelle v. Henriquez, 1 Cal. 387.

153. The act of March 4, 1870, requiring the city and county of San Francisco to advance out of its treasury a sufficient sum to pay for the services of the commissioners and certain others employed on the proposed extension of Montgomery and Connecticut streets (stats. 1869-70, p. 146): Held, to be clearly constitutional.

Sinton v. Ashbury, 41 Cal. 525.

154. The statute of April 25, 1863, conferring authority upon the supervisors of San Francisco "to make all regulations which may be necessary or expedient for the preservation of the public health" (stats. 1863, p. 540), was within the constitutional power of the legislature to enact; and under it the supervisors had authority to enact the ordinance (No. 730) against feeding cows on still slopes, and vending the milk of cows so fed.

Johnson v. Simonton, 43 Cal. 242.

155. Lands, the title to which is vested in the state under the act of congress donating the swamp lands to the states, are not liable to the assessment in the city and county of San Francisco, levied under the order of the board of supervisors called order 800, which assessment was made to raise a fund to pay the possessors of outside lands, dedicated to public use, the value of the lands so dedicated.

Mason v. Austin, 46 Cal. 385.

156. By the provisions of the act of the twenty-third of April, 1858, authorizing George Ensign and others, owners of the Spring Valley water works, to lay down water pipes in the public streets of the city and county of San Francisco, the Spring Valley water works are not required to supply said city and county with water for municipal purposes, free of charge, other than for the extinguishment of fires.

San Francisco v. S. V. W. W., 39 Cal. 473.

157. The third section of the act of April 23, 1858, imposes upon the Spring Valley water works the obligation to furnish, free of charge, a pro rata supply of water for municipal purposes other than the extinguishment of fires, in the event of water being introduced by some other person or persons, as provided by said section. SAN JOSE.

1. Under the charter of the city of San Jose, an ordinance abolishing the office of street commissioner, and substituting fees instead thereof, is legal and binding on the officer. Wilson v. San Jose, 7 Cal. 275.

2. An agreement made between the municipal authorities of San Jose on the one part, and the purchasers of the pueblo land at a judicial sale made under a decree foreclosing a mortgage executed by the municipality on those lands on the other part, confirming unto said purchasers all the rights and interests in such lands which they acquired by their purchase at the sheriff's sale, and releasing unto them all the right and title which the city then had, or might afterwards have therein, was void, and conferred upon said purchasers no new right.

Branham v. San Jose, 24 Cal. 585.

3. The mayor and common council of the city of San Jose have no power to enter into a contract by which the city becomes obliged to pay an attorney at a future time a sum of money, if he succeeds in placing the city in possession of certain real estate, unless there is money in the treasury at the time to pay the same, after paying the expenses of the city government and all other demands legally due.

Wallace v. San Jose, 20 Cal. 180.

4. The mayor and common council of San Jose have no authority to bind the city by the creation of a debt to arise in future, unless there is money in the treasury at the time to pay the same, after paying the expenses of the government and all other demands legally due. Id.

5. In a suit against the mayor and common council of the city of San Jose on a contract creating a debt, the defendant may prove that at the time the contract was made there was no money in the city treasury except what had been appropriated to pay current expenses of the city government and its legal indebtedness. Id.

6. The mayor and common council of the city of San Jose can sue in the corporate name for the recovery of such real property as belongs to the city. Id.

SCIRE FACIAS.

1. The writ of scire facias is a remedy unknown to our practice, and can not be employed for the revival or enforcement of a judgment. Hunniston v. Smith, 21 Cal. 129.

SEAL.

1. IMPRESSION OF, IN CIVIL PRACTICE.
6. IMPORTS CONSIDERATION.
9. MISCELLANEOUS DECISIONS.

IMPRESSION OF IN CIVIL PRACTICE.

1. An impression upon paper constitutes a good seal, and this may be made as well by pen as by a stamp; therefore, a scroll, with the word seal written within it, or with the initials L. S., is sufficient.

Hastings v. Vaughn, 5 Cal. 315.

2. A seal is sufficient, where the impression is made upon the paper only, and not upon wax. Connolly v. Goodwin, 5 Cal. 220.

3. No seal was requisite under the civil law. Any instrument which contained the names of the parties, a designation or description of the property sold, the date of the transfer, and the price paid, was sufficient to pass the title.

Stanley v. Green, 12 Cal. 148.

4. Where no words appear in the body of an instrument expressive of the intent to make it a sealed instrument, it will not be such, even though the characters [L. S.] are added to the signature.

McDonald v. Bear R. Co., 13 Cal. 220.

5. Where the transcript on appeal contains what purports to be a copy of a certificate of acknowledgment, made by a deputy county clerk, the attesting clause of which recites that the seal of court is thereto affixed, and in the margin opposite is the word "seal" embraced in brackets, it will be presumed, nothing appearing to the contrary, that the seal affixed to the original instrument is of the court of which the attesting officer was clerk.

Touchard v. Crow, 20 Cal. 150.

IMPORTS CONSIDERATION.

6. As to instruments under seal generally, the American rule seems to be that the consideration clause in a deed can be explained by parol proof, at least where the consideration proven is of the same species as that mentioned in the instrument.

Bennett v. Solomon, 6 Cal. 134.

7. The law imports a consideration to a sealed instrument from its seal. At common law a want of consideration could not be pleaded to a suit on a sealed instrument, the presumption of a consideration being absolute and conclusive. The statute of this state has not altered the presumption of a consideration which still accompanies the instrument, but only modified the rule so far as to allow it to be rebutted in the answer.

McCarty v. Beach, 10 Cal. 461.

8. The old and unmeaning distinction between sealed and unsealed instruments is done away with by our statute, and the consideration of a sealed bond may be impeached by the obligor, in the same manner as a promissory note by the maker.

Comstock v. Breed, 12 Cal. 286.

MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS.

9. A certified copy of a deed from the county recorder's office, contained in the margin of the acknowledgment taken before a notary, and in the place where his seal is usually found, the words "no seal" thus: [No Seal], the conclusion of the acknowledgment being, "In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed my official seal, the day and year," etc. The court below ruled out the copy of the deed as evidence, on the ground that the acknowledgment did not have the notary's seal: Heid, that the court erred; that the words "no seal," instead of implying that there was no seal affixed, were a mere note by the recorder of the place of the notarial seal, which he probably had no means of copying.

Jones v. Martin, 16 Cal. 165.

10. A recorder, in certifying to copies of deeds from his office, need not transcribe the notarial seal to the acknowledgment, the certificate of acknowledgment in this case stating that the notary did affix his seal. Id.

11. The deed to plaintiff of the land bought being signed by the mayor of the city and sealed with the corporate seal, the mayor being the legal custodian of the seal, and it being affixed by his authority—is sufficient to entitle the deed to be read in evidence, and a party relying upon it need not go behind the seal for the purpose of showing authority for its execution: the seal is prima facie evidence that it was affixed by proper authority, and the deed is prima facie sufficient to pass the title.

McCracken v. San Francisco, 16 Cal. 638.

12. We know of no authority which holds that a conveyance of interest in land must necessarily be under seal, and if it were so at common law it does not follow that it is so required by our statute.

Ingoldsby v. Juan, 12 Cal. 577.

13. The difference between instruments sealed and unsealed is, at this day, a mere unmeaning and arbitrary distinction made by technical law, unsustained by reason. By the common law the equitable title to realty may be conveyed by instrument not under seal, if otherwise sufficient; and this equitable title, accompanied by possession, is sufficient under our system to give the right of possession. Ortman v. Dixon, 13 Cal. 33.

14. Under our system probably an action can be maintained upon any title, legal or equitable, or upon an instrument, sealed or unsealed, which entitles plaintiff to the possession of the property in dispute as against the defendant. Id.

15. In instruments not under seal, or not required to be executed with any particular formality, it is not important in what form the obligation of the party executing as agent or principal is expressed, if from the whole instrument the true character of it can be gathered.

Haskell v. Cornish, 13 Cal. 47.

16. If, as contended in this case, a judgment by default is void, because of the absence of the seal of the district court to the summons issued in the action in which the judgment was entered, or because of a defect in the certificate of the sheriff of the service of summons and copy of complaint, or because of irregularities of the clerk in entering the judgment, the district court can quash the execution issued on such judgment, and injunction to restrain the enforcement thereof does not lie.

Logan v. Hillegass, 16 Cal. 200.

17. The omission in the record of a deed to make a copy of the seal, or some mark to indicate the seal, does not vitiate the record. It is sufficient if it appear from the record that the instrument copied is under seal; as, for instance, when the deed purports to be under seal and to be signed, sealed, and delivered in the presence of the notary before whom it is acknowledged.

Smith v. Dall, 13 Cal. 510.

18. The execution of an appeal bond, the delivery of it to the clerk, filing it among the papers with the affidavit, and the actual suspension of proceedings, is prima facie as sufficient proof of delivery, if delivery is essential, as if the instrument were sealed.

Dore v. Covey, 13 Cal. 502.

19. A certificate of acknowledgment to a deed, with the private seal of the notary, dated September 23, 1852, is good under the statute then in force.

Stark v. Barrett, 15 Cal. 363.

20. The Mexican system knew nothing of the common law doctrine of seals. A power of attorney executed while those laws were in force is therefore good without a seal.

Posten v. Rasette, 5 Cal. 467.

21. A release of one joint debtor is a release of the others, but it must be a technical release under seal.

Armstrong v. Hayward, 6 Cal. 183.

22. There is no particular sanctity about a sealed instrument which will estop a party from alleging fraud in the execution or in the obtaining of it; on the contrary, fraud is a legitimate defense at all times and in all proceedings, at least under our system.

Hopkins v. Beard, 6 Cal. 664.

23. It is no objection to a bill of sale for a mining claim that it is not under seal, whatever may be the effect of it in evidence.

Jackson v. Feather R. W. Co., 14 Cal. 22.

24. A bill of sale not under seal is insufficient to convey a mining claim.

McCarron v. O'Connell, 7 Cal. 152.

Clark v. McElvy, 11 Id. 154.

25. It is not necessary that the assignment of a judgment should be under seal.

Mitchell v. Hackett, 25 Cal. 538.

26. If there is a defect in an official bond by the failure of the principal to place a seal opposite his name, the defect will not defeat a recovery thereon as against the sureties if the defect is suggested in the complaint.

Sacramento Co. v. Bird, 31 Cal. 66.

27. The record of a mortgage not under seal does not give constructive notice of its contents, and a subsequent purchaser, unless he has actual notice of such mortgage, is not affected by it. Racouillat v. Rene, 32 Cal. 450.

28. Admitted, for the purposes of this decision, that a corporation may adopt the private seal of the several trustees or any one of them as its seal for the occasion.

1. A sheriff is a ministerial or executive officer solely, and there is no constitutional prohibition against his exercising the duties of tax collector, where the law consolidating the two offices was passed prior to his election. Merrill v. Gorham, 6 Cal. 41.

2. The sheriff is not a judicial officer. And, though the offices of sheriff and tax collector are distinct by the constitution, yet they may be united in the same hands.

Attorney-general v. Squires, 14 Cal. 12.

3. The offices of sheriff and tax collector, although held by the same person, are separate and distinct offices.

People v. Ross, 38 Cal. 76.

4. In the absence of a statute to the contrary, a person holding two separate offices must give two separate official bonds. Id.

5. Where a sheriff, on ascertaining that property which has been attached is exempt from execution, refuses to release it without an undertaking, he exceeds his authority and violates his duty.

Servanti v. Lusk, 43 Cal. 238.

6. Though the appointment of a sheriff by a county judge was void, yet the acts of such sheriff, as a de facto officer, are good.

People v. Roberts, 6 Cal. 214.

7. The sheriff and his deputy are one person in law, so far as to make the former responsible for the acts of the latter, but not so far as to require of the sheriff impossibilities or to impose unconscionable exactions.

Whitney v. Butterfield, 13 Cal. 335.

8. A deputy sheriff who seizes property under an attachment, is not authorized, by virtue of his office, to bind the sheriff by contract for the payment of a keeper to take charge of the property so attached. Special authority for this purpose must be shown.

Krum v. King, 12 Cal. 413.

9. A deputy sheriff may, after the expiration of the term of office of his principal and in the absence of the latter from the state, execute a deed to the purchaser at a judicial sale, made by the sheriff while in office. The authority of the deputy is not impaired by the act of 1858, allowing the deed in such cases to be executed by the succeeding sheriff.

Mills v. Tukey, 22 Cal. 373.

10. Strictly speaking, there can be no vacancy in the office of sheriff, caused by the death, removal or resignation of the incumbent; for upon the happening of such an event the coroner, by operation of law, becomes sheriff. People v. Phoenix, 6 Cal. 92.

11. The coroner only holds the office of sheriff ex officio, until the appointment of a new sheriff by the board of supervisors. Id.

POWERS AND DUTIES OF.

In General.

12. The duties of sheriff, as such, are more or less connected with the administration of justice; they have no relation to the collection of the revenue.

People v. Edwards, 9 Cal. 286.

13. Where an attachment was issued against the property of a debtor, and the sheriff had executed the same, and was ordered to make the amount due the creditor out of the goods, chattels and property of the debtor: Held, that the sheriff could not maintain an action in his own name to recover a sum owing to the attachment debtor by a third person, for goods sold and delivered. Sublette v. Melhado, 1 Cal. 104.

14. A sheriff, under his general powers, can not take anything but legal currency in satisfaction of an execution, and where he takes a note, indorses it on the execution and then returns it satisfied, the return is not conclusive, and, perhaps, not prima facie evidence of satisfaction, unless it shows some authority for receiving the note.

Mitchell v. Hackett, 14 Cal. 661.

15. No order of court is required to authorize a sale by the officer.

Low v. Henry, 9 Cal. 552.

16. If the sheriff, before a sale of real estate under execution, neglects to give the proper notice, the statute gives an adequate remedy against the officer; there is not sufficient cause to set aside or avoid the sale.

Smith v. Randall, 6 Cal. 47.

17. Although the officer neglects to give the notice the sale shall not be void. Id.

18. It is not the duty of a sheriff, at the expiration of his term of office, to turn over to his successor in office personal property held by him under writ of attachment.

Sagely v. Livermore, 45 Cal. 613.

20. A sheriff has no right, after making a return, to amend so as to affect rights which have already vested.

Newhall v. Provost, 6 Cal. 85.

21. The general statute defines the duties of the sheriff in respect to final process. It declares "that the sheriff shall execute the writ (of feri facias) by levying, etc., and paying to the plaintiff or his attorney so much of the proceeds as will satisfy the judgment, etc., and if there be any excess he shall return the same to the judgment debtor." These acts are to be construed in pari materia.

Wilson v. Broder, 10 Cal. 486.

22. A sheriff is not entitled to keeper's fees, or the expense of feeding stock under attachment unless the court from which the writ issues certifies that the charges are just and reasonable. Geil v. Stevens, 48 Cal. 590.

23. The duty imposed by the statute on sheriffs to take prisoners to the state prison, and insane persons to the insane asylum, is an official duty and none the less so because some portion of it must be performed without the limits of the county.

Adams v. San Francisco, 50 Cal. 117.

24. The sheriff of the city and county of San Francisco is required to pay to the treasurer of said city and county the sums which he receives from the state for the transportation of prisoners to the state prison and of insane persons to the insane asylum. Id.

25. A sheriff may voluntarily correct his return of a tax sale after the return has been filed, but he can not be compelled by the court to correct the return against his will. Hewell v. Lane, 53 Cal. 213.

26. Where one writ of attachment was placed in the sheriff's hands on Sunday, and another against the same defendant was placed in the hands of a deputy at a quarter past twelve on Monday morning, the sheriff not knowing the fact, and the first levy was made under the writ at one o'clock Monday morning, the sheriff was not guilty of negligence in executing the first, no special circumstances being shown.

Whitney v. Butterfield, 13 Cal. 335.

27. Reasonable diligence in the execution of process depends upon the particular facts; whether, for instance, the writ be for fraud, or because defendant is about to leave the state, or remove his property, and the like. Id.

28. In the service of process, the sheriff is responsible only for unreasonably, or not reasonably, executing it. He is not bound to start on the instant of receiving a writ to execute it, without regard to anything else. Id.

29. The mere omission of a deputy to inform the sheriff of having a process in hand is not such negligence as to charge the sheriff, in case a writ last in hand was executed first. Id.

30. A levy on personal property capable of manual delivery must be made by taking the property in custody. If it is allowed to remain in the hands of the debtor, the levy can not operate so as to defeat subsequent executions.

Dutertre v. Driard, 7 Cal. 549.

31. A levy may be good as against the defendant in the writ, and not good as to third persons. The conduct of the defendant may make the levy good, by way of waiver, or estoppel, or agreement.

Taft v. Manlove, 14 Cal. 48.

32. As to third persons, there can be no levy when the officer does not know the subject of the levy; as, where he stands at the door of a store which is locked, and keeps others out. The levy dates from the time he gets into the store and takes possession. Id.

33. Service of a copy of execution and notice of garnishment upon a third party constitute no lien on property of the debtor in his hands capable of manual delivery.

Johnson v. Gorham, 6 Cal. 195.

34. Under our statute an execution affects property only from the time of the levy. Id.

35. A levy under execution, on sufficient property to satisfy it, is a satisfaction of the judgment.

People v. Chisholm, 8 Cal. 29.

36. A deputy sheriff who seizes property under an attachment is not authorized, by virtue of his office, to bind the sheriff by contract for the payment of a keeper to take charge of the property so attached. Special authority for this purpose must be shown. Krum v. King, 12 Cal. 412.

37. The time in which a sheriff makes return to an execution does not affect the validity of the execution or of a sale under it. Low v. Adams, 6 Cal. 277.

38. Where judgment is taken jointly against two defendants, it makes no difference, so far as they are concerned, whether the sheriff first levied on joint property or not. Id.

39. Where a stranger to an execution is in possession of personal property, claiming it as his own by virtue of such a transfer to him from the execution debtor as would prevent the latter himself from retaking possession, whether the transfer be by sale or pledge, a sheriff can not justify a seizure of the property under the writ without producing both the writ and judgment.

Knox v. Marshall, 19 Cal. 617.

40. Hence, where, in such a case, the execution creditor causes the property to be seized by the sheriff, and claims that the transfer from the debtor to the stranger to the writ was fraudulent and void, and made to hinder, delay, and defraud creditors, and on the trial, having put in evidence the execution, but not the judgment, offers evidence to show that the transfer was made for that purpose: Held, that the evidence was properly rejected, the judgment not being produced. Id.

41. The presumptions are in favor of the regularity of the acts of the officer, and a return which simply states that the property was attached is sufficient, prima facie, to show a due and proper execution of the writ.

Ritter v. Scannell, 11 Cal. 248.

42. Our statute prescribes the manner in which real estate may be attached, but contains no express provision requiring that all the acts necessary to a valid levy shall be set out in the return; nor can such a rule be sustained. Id.

43. Nor is it necessary, when the levy is made by posting a copy of the writ on the premises, that the return of the sheriff should show that the premises were at the time unoccupied. Id.

44. Where a substitute sheriff, elisor, was appointed, and the pleadings did not show that there was no sheriff or coroner, or that these officers were disqualified: Held, that the appointment being made by a judge having competent jurisdiction, the presumption of the law is that he faithfully performed his duty. Turner v. Billagram, 2 Cal. 520.

45. Where an officer, by virtue of a second attachment, levies on property already in his possession by virtue of a former attachment, it is only necessary for him to return that he has attached the interest of the defendant in the property then in his possession. O'Conner v. Blake, 29 Cal. 312.

46. Where a writ of attachment was issued on the twenty-sixth of August, and a copy delivered to the occupant of the premises, or posted upon them, on the twenty-ninth of that month; and on the same day the writ was returned, with a certificate of the sheriff's proceedings, and filed in the clerk's office, but no copy of the writ, with a description of the property, was filed with the recorder until the ninth of September following: Held, that after the return of the writ to the clerk's office, on the twenty-ninth of August, the sheriff had no authority to take any proceedings for the completion of the attachment previously omitted; that the writ was authority to him only for acts performed while it remained in his possession; and hence, that another creditor of the debtor purchasing the property from the latter, on the sixth of September, took it free from any lien of the attachment.

Wheaton v. Neville, 19 Cal. 41.

47. It is the duty of an officer, after he has once entered upon the execution of an attachment, to complete its execution with diligence. Id.

48. An execution is sufficient justification to a sheriff for the seizure of the property of the debtor, whether it be in his actual possession, or in the possession of an agent or parties holding it for his benefit.

Bickerstaff v. Doub, 19 Cal. 103.

49. Where a stranger to an execution is in possession of property, claiming it as his own by virtue of a transfer to him from the debtor, which would prevent the latter himself from retaking the possession, the sheriff can not justify without producing both execution and judgment. Id.

50. A sheriff's return is not traversable, and a court will not permit it to be attacked collaterally, even if the officer is shown to have been guilty of fraud and collusion. Egery v. Buchanan, 5 Cal. 53.

51. A mistake in the date of the sheriff's return may be corrected at any time.

Ritter v. Scannell, 11 Cal. 238.

52. Courts should exercise great liberality in allowing sheriffs to amend their returns, so as to make them conform to the true state of the facts and to correct errors and mistakes. Gavitt v. Doub, 23 Cal. 58.

53. The return of a deputy sheriff on a process served is a nullity, unless made in the name of the sheriff.

Rowley v. Howard, 23 Cal. 401.

54. All returns must be made by the deputy in the name and by the authority of the sheriff. Joyce v. Joyce, 5 Cal. 549.

55. A summons was served by a deputy sheriff and returned with the following signature to the return: Elijah F. Cole, D. S. Judgment was rendered by default: Held, that the judgment was null and void; the return should have been in the name of the sheriff by the deputy.

Rowley v. Howard, 23 Cal. 401.

56. The affidavit of service required by this section must show that the person serving it was a white male citizen, over twenty-one years of age, competent to testify in the cause, and that a certified copy of the complaint accompanied the summons.

McMillan v. Reynolds, 11 Cal. 378.

Indemnity to.

57. Where an indemnity bond is given to a sheriff to hold him harmless, and pay any judgment which may be rendered against him by reason of his seizure of certain property, his remedy at law on the bond is clear for the amount of any such judgment, whether he be solvent or not, or whether his official sureties could be held or not, and a bill in equity will not lie.

White v. Fratt, 13 Cal. 521.

58. The bond given to release property attached only releases it from the custody of the sheriff, and is not an actual substitution of security, compelling the plaintiff to proceed upon the bond alone to collect his judgment.

Low v. Adams, 6 Cal. 277.

59. In a bond given to release property seized on an attachment, the obligors undertook to pay on demand to plaintiffs in the action, the amount of the judgment and costs, not to exceed three thousand dollars, which plaintiff might recover. In the bond the action is recited as for one thousand six hundred dollars. Upon delivery of the bond the property was returned to the debtor. Plaintiffs in the action had judgment for an amount exceeding the penalty of the bond: Held, that recovery may be had on the bond to the extent of the penalty.

Palmer v. Vance, 13 Cal. 553.

60. Such a bond is not a statutory undertaking, but is valid as a common law obligation, and is a sufficient compliance with the statute.

Id.

61. The mistake in the recital as to the amount for which attachment issued, may be explained and corrected by parol.

Id.

62. Execution against the judgment debt or in such case is not a condition precedent to suit on the bond.

Id.

63. A bond given voluntarily to the sheriff on delivery of the property, is valid at common law.

Id.

64. Where the sheriff, under a writ of attachment in the suit of plaintiff against D. M. Eder and P. M. Eder, as the firm of D. M. Eder & Co., is about to levy on the property of said firm, and a bond is executed by L. and J., as sureties, conditioned to keep harmless and indemnify the sheriff against all damages, costs, charges, trouble, and expense he may be put to by reason of the non-seizure of the property, and also "to pay whatever judgment may be rendered against said defendants;" and judgment was obtained against one only of the defendants, plaintiff failing on the trial to prove the other to be partner: Held, that the sureties are liable on the bond for the amount of the judgment; that the bond, though not strictly an undertaking under the statute, conforms substantially to its requirements, and must be read by the light of the statute, and interpreted according to the intention of the parties.

Heynemann v. Eder, 17 Cal. 433.

65. Such bond will be presumed to have been executed with reference to the provisions of the statute, and as the security required by the statute is a security for the satisfaction of any judgment that may be obtained, the bond will be held to be such a security. This is the sense of the instrument, and the fact that judgment was obtained against one only of the defendants, satisfies the condition to "pay whatever judgment may be rendered against said defendants."

Id.

66. An undertaking given to a sheriff to procure a release of goods attached is for the benefit of the plaintiff who may sue on it, and if the sheriff take a sufficient statutory undertaking he has no further responsibility.

Curia v. Packard, 29 Cal. 194.

Hayes v. Josephi, 26 Cal. 535.

68. The principals in a bond given to a sheriff to release goods from attachment, tender to the plaintiff in the attachment suit the full amount of his debt and costs, and the plaintiff refuses to receive the tender, the sureties are discharged from their obligation on the bond; and for the purpose of discharging the sureties it is not necessary that such tender be paid into court or kept good.

Curia v. Packard, 29 Cal. 194.

69. A tender of the amount claimed in the suit by the principal in an attachment bond discharges the sureties.

Id.

70. Tender by sureties on undertaking for release of attachment to plaintiff in attachment suit of the full amount of judgment recovered is equivalent to payment or release by said plaintiff.

Norwood v. Kenfield, 34 Cal. 329.

71. An agreement to indemnify a sheriff for seizing property under execution is valid, if the parties are in good faith seeking to enforce a legal right.

Stark v. Raney, 18 Cal. 622.

72. An agreement to indemnify a party for a willful trespass about to be committed is against public policy and void.

Id.

73. If a sheriff is indemnified for an act done by virtue of his office, and an action is brought against him to recover damages for the act, and judgment is recovered against him, the sheriff can not afterwards have judgment against the sureties on the indemnifying bond, upon a notice of five days, unless he gave the sureties written notice of the action brought against him.

Dennis v. Packard, 28 Cal. 101.

74. The provision of the practice act making the judgment, in an action against a sheriff, conclusive evidence against his indemnifier, where the latter has been notified of the action, is founded upon the principle that the action, under such circumstances, is in substance against the indemnifier, the real party in interest, and that he has in that action an opportunity to make any defense that may exist. Dutil v. Pacheco, 21 Cal. 438.

75. Where, therefore, the indemnifier has been notified of the action against the sheriff, he can not maintain a bill in equity to set aside the judgment obtained therein, except under such conditions as would have enabled him to maintain it had he been the nominal as well as real party defendant to the first action. Id.

76. In an action against the sheriff for not levying the execution, if the sheriff prove a trial by jury and verdict for claimant, the plaintiff must show that he rendered the bond of indemnity to the sheriff required by law. Strong v. Patterson, 6 Cal. 156.

77. If several creditors levy, and those prior fail to indemnify the sheriff, he should relinquish the levy of such, and proceed only for the benefit of those who indemnify and incur the responsibility.

Davidson v. Dallas, 8 Cal. 227.

78. A bond to indemnify a sheriff takes effect from the time of its delivery.

Buffandeau v. Brooks, 28 Cal. 641.

79. A bond given to a sheriff to indemnify him for any loss or damage he may sustain by selling property levied on by him by virtue of an execution in violation of an order enjoining its sale, is void, because an unlawful contract. Id.

80. The fact that a bond was given to a sheriff to indemnify him against selling property in violation of an order enjoining its sale may be shown, though the bond discloses no unlawful purpose on its face. Id.

81. If in a bond to indemnify a sheriff for replevying property claimed by a person other than the defendant in the writ, the obligors undertake to indemnify him from any damage he may sustain by reason of any costs, suits, judgments, and executions that shall come or be brought against him, the sheriff can not maintain an action on the bond because a judgment has been recovered against him, but must first pay the judgment. Lott v. Mitchell, 32 Cal. 23.

LIABILITIES OF.

82. The owner of property has his remedy and the right of recovery, against any one, whether sheriff or not, unless it be held by legal process against himself.

Rhodes v. Patterson, 3 Cal. 469.

83. Where an order of court directed the sheriff to seize certain specific property, and this property proved not to belong to the defendant in the suit, the sheriff was held liable to the owner. Id.

84. If a sheriff take property not belonging to the defendant in the writ, whether in his possession or not, the taking is tortious.

Wellman v. English, 38 Cal. 583.

85. Where property has been wrongfully taken under attachment, the sheriff and the attaching creditors are joint trespassers.

Lewis v. Johns, 34 Cal. 629.

86. Where property attached is claimed by a third person, the sheriff may protect himself before a jury of six persons, and if the verdict be in favor of the claimant, he may relinquish the levy, unless indemnified. If he gives the bond of the indemnity, it will only inure to the benefit of the owner of the property, so far as the consequences which result from his own acts are concerned. Davidson v. Dallas, 8 Cal. 227.

87. In such case, the attaching creditors do not stand in the position of joint trespassers, the seizure of the second being subject to the first. Id.

88. Where a sheriff or constable seizes the property of one man under an execution against another, he is a trespasser, and liable on his official bond.

Van Pelt v. Littler, 14 Cal. 194.

89. A sheriff is not protected in the sale of personal property by the verdict of a jury on the trial of the right of property, under the provisions of section 218 of the code. The proceedings before a sheriff, in such a trial, are not judicial.

Perkins v. Thornburgh, 10 Cal. 189.

90. Where property is levied on by a constable or sheriff by virtue of an attachment or execution, as the property of the defendant in the suit, and is claimed by a third party, and a jury is called to try the right of property under the claim, and the verdict of the jury is against the claimant, this verdict is no protection to the officer in a suit brought against him by the defendants, nor is it admissible in evidence as a defense. Sheldon v. Loomis, 28 Cal. 122.

91. The sheriff will, however, be liable to the owner, who has his legal remedy against any one for the taking, unless it be by virtue of legal process against him.

Rhodes v. Patterson, 3 Cal. 469.

92. When the sheriff is a party to the action, the court may order the cause tried by a special jury, to be summoned by the coroner. Pacheco v. Hunsacker, 14 Cal. 120.

93. A sheriff makes out a prima facie case of justification of the seizure of property under a writ of attachment, by the production of the writ and affidavit on which it was issued, notwithstanding the affidavit was originally insufficient, and was amended subsequent to the seizure, if the property was in possession of the defendant and attached as his property.

Babe v. Coyne, 53 Cal. 261.

94. The sheriff is entitled to show such justification, irrespective of any question as to the validity of the sale. Id.

95. In trespass, against a sheriff, the court below, on plaintiff's motion, may order a special jury to try the case, instead of the regular panel. The sheriff being interested, ought not to summon a jury. And there being no coroner, an elisor may be appointed to summon a jury.

Pacheco v. Hunsacker, 14 Cal. 120.

96. An officer attaching goods under civil process is entitled to notice of the claim of a third party to the goods, and a demand for them, or he is not liable in damages to such party for such seizure and detention.

Taylor v. Seymour, 6 Cal. 512.

97. Where the goods of a third party are mixed with the property, or in the apparent possession of the judgment debtor, the sheriff is not liable for levying on them as the property of the debtor, unless there has been notice and demand of the goods by the owner, and a delay or refusal to deliver.

Dauniel v. Gorham, 6 Cal. 43.

99. In an action against a sheriff for seizure and conversion of the plaintiff's property taken under process against a third person, a demand upon the defendant prior to the bringing of the suit is not necessary to a recovery. The sheriff having misapplied his process, and whether by mistake or design will make no difference, stands in the position of every other trespasser, and is liable to an action the instant the trespass is committed. The circumstance that the property was in the possession of the execution debtor at the date of the seizure amounts to nothing, except upon proof of fraud or commixture. The rule of the common law is correctly stated in Ledley v. Hays, 1 Cal. 160.

100. A sheriff who levies upon and sells property exempt from execution is liable for the value of such property, if claimed as exempt prior to the sale.

Spencer v. Long, 39 Cal. 700.

101. A sheriff who sells property on an execution issued by a justice of the peace, after the justice has notified him that a writ of certiorari has been issued, and commanded him to stay all proceedings upon the execution, is liable for the value of the property. Id.

102. A trespass committed by a deputy marshal or sheriff, in his official character, is considered, in law, as committed directly and personally by his principal.

Hirsch v. Rann, 39 Cal. 315.

103. Where a trespass is committed by a marshal or sheriff, either personally or by deputy, his official character does not relieve him from personal responsibility. Id.

104. In an action against an officer, such as sheriff or marshal, for a trespass committed through his deputy, it is not necessary to state the official character of the defendant in the complaint, or to charge the trespass as having been committed through a deputy. Id.

105. No demand is necessary before suing a sheriff for personal property tortiously taken by him.

Wellman v. English, 38 Cal. 583.

106. Where a sheriff fails to pay over money collected on execution, the action should be for a false return.

Egery v. Buchanan, 5 Cal. 53.

107. The statute penalties against sheriffs, for the non-payment of moneys collected on execution, are only recoverable when the sheriff, by his return, admits the collection of the money, but refuses to pay it over. Id.

108. Where the sheriff wrongfully took possession of the goods, and thereby deprived the plaintiff of them, the fact that they were taken by the coroner, under a writ against the sheriff before the latter had removed them, does not excuse his tort.

Squires v. Payne, 6 Cal. 654.

109. The remedy by motion against a sheriff and his sureties, to compel him to pay over the money collected on execution, was only given for cases of intentional delinquency on the part of the sheriff, as a punishment for his willful or corrupt neglect of duty, and was not designed to embrace a case in which he declined to pay over moneys collected under circumstances of a bona fide well-grounded doubt of the authority of the party to demand it.

Wilson v. Broder, 10 Cal. 486.

110. Held, further, that where the execution on such joint judgment directed the officer "to levy of the goods and chattels, lands and tenements of the said judgment debtors," said sum, etc., the author is authorized to seize the individual as well as joint property of the judgment debtors; and hence, that where the officer seized and sold under such execution the individual property of the party not served with process, the justice of the peace issuing the writ, and the plaintiff therein, at whose request it was issued, who took part in the proceedings and received the proceeds of the sale, are each liable to the party not served in damages for the seizure. Inos v. Winspear, 18 Cal. 397.

111. A sheriff who levies a writ of attachment upon personal property, in obedience to the commands of the writ, has no right to let the property go out of his hands, except in due course of law; and if he does, and the debt is lost, he is responsible to the plaintiff in the attachment for the amount of the debt.

Sanford v. Boring, 12 Cal. 539.

112. No parol instruction of the plaintiff in an attachment or execution, respecting property seized by the sheriff under either writ, will discharge such sheriff from liability. The statute is express that such instruction must be in writing. Id.

113. The evident meaning of the language of the act embraces all acts done by the sheriff in respect to the execution of process, including the care and disposition of the property levied upon. Id.

115. Where the taking is by an officer upon proper legal authority, a demand is necessary in order to make him liable in damages. Taylor v. Seymour, 6 Cal. 512.

116. Certain personal property owned by plaintiff, but which had been used by A. & G., under a contract of hire, was seized by the sheriff from the possession of the plaintiff, by virtue of an attachment against G., subsequent to which plaintiff, having made a demand for the property upon the sheriff, but not upon A. & G., commenced this action against the former for its recovery: Held, that the demand, if necessary at all, was properly made upon the defendant in whose possession the property was at the time.

Woodworth v. Knowlton, 22 Cal. 164.

117. If a sheriff seizes the property of A., then in A.'s possession, as the property of B., under an execution against the property of B., a demand of the return of the property by A. is not necessary before bringing suit for damages.

Moore v. Murdock, 26 Cal. 524.

118. If a sheriff, by virtue of an execution, seizes the property of a person other than the judgment debtor, whether by mistake or design, it is not necessary for the owner of the property thus seized to make a demand on the sheriff before commencing suit. Boulware v. Craddock, 30 Cal. 190.

119. Plaintiff sued out an attachment against K., and the sheriff levied it on certain goods. Other creditors issued attachments, which were levied by the sheriff on the same goods. Plaintiff then dismissed his attachment, and sued the sheriff in replevin, claiming that K. obtained a portion of the goods of plaintiff by fraud. Instead of taking the goods out of the sheriff's possession, plaintiff made an arrangement with the sheriff, whereby he agreed to sell the goods, and keep the proceeds to answer any judgment plaintiff might obtain in his replevin suit. Sheriff sold the goods, paid the money into court, saying nothing about this arrangement, and the money was paid, by order of court, on the claims of the other creditors. The sureties of the sheriff had nothing to do with, and gave no sanction to, the arrangement. Plaintiff had judgment in replevin: Held, that the sureties on the sheriff's official bond are not liable to plaintiff for the goods or the money received from the sale—this agreement between him and plaintiff being no part of the sheriff's official duty; that the sheriff, as such, had no legal authority to sell these goods and to hold the money on bailment for plaintiff, and that in so far as plaintiff trusted the sheriff with the goods, and authorized him to sell them, he became the agent of the plaintiff, and must be looked to as such.

Schloss v. White, 16 Cal. 65.

120. Where a sheriff received a writ of assistance, commanding him forthwith to deliver possession of certain real estate to plaintiff; and went with plaintiff to the premises for the purpose of putting him in possession, but for some reason not stated, in opposition to plaintiff's wishes and against his protestations, he declined to take any action in the matter; and then, on a subsequent day, the sheriff proceeded to execute the writ; but the parties in possession, being the parties against whom the writ run, had, in the mean time, destroyed a number of valuable fixtures, and by their willful and malicious acts had injured the premises in other respects: Held, that the sheriff is liable for the damage thus done; that he is presumed to have known what his duty was, and to have acted in willful violation of it; and that as his duty was to execute the writ at the earliest practicable moment, and he neglected and refused so to do, it was through his fault that the parties in possession were enabled to commit the injury; and he must respond in damages, however remote. Chapman v. Thornburgh, 17 Cal. 87.

121. Where a sheriff has levied on, and is about to sell property of an execution debtor, and the defendant in execution obtains from the court in which the judgment was rendered an injunction restraining the plaintiff in the judgment, his servants, etc., from proceeding to sell under such execution, and this injunction is served upon the sheriff, who, in defiance of it, afterwards makes the sale, he is a naked trespasser, and liable in damages, even though he be not a party to the injunction suit.

Buffendeau v. Edmondson, 17 Cal. 433.

122. The provision of law punishing the sheriff for acting in defiance of an order of court, is more for the sake of the public than the redress of the private grievance involved in such delinquency. Id.

123. Where property is levied on by a constable or sheriff, by virtue of an attachment or execution, as the property of the defendant in the suit, and is claimed by a third party, and a jury is called to try the right of property under the claim, and the verdict of the jury is against the claimant, this verdict is no protection to the officer in a suit brought against him by the claimant, nor is it admissible in evidence as a defense. Sheldon v. Loomis, 23 Cal. 122.

124. The assent of an ordinary agent, who had general charge of his principal's affairs during her temporary absence, will not justify the sheriff, who holds an execution against a third person, in levying it upon property in the possession of the principal in her absence.

Fitch v. Brockman, 2 Cal. 575.

125. The rule giving vindictive or exemplary damages in cases of malicious trespass, applies as well to officers of the law, acting under color of process, as to private persons. Nightingale v. Seannell, 18 Cal. 315.

126. In such a suit, the property seized being a merchant's stock in trade, evidence of the retail value of the goods is inadmissible as a basis for damages. The object of such evidence is to estimate the profits plaintiff might have made by a sale of the goods; and this would be mere conjecture. The value of the goods was what it would cost in the market to replace them. Id.

127. In suit against the sheriff and the plaintiff in judgment, for a wrongful seizure of property on an execution upon such judgment, the sheriff, who acted without improper motives, can not be made liable in vindictive or exemplary damages on account of the malicious motives of the plaintiff in the writ. The motives of plaintiff can not be given in evidence in aggravation of damages against the sheriff. Id.

128. If an action be improperly commenced, the party bringing it having obtained the benefit, can not avoid the responsibility he may have thus incurred, by pleading his own misfeasance.

Turner v. Billagram, 2 Cal. 520.

129. Proceedings for a mandamus to compel the execution of a sheriff's deed to a redemptioner, after sixty days from the redemption, under section 232 of the code, can be commenced in the county where the redeemer resides. The provision of the statute that actions against a public officer for acts done by him in virtue of his office, etc., set forth in this section, applies only to affirmative acts of the officer, by which in the execution of process, or otherwise, he interferes with the property or right of third persons, and not to mere omissions or neglect of official duty. McMillan v. Richards, 9 Cal. 366.

130. In an action of trespass against a sheriff, where he is declared against personally, and not as sheriff, it is competent to prove that the defendant was sheriff, and that his deputy as such committed the trespass.

Poinsett v. Taylor, 6 Cal. 78.

131. In an action against a sheriff it is not necessary to prove that the defendant directed his deputy to seize the particular property in question, in order to hold the defendant liable. Id.

132. In an action against a sheriff for refusing to levy an attachment on certain property as belonging to the attachment debtor, testimony that the property had been claimed by a third party, and the right of property tried before a sheriff's jury, and decided in favor of claimant, is irrelevant and inadmissible, when those facts have not been set up as new matter of defense in the answer.

Strong v. Patterson, 6 Cal. 156.

133. As under the statute the plaintiff, after the introduction of such testimony, would be bound to show that he had tendered an indemnity bond, he may well complain that he is taken by surprise, the issue not being tendered by the pleadings. Id.

134. The objection to the introduction of such testimony on the ground that it is irrelevant, is sufficient. Id.

135. Statutory penalties against a sheriff are only recoverable when, by the return of the sheriff, he admits the collection of the money, and refuses to pay it over, and not where his failure to pay over arises from his inability to decide between conflicting claims of different execution creditors.

Johnson v. Gorham, 6 Cal. 195.

136. In an action against a sheriff for wrongfully seizing and selling property, under an execution, and where there was no wantonness or oppression on the part of such officer in the seizure, the measure of damages is the value of the property at the time it was seized, and legal interest on such amount from the time of seizure up to the time of the rendition of the verdict.

Phelps v. Owens, 11 Cal. 22.

137. If the sheriff levies upon the property of a person not a party to the execution, he is responsible in an action at law.

Markley v. Rand, 12 Cal. 275.

138. Attachment in suit of B. & Co. v. Y. & L., as firm of Y. & Co., under which defendant, as sheriff, seized plaintiff's stock in trade, claiming that L. was partner of plaintiff: Held, that in action by plaintiff against sheriff for damages, proof of injury to plaintiff's business as a merchant was inadmissible as a criterion of damage.

Dexter v. Paugh, 18 Cal. 372.

139. An action can not be maintained by the defendant in an execution to recover of the officer the penalty prescribed by section 222 of the practice act for selling without proper notice, unless by a sale so made the complainant has been deprived of his property. If the attempted sale is a nullity, and passes no title, no injury has been sustained, and no right of action for the forfeiture accrues. Askew v. Ebberts, 22 Cal. 263.

140. In an action to enforce a penalty or forfeiture imposed by statute, the claim is to be strictly construed. Id.

141. Action against sheriff for seizing plaintiff's wheat, as the property of one Andeque. Evidence tending to show that the wheat was grown on the land of plaintiff, and in his possession; that A. was on the land only to raise and harvest the crop; that the grain was cut and stacked on the premises; that plaintiff was entitled to one third by the contract between him and A.; that A. sold to plaintiff and delivered possession, and then abandoned the premises, plaintiff residing thereon. A. took no further control of premises or crops, and plaintiff assumed entire dominion of both: Held, that plaintiff was not bound to abandon his premises, or carry the grain beyond them, to protect his title against creditors of A.; that there was no error in refusing to instruct the jury, that there was no evidence that the sale from A. to plaintiff was accompanied by an immediate delivery of the property, and followed by an actual and continued change of possession thereof.

Pacheco v. Hunsacker, 14 Cal. 120.

142. Plaintiff sues the sheriff for seizing certain chattels claimed by plaintiff. Defendant justifies under a writ of attachment in the suit of F. v. C., and also under an execution issued upon a judgment had in that suit, setting up that plaintiff claimed the chattels by purchase from C., and that such purchase was fraudulent as to F., a creditor of C. After the evidence on both sides was closed, the court, on motion of plaintiff, struck out the attachment proceedings, judgment and execution, and all evidence justifying thereunder, on the ground that defendant had not proved all of the debt upon which the attachment issued: Held, that this was error; that, had no debt been proved, the judgment and execution being introduced, with an offer to show a levy and sale thereunder, were enough, if not to justify the first seizure under the attachment, at least to diminish the damages, by showing that the property was appropriated by law to the proper purpose, to wit, paying C.'s debt, if it really were his property, or subject, as his, to the process, because of the fraud.

Walker v. Woods, 15 Cal. 66.

143. If, in justification by the sheriff under such attachment, judgment and execution, it be necessary to aver in the answer that the writs of attachment and execution were returned executed by the sheriff, still the omission of this averment, though it might have been ground of demurrer, was no ground for rejecting all evidence under such justification. Id.

144. In case of conflict between the individual and firm creditors equity has jurisdiction. No action lies against the sheriff for levying the execution of the individual creditor, and a sale to different purchasers might result in a loss of the property.

Crosby v. Woods, 13 Cal. 626.

145. Where M. made a bill of sale to G. of forty-two barrels of vinegar, then in possession of G., as keeper for the sheriff, as collateral security for a debt due G., and G. subsequently gave back the bill of sale to M. without any liquidation of the debt or change of the possession of the property, and the property was afterwards sold by the defendant as sheriff, M. bringing an action of trover against the defendant, to recover the same: Held, that M. had no title to the property upon which he could recover in such an action, as the mere handing back the bill of sale to M. did not revert the title in him.

Middlesworth v. Sedgwick, 10 Cal. 392.

146. Plaintiff here can not dispute the regularity of the proceedings in such attachment unless they were void on their face. Defendant could show his attachment proceedings, the judgment, execution and levy, and then that the sale by C. to plaintiff was fraudulent. No proof of the indebtedness of C. to F. was necessary, after showing the affidavit, undertaking, and attachment; and no irregularities, in justifying sureties and the like, could be availed of by plaintiff.

Walker v. Woods, 15 Cal. 66.

147. In an action against a sheriff for taking goods from the possession of the plaintiff, where the defendant justifies under a writ of attachment against a third person, and alleges a fraudulent sale from such third person to the plaintiff, proof of the debt on which the writ of attachment was based is necessary for no other purpose than as the foundation for proof that the sale was void as to creditors.

Mamlock v. White, 20 Cal. 598.

Treadwell v. Davis, 34 Cal. 601.

EX-SHERIFF.

149. On the election of a new sheriff the former sheriff must complete the execution of all final process which he had begun to execute before the expiration of his term of office. People v. Boring, 8 Cal. 406.

150. The authority of a sheriff to sell land, conferred by a writ remaining in his hands after his term of office has expired, carries with it authority to execute all the instruments required by law, to the completion of the sale, viz., a certificate, and in case of no redemption, a conveyance to the purchaser. Id.

151. When the ex-sheriff, who made the sale of land under a writ partially executed by him while in office, dies before executing a conveyance, the law having failed to provide for the completion of the execution in such a case, the only remedy left to the purchaser, is to apply to the court for the appointment of a commissioner or master to execute the conveyance. Id.

152. Independent of statute, the court, by virtue of its original jurisdiction, has authority to appoint a suitable person to make and deliver the deed, in the enforcement of its judgment, and that its final process may be completely executed. Id.

153. A sheriff, whose term of office has expired, has no right to collect the state and county tax, as unfinished business, from the assessment list which came into his hands while in office.

Fremont v. Boling, 11 Cal. 380.

154. The ex-sheriff could only be gar-nished as a private individual.

Graham v. Endicott, 7 Cal. 144.

155. A sheriff who sells land under execution, and gives a certificate of the sale to the purchaser, and subsequently his term of office expires, is the proper person to make the deed. Consequently, where the plaintiff's complaints in ejectment averred title in plaintiff under a sheriff's sale made by one sheriff, and a deed executed by his successor: Held, that the plaintiff could not recover.

1. In ejectment, on a patent from the United States, the original deed was produced in court, and the case tried in Yuba county, where Johnson had formerly lived for years, and where his signature could, probably, have been easily proved or disproved, had there been any suspicion as to its genuineness. Mott v. Smith, 16 Cal. 533.

2. Courts will take judicial notice of the signatures of their officers as such, but there is no rule which extends such notice to the signatures of parties to a cause. When, therefore, the proof of service of process consists of the written admissions of defendants, such admissions, to be available in the action, should be accompanied with some evidence of the genuineness of the signatures of the parties. In the absence of such evidence the court can not notice them.

SOLDIER.

1. The mere fact that a man is a soldier in the United States army does not disqualify him from voting in this state. But he can not vote unless he has been a citizen of the state and of the county in which he votes, for the constitutional period.

Orman v. Riley, 15 Cal. 48.

2. And a mere residence or sojourn in the county as a soldier does not make him a citizen, or prove him to be such. The rule, as fixed by the constitution, is that the fact of such sojourn or residence as a soldier, neither creates nor destroys citizenship, leaving the political status of the soldier where it was before. Id.

3. Where the right of a United States soldier to vote is contested, the burden of proof is upon the contestant. Id.

4. A copy of a copy of a muster roll of United States soldiers is not admissible in evidence to prove a man to be a soldier. Id.

5. It is the duty of the boards of supervisors of the respective counties in this state to audit and allow the bills of organized volunteer companies for rent of armory, etc., and to direct a warrant to be issued therefor, payable out of the county funds in the hands of the county treasurer; and if they refuse to issue such a warrant in a proper case, a writ of mandate will be issued, commanding them to do so.

People v. San Joaquin Co., 28 Cal. 228.

6. The sums paid by counties for expenses of volunteer companies are to be allowed and credited to such counties by the state treasurer, in his annual settlements with the county treasurers. Id.

7. The act of April 4, 1864, authorizing persons in the military service of the United States to vote elsewhere than in the county or district where they respectively reside, and have their votes counted in such county or district, is unconstitutional.

Day v. Jones, 31 Cal. 261.

8. The volunteers, to be entitled to the bounty provided to be paid by this state, by the act of April 4, 1864 (stats. 1863-64, p. 486), must have enlisted, not only under the laws of congress requiring a quota of volunteers to be raised in this state, but also while such quota was being raised under the orders of the president.

CONST. LAW.

| ELECTION.

SOLE TRADER.

1. IN GENERAL 27. DECLARATION OF.

IN GENERAL

1. The sole trader act does not change the marital relation, further than the business of the wife as sole trader.

Saunders v. Webber, 39 Cal. 287.

2. A finding that there was a full compliance by a married woman with the statute of 1862 relating to sole trader (stats. 1862, p. 108), is equivalent to a finding that she was authorized to carry on the business specified in her own name and on her own account.

Porter v. Gamba, 43 Cal. 105.

3. A sole trader can not claim exemption from liability, as such, on the ground that she permitted her husband to manage and control the business. Id.

4. The provision in section 3 of the sole trader act (stats. 1862, p. 108), that "nothing contained in this act shall be deemed to authorize a married woman to carry on business in her own name when the same is managed or superintended by her husband," was intended only for the protection of the creditors of the husband, and to prevent collusion and fraud between husband and wife, but not to shield the wife from her liability as a sole trader. Id.

5. There is no objection to a general judgment against a sole trader on a claim for which she, as such, is liable. Id.

6. In an action against a feme-sole trader, it is improper to join her husband with her as defendant, and a complaint so drawn is demurrable.

McKune v. McGarvey, 6 Cal. 497.

7. The effect of our statute is to make a feme-sole of a married woman who is a sole trader, as to the particular business in which she is engaged. Id.

8. In an action brought by a married woman concerning property belonging to her as a sole trader, the husband need not be joined. Guttman v. Scannell, 7 Cal. 455.

9. By the provisions of the sole trader act the legislature designed to afford to every married woman an opportunity of providing against the improvidence or misfortunes of her husband, by engaging in any legitimate calling, by protecting her earnings against her husband and his creditors, and enabling her by her own energy and industry to support herself and children. Id.

10. So far from forbidding, the law, by the plainest implication, intends that the capital invested by the wife as a sole trader, to the extent of five thousand dollars, may be furnished by the husband. Id.

11. If the husband at the time was embarrassed, the transfer to his wife, as to his creditors, would be fraudulent and void. Id.

12. The act does not confine sole traders to any particular trade or occupation, nor prohibit the husband from being employed by or acting for his wife in the business. Id.

13. The fact that the business was unsuited to the sex of the wife, and the employment of the husband therein, would be circumstantial evidence tending to establish fraud, but not conclusive evidence of it. Id.

14. The right of the wife to acquire property by purchase during the marriage, can only exist as an exception to the general rule as laid down by the act defining the rights of husband and wife, and this exception exists in the case of a sole trader by statute. Alverson v. Jones, 10 Cal. 12.

15. If a husband arranges with his wife that she engage in a business as a sole trader for the mere purpose of shielding their joint earnings against the existing and subsequent creditors of the husband, and with the understanding between them that the property used in or acquired by the business shall belong to both, and the husband have power to dispose of it, this is a fraud upon the creditors, and the property is liable for the husband's debts. Hurlburt v. Jones, 25 Cal. 225.

16. If a husband embarrassed with debt makes a settlement upon or conveys to his wife, as sole trader, property for the purpose of delaying or defrauding his creditors the conveyance is void. Id.

17. The fact that a married woman is a sole trader and contracts a debt, raises the presumption that the debt is contracted on account of her business as a sole trader. Melcher v. Kuhland, 22 Cal. 522.

18. A married woman who became a sole trader under the act of 1852, for the purpose of keeping a public-house and farming, could lawfully execute and deliver in her own name a valid promissory note for the purchase money of land conveyed to her for use in said business, and could also execute in her own name a valid mortgage on the same to secure the purchase money. Camden v. Mullen, 29 Cal. 564.

19. The question whether property purchased by a sole trader, was bought for use in her business as sole trader, is one of fact. Id.

20. The affidavit of publication of the declaration of a sole trader, which states that the publication was made "once a week for three weeks, viz., from April 26 to May 30, 1861," is sufficient to show that the publication was made for three successive weeks. Abrams v. Howard, 23 Cal. 388.

21. It is not essential that a declaration as sole trader under the act of 1852 be published. Reading v. Mullen, 31 Cal. 104.

22. The party seeking judgment on a note and mortgage executed by a married woman as sole trader under the act of 1852, has cast on him the burden of proving that the defendant was a sole trader when she made the note and mortgage. Id.

23. A copy of a recorded declaration as sole trader under the act of 1852, certified by the recorder, does not prove either the existence or contents of the original. Id.

24. If an order which is required to be made by the court, is entitled and filed in the court and bears the seal of the court, it will not be considered as an order of the judge at chambers, because the words "it appearing to me," are used in it, and the testatum clause says "in witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand." Oaks v. Rodgers, 48 Cal. 197.

25. If the statute requires an oath to be administered by the court or judge, and it is administered by the clerk in open court, under the direction of the court, and tested by the clerk, it is administered by the court in the sense of the statute. Id.

26. A certified copy of the order declaring a married woman a sole trader, is admissible in evidence, even if, in the order, the judge uses the first person, as though it was made by him instead of the court, and the oath attached thereto appears upon its face to have been administered by the clerk. Id.

DECLARATION OF.

27. A declaration of a married woman, under the sole trader act, must state: First, that she intends to carry on some certain business, specifically describing it; second, that she intends to carry on such business in her own name; and, third, on her own account. These three facts are essential, and a declaration which omits either is fatally defective, and will not entitle the declarant to the privileges of a sole trader. Adams v. Knowlton, 22 Cal. 283.

28. A declaration in the following form: "State of California, county of Nevada; H. Adams, resident of Nevada City, and wife of P. Adams, hereby declares that she intends to carry on the business of restaurant and hotel keeping, accommodating boarders and lodgers, in the city of Nevada, and from this date will be individually responsible, in her own name, for all debts contracted by her on account of her said business; that the amount of money invested in said business does not exceed or equal five thousand dollars. (Signed) H. Adams," and sworn to and acknowledged, is insufficient, and will not sustain a claim of the declarant to hold, as a sole trader, property subsequently conveyed to her for the purpose of the business mentioned, as against an execution creditor of her husband. Id.

Abrams v. Howard, 23 Cal. 388.

30. The act of 1852 relating to sole traders does not require that the declaration provided for therein should have an acknowledgment of any kind certified by the officer before whom it is taken. It is sufficient if the officer before whom it is made certify to the truth of the paper.

14. GOLD COIN CONTRACTS.
23. CONTRACTS IN GOLD OR ITS EQUIVALENT.
28. LEGAL TENDER.
44. PERFORMANCE OR ENFORCEMENT OF CONTRACTS.
59. GOLD COIN JUDGMENTS.

CONSTRUCTION OF ACT.

1. The act of April 27, 1863, commonly called the "specific contract act," is not in conflict with the constitution of this state, nor is it opposed to the principles of essential justice. Galland v. Lewis, 26 Cal. 46.

2. The act of 1863, commonly called the "specific contract act," applies to contracts made before as well as after its passage. Otis v. Haseltine, 27 Cal. 80.

3. The specific contract act was not intended to legalize contracts which without it were illegal, but to provide a remedy for enforcing certain contracts if held to be legal.

Lane v. Gluckauf, 28 Cal. 288.

5. If one making a special deposit of gold coin afterwards contracts with the bailee to pay him interest on the same, the special deposit is turned into an open account. Howard v. Roeben, 33 Cal. 399.

6. Where the makers of a note and mortgage, subsequently to their execution (being otherwise capable of contracting) entered into the following promise in writing, in consideration that the creditor would forbear to sue: "We promise to pay our indebtedness to Benjamin Belloc in United States gold coin;" it is sufficient to bring the note and mortgage within the operation of the specific contract act.

Belloc v. Davis, 38 Cal. 243.

7. If one of the makers was a married woman such subsequent promise could not be enforced against her personally, nor against her estate, unless the instrument in writing containing the subsequent promise had been acknowledged and certified as required by law. Id.

8. If the beneficiaries of the trust seek to recover by action the value of the property in dispute at the time of suit brought, and not to obtain the amount for which it has been sold, the relief sought is not within the provisions of the specific contract act, and a judgment payable therefor in gold coin will be reversed, unless the plaintiff consents to a modification thereof.

Price v. Reeves, 33 Cal. 457.

9. The act of April 27, 1863, commonly called the "specific contract act," does not authorize the rendition of a judgment to be paid and collected in a specific kind of money, except in an action on a contract or obligation in writing made payable in a "specific kind of money or currency," or in an action for the recovery of money received in a fiduciary capacity or to the use of another.

Reed v. Eldredge, 27 Cal. 236.

10. In an action upon a judgment rendered prior to the passage of the act of April 27, 1863, commonly called the "specific contract act," the court has no power to annex to the judgment rendered an order or direction specifying the kind of money in which payment must be made in satisfaction of the judgment. Id.

11. The act of the legislature of this state, passed April 17, 1863, commonly called the "specific contract law," providing for the enforcement in terms of contracts made payable in a specified kind of money or currency, is not in derogation of, nor does it conflict with the laws of congress making United States notes lawful money and a legal tender in payment of debts; and under said act a judgment may be rendered and enforced, payable in the kind of money specified in the contract or obligation on which it is rendered.

Carpentier v. Atherton, 25 Cal. 564.

12. It only adds one to the cases found in the common law in which it is competent for courts to enforce the execution of contracts specifically. Id.

13. The two hundredth section of the practice act, as amended in 1863, making provision for the entry of judgments in certain cases, payable in a specific kind of money, confers a special authority on courts not known to the common law, or courts of equity, and must be strictly construed.

Hathaway v. Brady, 26 Cal. 581.

GOLD COIN CONTRACTS, ENFORCEMENT OF.

14. One member of a partnership may bind the firm, by a contract in writing, signed by the firm name, to pay a debt of the firm in a specific kind of money.

Meyer v. Kohn, 29 Cal. 278.

15. An account stated, with a memorandum at the bottom, "payable in gold coin (United States), according to contract," and signed by the defendant, is admissible as written evidence of a contract on the part of the defendant to pay in gold coin.

Carey v. P. & C. P. Co., 33 Cal. 694.

17. In an action for money had and received, where an account is introduced in evidence by the defendant, showing a charge by the defendant against the purchasers of plaintiff's claim of "cash" paid to the plaintiff, and the only cash mentioned in the testimony is gold coin, the jury may find a verdict for plaintiff in gold coin.

Wendt v. Ross, 33 Cal. 650.

Galland v. Lewis, 26 Cal. 46.

Meyer v. Kohn, 29 Cal. 278.

20. If, to a note secured by a mortgage duly recorded, payable in money generally, a supplement is afterwards added agreeing to pay in gold coin, which supplement is not recorded, the mortgage can be enforced by a sale for gold coin as against subsequent incumbrancers, whose lien attached after the addition to the note.

Poett v. Stearns, 31 Cal. 78.

21. A tax due for an assessment for improving a street in Oakland, may be assessed upon a gold basis and collected in gold coin.

Beaudry v. Valdez, 32 Cal. 269.

22. If one having a deed, absolute on its face, but intended as a mortgage, goes into possession, and receives gold coin for rent, and sells the property, and receives gold coin therefor, the money is received in a fiduciary capacity, and may be recovered in gold coin.

Gay v. Hamilton, 33 Cal. 686.

CONTRACT IN GOLD COIN OR ITS EQUIVALENT.

Lane v. Gluckauf, 28 Cal. 288.

24. The meaning of such contract is that the maker will pay in gold coin, or, if he does not do so, in legal-tender notes at their gold value. Id.

25. A judgment may be rendered on such contract payable in gold coin alone. Id.

26. A contract to pay money in gold coin of the United States, or the equivalent of such gold coin if paid in legal currency, is a contract to pay the given number of dollars in any kind of lawful money of the United States, and can not be enforced in any specific kind of money. Reese v. Stearns, 29 Cal. 273.

27. The specific contract act does not authorize the entry of an alternative judgment upon such contract payable in gold coin or its equivalent in legal-tender notes. Id.

LEGAL TENDER.

28. United States notes, issued under the act of congress of February 25, 1862, are not receivable for state and county taxes.

Perry v. Washburn, 20 Cal. 318.

29. The constitution of the United States confers upon congress the power to issue treasury notes or bills of credit, not in express terms, but as a power necessarily implied, whenever congress in its wisdom shall determine that it is necessary to issue them in order to carry into effect a power expressly granted.

Lick v. Faulkner, 25 Cal. 404.

30. The act of congress of February 25, 1862, authorizing treasury notes to be issued, and making them lawful money and a legal tender in payment of debts, was an exercise of sovereign authority within the scope of the powers granted in the constitution, "to provide for calling forth the militia to execute the laws of the union, suppress insurrections, and repel invasion," and "to raise and support an army," and "to provide and maintain a navy." Id.

31. The making of treasury notes lawful money, and a legal tender in payment of debts, is one of the means which congress may constitutionally adopt to enable the general government "to raise and support an army, to provide and maintain a navy," and "to provide for calling forth the militia to execute the laws of the union, suppress insurrections, and repel invasion." Id.

32. The act of congress, passed February 25, 1862, making the notes issued under the act lawful money, and a legal tender for the payment of private debts, is constitutional.

Curiae v. Abadie, 25 Cal. 502.

Tarbell v. C. P. R. Co., 34 Cal. 616.

42. In such case the contract is already made and in process of performance, and the kind of money to be paid is no longer an open question. Whether payment in coin might be demanded before the passenger is admitted into the cars and the journey is commenced, not decided. Id.

43. Railroad fares are not taxes, and do not fall within the rule in Perry v. Washburn, 20 Cal. 318. Id.

PERFORMANCE OR ENFORCEMENT OF CONTRACTS.

44. A contract made to pay money generally may be discharged by a tender and payment of either of the three kinds of money

50. Where the kind of money received by the defendant is not in issue, and he has received the same in a fiduciary capacity, or to the use of another, it is proper for the court, upon a verdict for the amount of money, to order judgment in the kind of money received by him.

Pinkerton v. Woodward, 33 Cal. 557.

Spencer v. Prindle, 28 Cal. 276.

58. The two hundredth section of the practice act, as amended in 1863, making provision for the entry of judgments in certain cases payable in a specific kind of money, confers a special authority on courts not known to the common law or courts of equity, and must be strictly construed. Hathaway v. Brady, 26 Cal. 586.

59. A party is not entitled to a judgment in gold coin, unless it is averred in the complaint that there was a contract in writing, or that it was understood and agreed by the parties that payment should be made in that kind of coin.

Watson v. S. F. & H. B. R. Co., 50 Cal. 528.

64. If the complaint does not pray for a gold coin judgment, and the summons does not say that judgment will be taken for gold coin, the clerk should not, on default, render a gold coin judgment.

80. It is error for the court to adjudge the costs in an action of forcible entry and detainer to be paid in gold coin.

Moore v. Del Valle, 28 Cal. 170.

Meyer v. Kohn, 29 Cal. 278.

82. Where, in an action for money had and received, it appeared that the defendant received the sums demanded in gold coin or gold dust, all of which he entered in his account book as "cash," a verdict for plaintiff for said sum "in gold coin" will not be set aside as contrary to the evidence.

SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

1. IN GENERAL.
21. CONTRACT TO CONVEY LAND.
89. TIME AS ESSENCE OF CONTRACT.
99. CONTRACT TO SELL PERSONAL PROPERTY.
104. CONTRACT BETWEEN ATTORNEY AND CLIENT FOR SERVICES.
110. CONTRACT TO TRANSFER STOCK.
115. PAROL CONTRACTS.

IN GENERAL.

1. To entitle a party to a specific performance he must have performed, on his part, every essential of the agreement.

Goodale v. West, 5 Cal. 339.

2. A party seeking to enforce specific performance of a contract must show that he has acted in good faith.

Conrad v. Lindley, 2 Cal. 173.

3. The law supposes that every suitor will state his case as strongly as the facts warrant; and hence the rule that a pleading is taken most strongly against the party making it.

Green v. Covillaud, 10 Cal. 317.

4. The case of Brown v. Covillaud, 6 Cal. 568, which is a case very similar to this, in its main features, disposes of the whole matter of this bill, as it originally stood; and this court feels no inclination to disturb that decision.

Id.

5. A party seeking the legal enforcement of the stipulation of a concurrent obligation of the other party must first show a compliance with his own.

Id.

6. A court of equity is always chary of its power to decree a specific performance, and will withhold the exercise of its jurisdiction in this respect, unless there is such a degree of certainty in the terms of the contract as will enable it at one view to do complete equity.

Morrison v. Rossignol, 5 Cal. 64.

7. Courts of equity will enforce the stipulations of a deed of separation whenever it affects rights to property or income, and sometimes, where the jurisdiction has attached on account of questions relating to property, it will even lend its aid collaterally to enforce its stipulation for a separation.

Joyce v. Joyce, 5 Cal. 161.

8. A bill quia timet, and to enforce the specific execution of an agreement, lies only where there is no adequate remedy at law. But where the damages, resulting from the breach of such agreement, are susceptible of precise admeasurement, equity will not take jurisdiction, unless there are some peculiar equitable circumstances.

White v. Fratt, 13 Cal. 521.

9. A contract should be enforced in every case where the subject is susceptible of substantial enjoyment; provided always, that the circumstances surrounding and connected with the contract bring it within the equitable rules which entitle it to the relief sought, and where the remedy at law is uncertain or insufficient.

Johnson v. Rickett, 5 Cal. 218.

10. The fact that the vendor of land is absent from the state at the time the vendee becomes, by the terms of the sale, entitled to a deed, does not prevent him from giving a deed voluntarily, nor the courts of this state from compelling him to do so, in person, or by a commissioner appointed by the court to act for him.

Rourke v. McLaughlin, 38 Cal. 196.

11. Specific performance will be decreed whenever the parties, or the subject-matter, or so much thereof as is sufficient to enable the court to enforce its decree, is within the jurisdiction of the court. Id.

12. The jurisdiction of a court of equity to decree specific performance does not turn at all upon the question whether the contract relates to real or personal property, but upon the question whether the breach admits of adequate compensation in damages.

Senter v. Davis, 38 Cal. 450.

13. If damages at law will be adequate compensation for the breach, specific performance will not be decreed. If non-performance will embarrass the plaintiff in his business plans, or involve him in a loss which a jury can not estimate with any degree of certainty, specific performance should be decreed. Id.

14. Whether equity will enforce the specific performance of a contract depends, not upon the character of the property involved, as whether it be real or personal, but upon the inadequate remedy afforded by a recovery of damages in an action at law.

Duif v. Fisher, 15 Cal. 375.

15. Equity will not enforce specifically a contract for personal services, especially where they are confidential in their nature and involve in their performance the exercise of discretionary authority, but will leave the party to his remedy at law.

Cooper v. Pena, 21 Cal. 403.

16. Equity will not enforce the specific performance of a contract where the party asking its enforcement can not, from the nature of the contract, be compelled to perform it specifically on his part. Id.

17. In order that a specific performance of a contract may be compelled, the remedy as well as the obligation must be mutual, and, as a general rule, the question of mutuality is to be determined by the contract itself, and is not affected by circumstances arising after the contract is made and the rights of the parties fixed. Id.

18. In cases in which a want of mutuality at the time the contract has been entered into has been held not to be sufficient reason for refusing to enforce it, as in contracts with infants, those between lessor and lessee, trustee and cestui que trust, voluntary settlements, and the like, are exceptionable cases in which peculiar considerations have been allowed to override the principle of mutuality, and they do not contravene the general rule as above stated. Id.

19. The specific performance of a contract is not a matter of course, but rests in the sound discretion of the court upon a view of all the circumstances, and before the court will act it must be satisfied that the contract is reasonable and equal in its operation. Id.

20. In an action for specific performance, the plaintiff, after a decree in his favor which does not designate the time for performance, may demand its enforcement at any time until the statute of limitations becomes available to his adversary.

Redington v. Chase, 34 Cal. 666.

OF CONTRACT TO CONVEY LAND.

21. A., the owner of a lot of land in San Francisco, requested B. to sell the same, and delivered to him the title deed in order to enable him to effect a sale. B. agreed verbally with the plaintiff to sell the land to him, but A. refused to comply with the verbal agreement which B., his agent, had made with plaintiff: Held, in an action by the plaintiff against A. to compel the execution of a deed or the payment of damages, that the agreement was void and could not be enforced, and that defendant A. was not liable in damages.

Harris v. Brown, 1 Cal. 98.

22. Courts of equity have not the power to make contracts for parties, nor alter those which have been deliberately made.

Grey v. Tubbs, 43 Cal. 359.

23. A letter signed by the owner of land, and addressed to A., stating that he has agreed with B. to sell B. the land, and giving the general terms of the agreement, with a general description of the land and its price, is a sufficient memorandum of a contract for the sale of the land within the statute of frauds, and may be enforced by B. in equity.

Moss v. Atkinson, 44 Cal. 3.

24. A specific performance of a contract for the conveyance of land can be enforced only when the contract is in writing, or where there has been part performance of a verbal contract by the vendee.

Hoen v. Simmons, 1 Cal. 119.

25. A party who seeks a specific performance of a verbal contract for the conveyance of real estate should show that he has fully complied with the substance of the contract on his part. Id.

26. Where A. contracted verbally to convey to B. a certain lot of land for five thousand dollars, of which sum one thousand dollars was to be paid down, and the balance in two months, with interest at the rate of two per cent. a month, and the time for the payment of the four thousand dollars had elapsed long before the commencement of the suit: Held, the plaintiff not having paid or tendered the four thousand dollars, with interest, that a specific performance ought not to be decreed. Id.

27. Where the terms of a verbal contract are reduced to writing, but the written paper is neither signed nor delivered, the contract will be deemed inchoate and incomplete, and neither party will be bound by it. Id.

28. A covenant entered into by all the tenants in common who, as such, own a block of land in which they intend to lay out a street through the middle of the block, but which is so drawn as to locate the street at a place not in the middle of the block, can not be enforced according to the intention of the covenantors, without first reforming it so as to make it express the real intention of the parties. De Witt v. Duncan, 46 Cal. 342.

29. The case of Hoen v. Simmons, deciding that a verbal contract of itself alone was insufficient under Mexican law to transfer the title to real estate, affirmed; but where a verbal contract of sale in presenti and the title deeds are delivered by the vendor to the vendee, and permission given to the vendee to enter and take possession of the land, and the vendee did accordingly take possession of and make valuable improvements on the premises: Held, that a specific performance of the verbal contract should be decreed.

Tohler v. Folsom, 1 Cal. 207.

30. Where there has been such part performance of a verbal contract of sale by the plaintiff as to put him into a situation which would operate as a fraud upon him, unless the verbal agreement should be enforced, a specific performance of the contract will be decreed. Id.

31. On a bill for specific performance, defendant allged fraud in the contract sued upon, but admitted payment of the consideration money under protest, affirming the fraud: Held, that the receipt of payment was no waiver of the defense, and that defendant was not estopped from showing the fraud, and that it was error in the court not so to instruct the jury when requested.

Russell v. Amador, 3 Cal. 400.

32. A party entering upon land, under an agreement to purchase, and afterwards abandoning the purchase, disclaiming the title of the vendor, forfeits the benefit of the agreement, and can not, on subsequently tendering the purchase money, claim a specific performance.

Conrad v. Lindley, 2 Cal. 173.

33. An unwritten contract for the sale of land is void, by the express declaration of the statute of frauds, and a court of equity has no power to enforce a specific performance of it. Abell v. Calderwood, 4 Cal. 91.

34. K. entered into a parol contract with L. to convey to L. a tract of land, upon the payment of a stipulated price therefor. L. paid the price as stipulated, and was let into possession. Thereafter, K. brought ejectment to recover the possession of said land, to which action L. pleaded said contract and its said part performance, and prayed judgment for its complete performance on the part of K.: Held, that a judgment for L. as prayed was properly rendered.

King v. Meyer, 35 Cal. 646.

35. An executory contract for the sale of real estate is valid and binding, and can be enforced by the vendee, if signed by the vendor alone.

Vassault v. Edwards, 43 Cal. 458.

36. In a suit for specific performance, the contract must be so free from ambiguity as to leave no reasonable doubt of the intentions of the parties.

Agard v. Valencia, 39 Cal. 292.

37. It must be shown that the contract is fair and just, and that it would not be inequitable to enforce it. Id.

38. In a suit for a specific performance of an agreement to convey lands, the agreement must be one which in all its features appeals to the judicial discretion as being fit to be enforced in specie, as having been obtained without any intermixture of unfairness.

Bruck v. Tucker, 42 Cal. 347.

39. Tenants in common of land are not bound by the acts of a co-tenant in accepting a balance of the purchase money and promising a deed, after the right thereto had become forfeited.

Pearis v. Covillaud, 6 Cal. 617.

40. The lapse of over four years from the maturity of the note, before action commenced for a specific performance, bars the action by limitation, and goes far to make out an abandonment of the purchase by the plaintiff. Id.

41. Where the plaintiff gave his note, payable four months after date, in consideration of which the defendants executed a contract for a deed of land, upon payment of the note: Held, that after a tender of the deed, and demand and refusal to pay the note after its maturity, the plaintiff had forfeited his right to insist on a performance of the contract. Id.

42. Where a party seeks to enforce a contract to convey land to him, if there are circumstances showing culpable negligence on his part, or if the length of time which has been permitted to intervene, together with other circumstances, raise a presumption of an abandonment of the contract, or if the property has greatly enhanced in value, and he has apparently laid by for the purpose of taking advantage of this circumstance, he will not be entitled to a decision in his favor.

Brown v. Covillaud, 6 Cal. 566.

43. In applications of this kind, the party is not entitled to relief as a matter of course, but subjects himself to the equitable consideration of the chancellor, and must show a case free from doubt or suspicion. Id.

44. Where the plaintiffs gave their note to the defendants, payable in one year and only bearing interest at ten per cent. per annum, at a time when the current rate of interest was ten per cent. per month, in consideration of which he received a covenant from the payees to convey them certain land, on the payment of the note at maturity, the low rate of interest raises the presumption that the parties intended that the note should be paid at maturity. Id.

45. Where it appeared that the defendants were desirous to raise money to make certain improvements, for which reason they were anxious to dispose of some of their land, and that the plaintiffs never offered to pay their note so given, until three years after its maturity, during which time the property of one of the defendants had been sold under execution, and the other defendants had been obliged to raise money at a high rate of interest, to meet their obligations respecting this and other property, and had paid all the taxes on the land; while the plaintiffs refused to have the property assessed to them or to pay taxes thereon; that they had ever since the making of the contract been in receipt of the rents and profits of the land, which had greatly enhanced in value since the maturity of their note; and further, that since the maturity of their note, they, with others, had made a written request to the defendants to be allowed to purchase the land occupied by them and the others; all these facts go to show conclusively that the plaintiffs never intended to consummate the purchase unless they found it to their interest to do so. Id.

46. This conclusion is strengthened when the complaint sets up as a reason for the non-payment of the note that the defendants hitherto had been unable to make a "good and sufficient deed," as they had covenanted to do, for the reason that the title to the land in the defendants had only recently been confirmed by the United States land commission. Id.

47. And further, though it might be a defense to an action brought by the vendor to enforce such a contract, that he had no title, the rule can not be invoked in an action brought by the vendee, who has broken his contract, against a vendor who only agreed to convey the interest he had in the land. Id.

48. Courts of equity in this state possess the power to enforce the specific performance of verbal contracts for the sale of land in cases of part performance of such contracts. Arguello v. Edinger, 10 Cal. 150.

49. A court of equity will not enforce a specific performance of the agreement to convey lands when the plaintiff shows no compliance or offer of compliance on his part with the agreement, nor any excuse therefor, for the period of twenty-one or twenty-two months from the time he bound himself to perform.

Brown v. Covillaud, 6 Cal. 571.

Pearis v. Covillaud, Id. 617.

Green v. Covillaud, 10 Id. 317.

50. If, in a case where both the vendor and vendee act through agents in the sale and purchase of real estate, a written memorandum of sale is made by the agent of the vendor, and delivered to the broker of the vendee, and the circumstances show that the broker of the vendee was authorized by him to make the purchase, and that the vendee accepted of the written memorandum to his broker as a delivery to him, and knew what its contents were, the contract will be enforced against the vendee.

Rutenberg v. Main, 47 Cal. 213.

51. The authority of a mere broker, employed to sell real estate, is limited to the power of finding a purchaser satisfactory to the principal; but if the language of the principal, used in making the employment, clearly shows that he intended to give the agent a power more extensive than that of a mere broker, and to authorize him to make a written memorandum of sale, the court will so find, and will enforce the written contract made by him. Id.

52. If the statute authorizes the probate court to compel an administrator to execute a conveyance of real estate, in a case where the intestate had contracted in writing to convey it, the petition asking for a decree compelling the administrator to convey must state that the contract was in writing, in order to give the probate court jurisdiction.

Cory v. Hyde, 49 Cal. 469.

53. The words "and in all cases where such decedent, if living, might be compelled to make such conveyance," inserted in such section by way of amendment to section 205 of the old probate act, do not extend the jurisdiction of the probate court to cases where there was no contract in writing. Id.

54. Section 1597 of the code of civil procedure does not empower the probate court to direct an administrator to perform specifically a contract for the conveyance of land made by his intestate, unless the contract of the intestate was in writing. Id.

55. The question of the extent of equitable jurisdiction which may be conferred on the probate court, as collateral to the main objects for which that court is created, not decided. Id.

56. In ejectment brought by a pre-emptor, based on the patent issued to him, the defendant can not set up, nor will a court of equity enforce an executory contract to convey the land entered into by plaintiff before making proof and payment as a pre-emptor. Huston v. Walker, 47 Cal. 484.

Lowell v. Kier, 50 Cal. 646.

58. Possession of land under an unrecorded agreement with the owner to purchase the same, is notice sufficient to put others on inquiry, and if they buy of the owner, the contract of purchase may be enforced, as against them, in equity.

Moss v. Atkinson, 44 Cal. 3.

59. When a married woman has prior to her marriage entered into a contract which is binding upon her, a specific performance may be decreed notwithstanding her subsequent marriage.

Love v. Watkins, 40 Cal. 547.

60. An executory contract for the sale of the wife's separate property, executed by the husband and wife, in the mode prescribed by the statute defining the rights of husband and wife, is valid and binding on the wife, and may be enforced by a decree of specific performance. Id.

61. Equity will decree specific performance of a covenant in a lease, which provides that the lessee shall have the privilege of purchasing the premises for a fixed sum of money, on or before the expiration of the term. Hall v. Center, 40 Cal. 63.

62. In an action for specific performance against a vendor who refused to make a title, it is not necessary that a deed should be tendered him for his execution.

Goodale v. West, 5 Cal. 339.

63. Lands held by no other tenure than possession may be legitimate subjects of control; and sometimes, in equity, chattel interests or personal property are made the subject of specific performance.

Johnson v. Rickett, 5 Cal. 219.

64. The defendants were not bound to tender a deed and demand the purchase money, in order to avoid the contract. In this state there is no rule on the subject, but in England it is the duty of the vendee to tender a deed.

Brown v. Covillaud, 6 Cal. 566.

65. Where, in pursuance of an agreement to convey land, the grantee presents a different deed to the grantor for execution than that called for in the contract, the grantor must make his objections to the deed when presented, or within a reasonable time, or when possession of the premises is demanded. He can not be permitted to avail himself of it, for the first time, as a defense, when sued for a breach of the covenant. Morgan v. Stearns, 40 Cal. 434.

66. It is the duty of the grantor to prepare, execute, and deliver the deed; the grantee need do no more than tender the purchase money. Id.

67. If the vendor in such a case is unable to perform the entire agreement, and can convey only an undivided half of the land, he may be compelled to convey that interest.

Marshall v. Caldwell, 41 Cal. 611.

68. To constitute a valid tender, the party must have the money at hand, immediately under his control, and must then and there not only be ready and willing, but produce and offer to pay it to the other party, on the performance by him of the requisite condition. Englander v. Rogers, 41 Cal. 420.

69. To entitle the vendee in the case stated to a decree compelling the vendor to convey his undivided half of the land: Id., that it was necessary for him to tender as the purchase money only one half of the contract price. Marshall v. Caldwell, 41 Cal. 611.

70. In proceeding to specifically enforce the contract, it is not incumbent on the defendant to restore, or offer to restore, the possession to the plaintiff; nor is the plaintiff entitled to any portion of the rents and profits accruing since the contract was made. Id.

71. In an action for the specific performance of a trust by the execution of a deed, a demand therefor before suit is only material as affecting costs. Without such demand the action may be maintained, but the plaintiff will not be entitled to costs.

Jones v. Petaluma, 36 Cal. 230.

72. In action for specific performance of contracts of sale, it is to the interest of the parties, at least the losing party, to have a written finding of the facts filed.

Morrison v. Lods, 39 Cal. 381.

73. Nothing can be regarded as a part performance, to take a verbal contract for the sale of land out of the operation of the statute, which does not place the party in a situation which is a fraud upon him, unless the contract be executed.

Arguello v. Edinger, 10 Cal. 150.

74. It would be a fraud, which no court of equity could tolerate, to hold that the vendor of land, on a contract to convey, receiving a portion of the purchase money and seeing the vendee expend large sums improving the property without objection, and not making any demand of the purchase money, should insist, because the vendee had not literally complied with the provisions of his contract on his part, on holding the whole contract forfeited, claim the land and the money paid and all the improvements, and deny all obligation on his part to comply with his engagements.

Farley v. Vaughn, 11 Cal. 227.

75. In such a case, where there has been a compliance with a reasonable understanding of the contract, and no injury done by the want of an exact compliance, a specific performance will be decreed. Id.

76. The following verbal agreement for the sale and purchase of land was made between W., claiming the land under a Mexican grant, and M., who was in possession. W. was to choose one referee and M. another, the two to choose a third, they to appraise the value of the land, which M. was to pay W. upon the confirmation of the grant by the United States land commissioners. The grant was confirmed in 1855, and no offer was made by M. until 1861, when W. brought ejectment for the land, to comply with the terms of the agreement: Held, that under the agreement it was the duty of M., within a reasonable time after the confirmation of the grant by the United States land commissioners, to notify W. that he was ready to execute the agreement and to appoint the referees, and that his failure to do this for five or six years was fatal to his claim for specific performance; held, further, that it was not the duty of W. to notify M. of the confirmation; that the board of United States land commissioners being a public tribunal, whose proceedings were open and notorious, and affecting whole communities, and M. being personally interested in the decision upon this grant, the fact of confirmation was not peculiarly within the knowledge of W., and that hence the case is not within the rule requiring notice from the party having peculiar information; held, further, that the fact that payment for the land was to be made according to the value at the time of the appraisal, and that, therefore, the delay in executing the agreement was not injurious to W., is insufficient to take the case out of the rule refusing specific performance where there has been no unreasonable delay.

Weber v. Marshall, 19 Cal. 447.

77. The party insisting on specific performance must show himself "eager, prompt, ready, and desirous to perform the contract on his part." He must show that he has "used due diligence; or, if not, that his negligence arose from some just cause, or has been acquiesced in. It is not necessary for the party resisting performance to show any particular injury or inconvenience; it is sufficient if he has not acquiesced in the negligence of the other party." Id.

78. Nor does possession by the party seeking performance make the rule different. Id.

78a. Where a party who has executed a deed to lands to secure the performance of his agreement, not in writing, as to pay a certain sum of money in gold coin, and who seeks the aid of a court of equity to have the deed declared a mortgage, and to be permitted to redeem and have a reconveyance of the land, ought to be held to be a full compliance with the terms of the agreement, as a condition precedent to the conveyance, and this by no construction of the specific contract act, but by the application of the maxim, "he who seeks equity must do equity." Cowing v. Rogers, 34 Cal. 648.

79. If A. enters into a contract with B. for the conveyance of a tract of land, whereby B. acquires a right to a conveyance of the entire tract, and B. afterwards assigns to two or more persons, giving to each a separate conveyance of his equitable title to distinct and separate parcels of the land, the assignees of B. may maintain a joint action against A. for a specific performance of the contract. Owen v. Frink, 24 Cal. 171.

80. A contract for the conveyance of land, by the terms of which the purchaser may pay the purchase money either in labor or money, at his option, may be enforced in equity if the purchaser elects to pay in money, and makes a tender of the amount due. Id.

81. In an action to compel the specific performance of a verbal contract to convey land, a decree enforcing specific performance will not be reversed because the court fails to find that the party seeking performance was ready and desirous to perform on his part, provided the findings show such facts as, taken in connection with an offer to pay the price of the land into court, evince a readiness and willingness to perform. Id.

82. An administrator will not be compelled to perform specifically a contract of the intestate to convey land, unless it is found as a fact that the intestate had contracted to convey the particular land described in the complaint. An agreement of the intestate to convey a parcel of his land, when he owned several parcels, without describing any particular tract, will not be enforced. Ferris v. Irving, 28 Cal. 645.

Troy v. Clarke, 30 Cal. 419.

84. A court will not attempt to enforce the specific performance of a contract in writing relating to lands, where the terms of the instrument are so vague and indefinite that it is impossible to ascertain what the contract really is.

Minturn v. Baylis, 33 Cal. 120.

85. In an action, brought in the usual form, to quiet title, the court will not decree a specific performance of an agreement of the defendant to convey to the plaintiff's executor.

Killey v. Wilson, 33 Cal. 691.

86. In an action for specific performance of a contract to convey an undivided interest of a specified quantity of land in a larger tract, all persons subject to the plaintiff's equity, and holding adversely to him, must be made parties to the proceeding.

Agard v. Valencia, 30 Cal. 292.

87. Where there is but one contract and one cause of action under it, there can be but one action, in which the rights of all the parties can be adjusted. Id.

83. In an action by a vendor of land for a specific performance of the contract, and the enforcement of his lien: Held, that the decision of the cause must turn upon the question whether the plaintiff, when he tendered a conveyance of the land to the defendant, had a title thereto such as the parties contemplated at the time they entered into their contract; and held, further, the question turning upon the validity of the patent discussed in the opinion and under which the plaintiff deraigned title, that the patent was valid.

Fletcher v. Mower, 55 Cal. 119.

TIME, AS ESSENCE OF CONTRACT.

89. In construing contracts, it is impossible to prescribe any general and uniform rule by which the question whether the time within which an act is to be performed is of the essence of the agreement, but each case must be decided upon its own circumstances.

Steele v. Branch, 40 Cal. 4.

90. The general rule of equity is that time is not of the essence of the contract. Id.

Vance v. Peña, 41 Cal. 686.

92. Such covenant is broken upon a failure to procure such conveyance within a reasonable time, or to convey to the vendee other lands of equal value; and the statute of limitations will commence running from such breach. Id.

93. If, in a contract for the sale and conveyance of land, it is provided that the purchaser shall pay certain sums at specified times, and that, if he fails to do so, the seller shall be released from all his obligations in law or equity to convey the premises, and the purchaser shall perfect his right to a conveyance, and the purchaser makes default in his payments without excuse, a court of equity will not enforce the contract against the seller. Grey v. Tubbs, 43 Cal. 359.

94. In such contract the parties have made time essential in performing the conditions of the contract, and courts of equity will not inquire into their motive for doing so. Id.

95. In such contract had no time been fixed, the vendee would have been entitled to a reasonable time in which to exercise his election; but the time having been fixed, it is of the essence of the contract, and the court has no power to extend it.

Vassault v. Edwards, 43 Cal. 458.

96. If such contract is extended, in order that the vendor may perfect his title, and the vendee, as soon as the title is perfected, accepts the same and tenders the money, he accepts the vendor's proposal within a reasonable time, and it then ripens into a complete contract of sale. Id.

97. When a deed contained a provision that the grantee within one year from its date should reconvey to the grantor a specified quantity of the land conveyed, to be selected by the grantor, the right to select the land to be reconveyed, and to a reconveyance, is not lost to the grantor by his failure to exercise the right within one year.

Hearst v. Pujol, 44 Cal. 230.

98. Though time is not of the essence of a contract for the sale of real estate, unless made so by the express agreement of the parties, yet in every case it will devolve upon the party seeking relief in a court of equity to account for his delay.

Brown v. Covillaud, 6 Cal. 566.

OF CONTRACTS TO SELL PERSONAL PROPERTY.

99. As a general rule, courts of equity do not enforce the specific performance of contracts for the sale of personal property. When such contracts are enforced by courts of equity, it is not upon the ground of the insolvency of the defendant, but because the character of the property is so peculiar in itself, or its connection with the complainant's business is such that no adequate damages could be given at law.

McLaughlin v. Piatti, 27 Cal. 451.

100. A bill in equity will not lie to enforce the specific performance of a contract for the sale of cattle not possessing any especial value, except as merchandise. Id.

101. The general rule is that specific performance of contracts for the sale of personal property will not be decreed; yet if the thing bargained for is of unusual distinction or curiosity, or is so related to the business of the plaintiff that non-performance will embarrass or impede him in his business, threatening a loss of profits which a jury can not correctly estimate, or the like, specific performance will be granted.

Senter v. Davis, 38 Cal. 450.

102. A party seeking specific performance of contracts for the sale of personal property must state, in his complaint, the peculiar facts upon which he relies as taking his case out of the general rule that specific performance will not be decreed in relation to such contracts. Id.

103. D., being the owner of the right or privilege to deliver a newspaper to subscribers within a certain district, sold to S., at a price agreed upon, to be thereafter paid, and when paid, D. was to give a bill of sale. S. took possession, and paid part of the purchase money, when D. turned him out. S. then sued for specific performance; but no further facts being stated showing why damages would not be full compensation, specific performance was denied. Id.

CONTRACT BETWEEN ATTORNEY AND CLIENT FOR SERVICES.

104. A court of equity will not, for the want of mutuality, refuse to enforce the specific performance of a contract between an attorney and client, by which the attorney undertakes to give his professional services in resisting a motion for a new trial made in the district court of the United States, in a case where a Mexican grant of land has been confirmed to the client, and to procure the dismissal of an appeal if one is taken, and the client agrees to convey to the attorney a portion of the land if he succeeds in his undertaking.

Ballard v. Carr, 48 Cal. 74.

105. If a contract is entered into between an attorney and client, by which the attorney agrees to give his professional services in the matter of a confirmation of a Mexican grant of land in the United States courts; and, if the confirmation becomes final, the client agrees to convey to the attorney a portion of the land, and the attorney, after performing some service, is absent when the case is called in court, and the client employs another attorney to assist in the matter, the client waives a full performance of the contract on the part of his attorney, if he still continues to recognize him as his attorney, and avails himself of his service. Id.

106. If a party appeals to a court of equity for the specific performance of a contract, he must himself do equity, and submit to such terms as a court of equity will impose. Id.

107. If an attorney asks the specific performance of a contract to convey to him land for his professional services, and the client has employed other counsel to assist in the absence of the attorney, equity will allow the client compensation for the services of the counsel, and the amount of the compensation is the value of the services rendered. Id.

108. Although, when an attorney contracts to perform legal services for a client in consideration of receiving a portion of the property about which the litigation is to be carried on, he can not maintain an action for a specific performance while the contract remains unperformed on his part; yet, if he can show a substantial performance on his part he is as fully entitled to maintain such action as if he would be if the agreement on his part had been for the payment of money.

Howard v. Throckmorton, 48 Cal. 482.

109. If a client contracts with his attorney to convey to him a portion of the property in litigation, in consideration of legal services to be rendered, the facts, that the property afterward enhances in value, and that such enhancement is, in a material degree, the result of the labor and money of the client, are no valid objection to a decree for a specific performance of the contract. Id.

OF CONTRACT TO TRANSFER STOCK.

110. C., G. & B. enter into an agreement to form a corporation for commercial purposes. By this agreement and the corporate act subsequently filed, each corporator is entitled to an equal proportion of the stock; G. and B. contribute to the capital in money, and C., having no money, proposes and is allowed to give his note in lieu of money, pledging his stock to G. and B. as security, they agreeing to raise him the money on the stock. It is agreed that the stock due him shall be issued on a given event; the event happens. The note is not made nor the stock issued to him, but the company, controlled by the other two corporators, go on with their business, recognizing C. as a corporator. No demand is made for his note or stock. The corporation makes profit enough to pay the debts, and the share coming to C. pays his contribution to the capital. No stock having been issued to C., he now claims and sues to enforce the specific performance of the agreement: Held, that if G. and B., who were to raise the amount to be contributed by C., having by the agreement the right to demand his note and stock, do not demand them, or issue the stock to him, and without this form of security advance the money which was to be raised, they are to be considered as waiving this formal right, and can not plead the want of a mere literal compliance as a forfeiture of the interest of C. in the common enterprise; that in equity, the substance of the whole transaction was fulfilled; the object of the security answered; and the original right of C. to his stock was not lost by mere failure on his part to give a particular form of security, upon which G. and B., who were beneficially interested in demanding it, did not insist; and that C.'s stock, whether actually issued in the form of a certificate or not, is bound by the agreement, and he is entitled to it.

Chater v. Sugar R. Co., 19 Cal. 219.

111. The general rule, that a court of equity would not enforce a specific performance of an agreement for the transfer of stock, applied particularly to public stocks, such as are commonly bought and sold in the market, and where exact compensation in damages could be awarded by a court of law.

Treasurer v. Com. M. Co., 23 Cal. 390.

112. Where stock is of a peculiar and uncertain value, and where compensation in damages will not afford a party a full and adequate remedy, a court of equity will decree a specific performance.

Id.

113. In this state, courts of equity will decree a specific performance of contracts for the transfer of mining stocks, owing to their fluctuating and uncertain value in market, and the difficulty of substantiating by competent evidence what would be a proper measure of damages.

Id.

114. Where the action is for the recovery of certain shares of mining stock, and if those can not be had, then their value, and during all the time the defendants had an equivalent amount of said stock, one share thereof being equal in value to any other share: Hell, that plaintiff was not entitled to the delivery of the particular shares of stock demanded.

Hardenbergh v. Bacon, 33 Cal. 356.

OF VERBAL CONTRACT.

115. Where there has been such a part performance of a verbal contract of sale by the plaintiff, as to put him into a situation, which would operate as a fraud upon him, unless the verbal agreement should be enforced, a specific performance of the contract will be decreed. Tohler v. Folsom, 1 Cal. 207.

116. If the lessee and lessor enter into a parol agreement with regard to a new lease of the premises the lessee is occupying, and the amount of rent to be paid by the lessee, and improvements made by him and to be made on the premises, and afterwards the lessee executes a lease in writing relating to the same subject-matter, containing terms varying from the parol agreement, a court of equity will not rescind the written lease and enforce the parol contract, nor, unless upon some equitable ground, as mistake, or fraud, will it reform the written lease to make it correspond with the parol contract.

Ewald v. Lyons, 29 Cal. 550.

117. A court of equity will not enforce a parol contract, if, after the same is made, the parties voluntarily enter into a written contract, differing in terms from the parol agreement, nor will it substitute the parol contract for the written one.

Id.

Edwards v. Estell, 48 Cal. 194.

119. If the owner of land makes a verbal agreement with another to lease him the same for one year, with the privilege of two years more, at an annual rent of six hundred dollars, and a lease is to be executed containing the usual covenants, and the lessee takes possession and pays the rent for the first year, the agreement is sufficiently certain to support a decree against the lessor for a specific performance.

Clark v. Clark, 49 Cal. 586.

120. A court of equity will, in a proper case, enforce the specific performance of a parol contract to execute a written lease of land.

McGarger v. Rood, 47 Cal. 138.

121. In an action to enforce a parol agreement to execute a lease of land, where plaintiff has entered into possession and farmed the land under the parol agreement, evidence on behalf of defendant that plaintiff has not properly farmed the land is not admissible, because it does not tend to prove that there had not been such part performance as takes the contract out of the statute of frauds.

Id.

122. Specific performance of parol contract—Purchaser in Good Faith—Conflict of Evidence—Findings.

Jones v. Bryan, 55 Cal. 478.

123. A parol gift of land, followed by possession and improvement of the land by the donee, is so far executed as to entitle the donee to a specific performance; but h-ll, in an action of ejectment, by the grantee of the donor, the defense must be specially pleaded.

2. In order to defeat a recovery on an unstamped note, it must appear that the stamp has been fraudulently omitted.

Hallock v. Jaudin, 34 Cal. 167.

3. An internal revenue stamp on a note, as prescribed by the federal internal revenue laws, is no part of the note. Id.

4. On papers sent up on appeal from justices' courts, no stamp is required under the act of congress requiring "writs or other process on appeal from justices' courts, or other courts of inferior jurisdiction, to a court of record" to be stamped with a fifty-cent stamp. People v. Weston, 28 Cal. 639.

5. The stamps which, by the provisions of the act, are required to be purchased from the state, are to be regarded in no other light than as a tax on the contract for passage, to be paid by the passenger. This is a regulation of commerce, within the meaning of section 8, article I of the federal constitution, and the act is unconstitutional and void. Id.

STARE DECISIS.

1. In reference to mere matters of practice, involving no principle, it is safe to adhere to a rule long established.

Piercy v. Sabin, 10 Cal. 30.

2. The conservative doctrine of stare decisis was never designed to protect innovations upon settled principles of law.

Aud v. Magruder, 10 Cal. 282.

3. In the doctrine of stare decisis some of the authorities use the terms "a series of decisions," "an uninterrupted series," "a long-established rule," and the like expressions; but we apprehend that the language was designed to imply not solely the age of the rule, but its permanent, settled, stable character. Hart v. Burnett, 15 Cal. 607.

4. There is no principle which compels the observance of the doctrine of stare decisis, when a rule well settled and universally acquiesced in has been violated.

Cohas v. Raisin, 3 Cal. 443.

5. In construing statutes and the constitution, the rule is almost universal to adhere to the doctrine of stare decisis.

Scale v. Mitchell, 5 Cal. 401.

6. Though, on questions of practice, previous decisions are entitled to very great weight, still a single decision, made without notice of a statute, and, in fact, setting aside the statute, can not be invoked as authority on the principle of stare decisis.

Duff v. Fisher, 15 Cal. 375.

7. Where a decision of this court was made several years ago, affirming the validity of a deed conveying a large amount of real estate, under which decision important rights may have been acquired, the court will not re-examine the grounds of the decision, but on the principle of stare decisis will allow it to stand.

Heihn v. Courtis, 31 Cal. 398.

8. Where important rights of property had grown up under a decision of the supreme court, and many years have elapsed since the same was rendered, and its correctness has been tacitly admitted in other cases, the question will not be reopened.

Vassault v. Austin, 36 Cal. 691.

9. When a rule by which the title to real property is to be determined has become established by positive law or by deliberate judicial decision, its inherent correctness or incorrectness, its justice or injustice, in the abstract, are of far less importance than that it should, itself, be constant and invariable.

Smith v. McDonald, 42 Cal. 484.

10. The doctrine of Call v. Hastings, 3 Cal. 179, and Stafford v. Lick, 7 Id. 474, that a deed executed before the passage of the act concerning conveyances must, in order to prevail against a subsequent deed taken in good faith, and for a valuable consideration, be first recorded, affirmed on the principle of stare decisis.

Clark v. Troy, 20 Cal. 219.

11. Lathrop v. Mills, 19 Cal. 513, deciding that the statute of March 26, 1856, limiting the time for commencing actions by a patentee was, in this respect, unconstitutional, affirmed on the principle of stare decisis.

Pioche v. Paul, 22 Cal. 105.

12. A rule once established and firmly adhered to, may work apparent hardship in a few cases, but in the end will prove more beneficial than if constantly deviated from.

Giblin v. Jordan, 6 Cal. 418.

13. The judge who, from petty vanity, and for the sake of showing himself more wise and learned than his predecessors, would overturn a rule which for years has settled the rights of property, should be regarded as the common enemy of mankind and unworthy of the high trust which had been confided to him.

Welch v. Sullivan, 8 Cal. 188.

14. The highest regard for the doctrine of stare decisis does not require its observance when a plain rule of law has been violated.

McFarland v. Pico, 8 Cal. 631.

15. When the question upon which the judgment of this court depends is such as may be re-examined on writ of error by the supreme court of the United States, we will follow the rule of law with respect to such question laid down by the supreme court of the United States.

Belcher v. Chambers, 53 Cal. 635.

STATE

1. STATE SOVEREIGNTY.
29. STATE PRISON.
49. STATE CAPITAL.
53. STATE LIBRARY.
55. MISCELLANEOUS.

STATE SOVEREIGNTY.

1. Sovereignty is a term used to express the supreme political authority of an independent state or nation. Whatever rights are essential to the existence of this authority are rights of sovereignty, as the right to declare war, to make treaties of peace, to levy taxes, to take private property for public uses, termed the right of eminent domain.

Moore v. Smaw, 17 Cal. 199.

Fremont v. Flower, Id.

2. In this country, this authority is vested in the people, and is exercised through the joint action of the federal and state governments. To the federal government is delegated the exercise of certain rights or powers of sovereignty; and the exercise of all other rights of sovereignty, except as expressly prohibited, is reserved to the people of the respective states, or vested by them in their local governments. Id.

3. To say that a state of the union is sovereign, only means that she possesses supreme political authority, except as to those matters over which such authority is delegated to the federal government, or prohib-

ed to the states; in other words, that she possesses all the rights and powers essential to the existence of an independent political organization, except as they are withdrawn by the provisions of the constitution of the United States. Id.

4. Sovereignty is a unit that can not in its very nature be divided. It must reside with only one party, and the highest ultimate right to determine the limits and powers of each must belong to that government with which is found the supreme law of the entire nation.

Warner v. Str. Uncle Sam, 9 Cal. 720.

5. When congress admitted California as a state, the constituent members of the state, in their aggregate capacity, became vested with the sovereign powers of government "according to the principles of the constitution," and had the right to prescribe the qualifications of electors.

People v. De la Guerra, 40 Cal. 311.

6. Neither the state in its own person, nor as represented in its local subordinate governments, can be summoned to answer before its courts except by its own consent, nor can its property, in actions in rem, be so summoned. All suits and judgments brought and recovered in the state courts against itself or its subordinate governments, without such consent given, are void.

People v. Doe, G., 36 Cal. 220.

See People v. Talmage, 6 Cal. 258.

7. The power to enforce a limitation upon the power of a state can not be construed to authorize congress to enlarge the limitation if necessary to render it effectual.

People v. Brady, 40 Cal. 198.

8. Congress has not the power to nullify a law of the state, either directly or by preventing its execution. Id.

9. The government of the United States, in the face of the notorious occupation of the public lands in this state by her citizens, that upon the lands they have mined for gold, constructed canals, built saw-mills, cultivated farms, and practiced every mode of industry, has asserted no right of ownership to any of the mineral lands in this state.

Conger v. Weaver, 6 Cal. 548.

10. The mines of gold and silver in the public lands are as much the property of the state, by virtue of the sovereignty, as are similar mines in the hands of a private proprietor. Hicks v. Bell, 3 Cal. 227.

11. The state, therefore, has the sole right to authorize them to be worked, to pass laws for their regulation, to license miners, and affix such terms and conditions as she may deem proper to the freedom of their use. Id.

12. The United States, as owner of land within the limits of the state, only occupies the position of any private proprietor, with the exception of exemption from state taxation. Id.

Overruled in Fremont v. Flower, 17 Cal. 218; Doran v. C. P. R. R. Co., 24 Id. 257.

13. The state has an absolute right to control, regulate and improve the navigable waters within its jurisdiction, as an attribute of sovereignty.

Gunter v. Geary, 1 Cal. 462.

14. The absolute right of a state to control, regulate, and improve the navigable waters within its jurisdiction is an attribute of sovereignty which can not be disputed, and this right may be delegated to individuals either in a natural or corporate capacity. Id.

15. The state holds complete sovereignty over her navigable bays and rivers; and although her ownership is by the law of nations and the common and civil law, attributed to her for the purpose of preserving the public easement or right of navigation, there is nothing to prevent the exercise of her power in certain cases to destroy the easement, in order to subserve the general good, which, when done, subjects the land to private proprietorship.

Eidridge v. Cowell, 4 Cal. 81.

16. The federal government has not only the right of eminent domain, but the fee and the prime and uncontrolled right of disposition of the territory, all of which are attributes of sovereignty.

People v. Folsom, 5 Cal. 373.

17. Sovereignty can never be in abeyance, and until there was some local government organized, either by the people of the territory or some other competent authority, the United States, upon the doctrine of necessity, succeeded to and represented the government of Mexico, so far as the same could be exercised within the purview of the constitution. Id.

18. The sovereign power may, in disposing of lands, annex such conditions to a grant as it sees fit; and in such case a restriction against alienation, inserted in a grant and authorized by law, will not be held void on the ground that it is against the policy of the law.

Suñol v. Hepburn, 1 Cal. 274.

19. The ownership of the precious metals found in public or private lands is not one of the rights of sovereignty which the United States held in trust for the future state. Such ownership stands in no different relation to the sovereignty of a state than that of any other property which is the subject of barter or sale.

Moore v. Smaw, 17 Cal. 200.

Fremont v. Flower, Id.

20. By the common law the right to the mines of precious metals was not an incident of sovereignty, but a personal property of the king, which could be alienated at his pleasure. Id.

21. On the formation of this state, the title to water property passed to this state.

Chapin v. Bourne, 8 Cal. 296.

22. The right of the state to lands under water, where the tide ebbs and flows, is founded upon her sovereign control over the easement or right of navigation; where, therefore, the easement is destroyed, the right of the state ceases, except to prosecute for pre-
 23. The city can not set up a right in the state to defeat a claim against her. If her right, title, and interest in the property has been sold by the sheriff, and the state has any right, the latter can assert it when she chooses to have it ascertained.

Guy v. Hermance, 5 Cal. 74.

23. The city can not set up a right in the state to defeat a claim against her. If her right, title, and interest in the property has been sold by the sheriff, and the state has any right, the latter can assert it when she chooses to have it ascertained.

Smith v. Morse, 2 Cal. 524.

24. The state has the most perfect right to determine what shall constitute evidences of title, as between her own citizens, to all lands within her boundaries, and congress has no power to interfere therein.

Nims v. Palmer, 6 Cal. 8.

25. Money is not the species of property which the sovereign authority can authorize to be taken in the exercise of its right of eminent domain.

Burnett v. Sacramento, 12 Cal. 83.

26. Each state is supreme within its own sphere, as an independent sovereignty.

People v. Coleman, 4 Cal. 46.

27. By well-settled rules of construction the right of the state to regulate commerce is concurrent with that of congress, with the understanding always that all state regulations inconsistent with those of the federal government on this subject give way. Id.

28. The right and jurisdiction to determine finally all controversies between her citizens, and all conflicting claims to property within her limits, is an essential element of sovereignty, which was possessed by each state before the adoption of the constitution, and this right was not surrendered by that compact.

Ferris v. Coover, 11 Cal. 175.

STATE PRISON.

29. The objection to the contract with Estill, under the act of the twenty-first of March, 1856, that it contained stipulations for the release of claims held by Estill against the state, thereby increasing the amount of the monthly payments, can not be raised at this late day, three years having elapsed since the execution of the contract, and it having been in part performed on both sides, and thus acquiesced in and affirmed. State v. McCauley, 15 Cal. 430.

30. The fact that the contract with Estill was signed by the commissioners with their individual names, and not with the name of the state, does not make it defectively executed. The contract purports in its body to be between the state, acting by the commissioners under the act of March 21, 1856, of the one part, and Estill of the other, and is signed by the commissioners with the affix of "Board of state prison commissioners." This makes it the contract of the state and not of the commissioners. Id.

31. Upon this point, the rule applicable to contracts of a private character differs from the rule governing contracts made by agents of the government. Such public agents are presumed to contract, not personally, but officially, within the sphere of their duties. Id.

32. The act of March, 1856, having authorized the commissioners to execute a lease, without prescribing any specific form, or containing any restrictions as to assigning, and the lease being in its terms assignable, and no objections to this form of contract having been made at the time, it is too late to interpose them after the contract has been acted upon on both sides, and thus adopted and approved. The personal liability of the assignor continued after his assignment to McCauley. The security of his bond was not impaired thereby. Id.

33. If some of the covenants of the lease do not bind the assignee, the state can not have relief on that ground. She can claim no greater exemption than an individual from the consequences of an unwise contract. Id.

34. The state can not rescind the contract made with Estill for breaches of the covenants of the lease by him and his assignee, so long as she herself is in default. Id.

35. One party can not violate a contract himself, and then seek to rescind it on the ground that the other party has followed his example. Id.

36. Nor, when the contract has been in part performed, and the parties can not be restored to their original position, can the right of rescission exist. Id.

37. In this case, the state being in default in making the monthly payments under the contract as they became due, and for months previous to this suit refusing to pay at all; not offering to make restitution of the property received of the lessee, or pay the value of the claims relinquished by him at the execution of the contract, or to pay what the complaint shows to be now due; and it not being possible to restore Estill and McCauley to their original position, they having been in possession of the prison for nearly three years, and having performed valuable services, can not claim in equity a rescission of the contract. Id.

38. It is too late for the state to complain that the contract did not exact of the lessee security against breaches thereof, other than the bond of two hundred thousand dollars required by the act of March 21, 1856, or did not reserve to the state the right to re-enter and resume possession of the premises, and control of the prisoners, whenever she deemed proper. Id.

39. Conceding that the board of state prison directors have power to enter into contracts for the employment of convict labor, that power must be limited by the requirements of the act creating the board and prescribing its powers and duties.

Porter v. Haight, 45 Cal. 631.

40. The board of state prison directors have no power under said act to enter into any contract for the employment of convict labor that would deprive it in any degree of the full and exclusive control of the prisoners and prison labor, or of the prison grounds, buildings, and property. Id.

41. If the board of state prison directors enter into a contract for the employment of convict labor, which is not void under the above rule, they have the right to terminate it whenever in their judgment the proper exercise of the powers conferred upon them may require it. Id.

42. Whether the exigency of a particular case requires the board of prison directors to annul a contract they have made for the employment of convict labor is a question which addresses itself to their judgment, and their determination in the matter is in the nature of a judicial and not of a ministerial act, and for which, if they act without fraud or malice, they do not incur personal liability. Id.

43. A contract entered into by the agents of the state, upon a subject within the constitutional control of the legislature, may be affirmed by the state by legislation, indirectly referring to the contract, or proceeding upon its assumed validity. Direct legislative action, in terms designating and affirming the contract, is not necessary.

McCauley v. Brooks, 16 Cal. 11.

44. In the act of April 7, 1856, appropriating moneys to defray the expenses of the prison up to March 28, passed after a copy of the contract with Estill had been transmitted to the senate, the legislature recognized the existence, and, in effect, the validity of the contract, in the provision that no person should receive any pay for supplies furnished under any contract with the directors of the prison, until he surrendered such contract and released the state from all liability for such supplies "furnished after the leasing of said prison by the board of commissioners, under an act passed at this session of the legislature." Id.

45. The contract is not from month to month, but for the entire term of five years, the payments by the state to be made in monthly installments. The consideration advanced by the lessee for these payments is not merely the services rendered each month. It consists of buildings erected and other improvements made. These were not intended for any particular month, but for the entire term. The expenses of them can not be apportioned out and considered as belonging to one or more months rather than others. These expenses probably absorbed the receipts of many months, and for reimbursement the lessee undoubtedly looked to the general profits from the entire contract. Again, large claims against the state were relinquished by the lessee as part of the consideration of the payments by the state, not of one or of several months, but of the entire term. To the general profits of the whole term the lessee looked, as furnishing the equivalent for the relinquishment. Again, the lessee, or the other parties representing him, were entitled to the labor of convicts; and the profits of that labor, in the manufacture of brick or other articles of commerce, during the period the parties were excluded from the prison, may have exceeded the entire expenses of keeping the prison. Id.

46. If the state desire to resume the possession of the state prison, and the control of the convicts, she can do so only in one way, by compensation, as is required in all cases where private property is taken for public use. The leasehold interest is as much property for which compensation is to be made before it can be subjected to the uses of the state, as are lands held in fee. If the state has cause of complaint from the mismanagement of the prison, or any disregard of the stipulations of the contract, she must seek her redress, as individuals in like cases are required to do, by proceeding upon the bond executed as security for the performance of the contract. Id.

47. State of California v. McCauley, 15 Cal. 429, deciding the act of March 26, 1856, appointing a board of state prison commissioners, to be constitutional, and the contract entered into by said board, in behalf of the state, with Estill, and the assignment thereof to McCauley, to be valid and binding upon the state, affirmed. Id.

48. Any wrongs to the state, from mismanagement of the prison, or from disregard of the stipulations of the contract, must be redressed by proceeding upon the bond executed as security for the performance of the contract. Id.

49. The contract only gives the right to have the warrants paid out of the moneys in the treasury not otherwise appropriated. When the warrants are presented to the treasurer, it will be his duty to apply to them the unappropriated moneys in the treasury, and to continue to apply such moneys as they are from time to time received, until the warrants are fully paid. Id.

STATE LIBRARY.

53. The board of trustees of the state library are authorized to draw from the state treasury, at any time, all the moneys therein belonging to the library fund.

State Library v. Kenfield, 55 Cal. 488.

54. Bills for books purchased for the state library are not claims within the meaning of section 660 of the political code, and need not be presented to the board of examiners. Id.

MISCELLANEOUS.

55. The act of May 1, 1854, which creates the office of state printer, and requires the controller to draw his warrant on the treasury for such sums as may be due the state printer, is not a specific appropriation.

Redding v. Bell, 4 Cal. 333.

56. A man dealing with state securities is not bound to search the books and records of state officers before buying claims against the state.

State v. Wells, 15 Cal. 336.

57. The controller may decline to audit the accounts of the state printer, even after they have been approved by the board of examiners, if he is of opinion that the work has not been correctly computed, or that it contains items which are not a legal charge against the state.

Springer v. Green, 46 Cal. 73.

58. Warrants drawn by the controller of state, delivered to the payees thereof and by them indorsed in blank, were presented by the holders to the state treasurer, and on payment were delivered to him. They were afterwards stolen from the office of the treasurer. The warrants, on their face indicating a just and legal claim against the state, came into the hands of defendants, ignorant that they had been stolen. Defendants present them to the treasurer, and in lieu thereof receive state bonds payable to bearer, under the funding act of 1857, and part with them. The state sues for the bonds or their value: Held, that the action does not lie; that defendants, having received the bonds bona fide and without fraud, for warrants apparently good against the state, are not liable in this form of action. State v. Wells, 15 Cal. 336.

59. The mere reception of the bonds, though issued by mistake, does not render defendants liable. Id.

60. Bonds so issued are negotiable, and bind the state, in the hands of an innocent assignee. Id.

61. The acceptance by a collector of taxes, of a warrant, is not a liquidation of the debt, but the receipt of it by the state treasurer, from the collector, would be a liquidation, for which the treasurer would be responsible.

Seofield v. White, 7 Cal. 400.

62. The county government is a part of the state government, which is sovereign. The state government, neither in its general nor local capacity, can be sued by her creditors or made amenable to judicial process except by her own consent. Her creditors must rely solely upon her good faith as to the time, mode, and manner of payment.

Sharp v. Contra Costa Co., 34 Cal. 284.

63. In the absence of any statute to that effect the state can not be sued, and a judgment against her is erroneous.

People v. Talmage, 6 Cal. 258.

64. Neither the governor, nor the attorney-general, has any power to bind the state by a contract to procure the advice of counsel as to the rights of the state in certain property. Id.

65. Services performed for the state under such a contract might be the subject of relief at the hands of the legislature, but are not a legal cause of action. Id.

66. The state, in the contemplation of our theory of constitutional government, can have no interest in asking anything but that which is right; nor can she allow her agents to do so. She is as much interested in protecting the individual citizen as in protecting the mass; so that to address judicial process to the agents of the state does not implead the state herself.

Nougues v. Douglass, 7 Cal. 74.

67. In a case where a citizen claims to be injured by an alleged failure of a state officer to do his duty, the state is not a formal party to the record nor responsible for costs in any event. Nor if the officer had failed to do his duty, can the state be injured by the decision of the court. Neither can she be injured if the officer does his duty, and is sustained by the court. Id.

GENERAL LAWS.

1. The clause in the act requiring the action of the board of examiners to be submitted to a vote of the people in a contingency does not make the act any the less a law. The act took effect as a law immediately, and was not dependent on the action of any other body.

Blanding v. Burr, 13 Cal. 343.

2. Section 14 of the general corporation law of April 22, 1850, making the directors of a corporation jointly and severally liable for the excess of the debts of the corporation, over and above the amount of capital stock actually paid in, being a statute creating a forfeiture, or imposing a penalty, is to be strictly construed.

Irvine v. McKeon, 23 Cal. 472.

3. Where a criminal statute is changed between the time of the commission of the offense and conviction, but contains a saving clause to the effect that it shall not apply to the trial of offenses committed prior to the amended act, the punishment of the prisoner must be regulated by the old law.

People v. Gill, 7 Cal. 356.

4. The best rule of interpretation of the statute (see facts) is to follow the established policy of the government from its origin, which is to make elective all officers of the state, counties, and cities, at the shortest period which the convenience of the public will permit. People v. Brenham, 3 Cal. 477.

5. The statute, so far as it affects the election of 1858, only applies to such offices as were to become vacant in January, 1859, and this is evident as well by the terms of the act as the unreasonableness of supposing that the legislature meant to authorize an election several years in advance of the time when the office was to be filled.

People v. Weller, 11 Cal. 77.

6. The practice act of April 29, 1851, is prospective in its operation, and to give it a retrospect beyond the time of its passage would be in violation of all settled rules of construction.

Thorne v. San Francisco, 4 Cal. 127.

7. Where an act amending the laws of practice is passed, to take effect at some future time, judicial proceedings, intermediate between the passage and the time of taking effect, are governed by the old law.

Reddington v. Waldon, 22 Cal. 185.

8. Statutes for acquiring the jurisdiction of the person by publication of summons must be strictly construed.

Forbes v. Hyde, 31 Cal. 342.

9. Statutes fixing the time for the filing of papers are merely directory.

Wood v. Fobes, 5 Cal. 62.

10. The fourteenth section of the practice act was intended to apply to suits in equity, and not to actions at law.

Andrews v. Mok. Hill Co., 7 Cal. 330.

11. The act of 1861, amending section 422 of the practice act so as to permit parties to testify on their own behalf, was approved May, 1861, but by a general did not go into effect until sixty days after its passage. In an action tried on the thirteenth day of July, 1861, the defendants were admitted as witnesses on their own behalf, in accordance with the provisions of the amendment, to which plaintiffs excepted: He'd, that this was error, for which a judgment in favor of defendants must be reversed.

Reddington v. Waldon, 22 Cal. 185.

12. The eighth section of the act concerning courts of justice, which provides that when a "judgment or order is reversed or modified, this court may make complete restitution of all property and rights lost by the erroneous judgment or order," does not cover the case of a judgment for the recovery of money. It applies only to those cases where the judgment operates upon specific property in such a manner that its title is not changed, as by directing the possession of real estate, or the delivery of documents, or of particular personal property in the hands of defendant, and the like.

Farmer v. Rogers, 10 Cal. 335.

State v. McGlynn, 20 Cal. 233.

14. The act of March 23, 1864, allowing an appeal from a judgment in cases of partition, "which determines the right of the several parties and directs partition to be made," is not retroactive so as to apply to such judgments which had already been entered. Gates v. Salmon, 28 Cal. 320.

15. The word "representative" used in the three hundred and ninety-third section of the practice act, as amended in 1863, applies to the executor or administrator of the estate of the deceased person, and also to the person or party who has succeeded to the right of the deceased, whether by purchase or descent, or operation of law. Davis v. Davis, 26 Cal. 23.

16. The statute which provides a way in which the father of an illegitimate child may make the child his heir, being in derogation of the common law, must be strictly construed. Pina v. Peck, 31 Cal. 359.

17. The act of May, 1853, does not violate that clause of the federal constitution which guarantees to the citizens of each state the same privileges and immunities which they are entitled to in their own state. People v. Coleman, 4 Cal. 46.

18. The revenue law of 1854 authorized the payment of a portion of the taxes in controller's warrants. The acts of 1855 and 1856 provide for the funding of the state debt, and the collection of the revenue in cash, and forbids the treasurer to liquidate any of the debt, except as therein provided: Hebl, that the act of 1854, allowing payment in warrants, was thereby repealed. Scotfield v. White, 7 Cal. 400.

19. Though the legislature can make such disposition of accruing revenue as it deems proper, a construction of a statute which would impair the rights of third parties will always be unwillingly adopted, in the absence of express words to that effect. People v. Williams, 8 Cal. 97.

20. The exception by name of certain counties of the state from the operation of certain provisions of the general road law of 1861, limits the exception, by implication, to the counties specified. Perry v. Ames, 26 Cal. 372.

21. The act of 1856 assumes to divest the rights of the parties in property, vested in them by laws existing at the time they acquired the property, and, further, it denies the owner the right to the rents and profits of land, accruing prior to the date of a patent, although the patent is but a declaratory affirmation of a pre-existing, valid, and acknowledged fact. Billings v. Hall, 7 Cal. 1.

22. A motion against a sheriff and his sureties, under the provisions of the ninth section of the "act concerning sheriffs," passed April 29, 1851, is a summary proceeding, in derogation of the rules of the common law, and is penal in its character; and for these reasons the act must be strictly construed. Wilson v. Broder, 10 Cal. 486.

23. An act of the legislature legalizing assessments for taxes for the fiscal year ending on the first day of March is not void because the constitution provides that the fiscal year shall commence on the first day of July, but the word "fiscal" in the act may be treated as surplusage. People v. Todd, 23 Cal. 181.

24. The statute of enrollments (27 Henry VIII, ch. 16) has never been in force in this state. Chandler v. Chandler, 52 Cal. 267.

25. Whether the statute of uses (27 Henry VIII, ch. 16) has never been in force in this state. Quere? Id.

26. If it is claimed that a statute is not correctly published, or if the fact of its passage is denied, the question is to be tried and determined by the court as one of law, and can not be put in issue and tried as one of fact. Sherman v. Story, 30 Cal. 253.

27. An act of the legislature, properly enrolled, authenticated, and deposited with the secretary of state, is a record which conclusive evidence of the passage of the act, and that the act passed as enrolled. Id.

28. Neither the journals of the legislature, nor the bill as originally introduced, nor the amendments attached to it, nor parol evidence, can be received in order to show that an act of the legislature, properly enrolled, authenticated, and deposited with the secretary of state, either did not become a law in accordance with the prescribed forms, or did not become a law as enrolled. Id.

29. The validity of a public act of the legislature is in no respect impaired by the knowledge or ignorance at the time of the action of the legislature in passing it, on the part of the parties who may be affected by its operation. Oakland v. Carpentier, 21 Cal. 642.

30. Where a statute is in affirmance of the common law it is to be construed as was the rule by that law. Baker v. Baker, 13 Cal. 87.

31. An act which purports on its face to be, and is in fact, a special act, can not be converted into a general act, by a declaration of the legislature in another act, that it shall be considered a general act. San Francisco v. S. V. W. W., 48 Cal. 493.

LOCAL LAWS.

32. The authority by act of the legislature to erect a court-house and jail would necessarily embrace the power to purchase the land on which to erect them. De Witt v. San Francisco, 2 Cal. 289.

33. If the term public improvements in the amended charter could be construed to extend to commercial speculations, then it would be in violation of said section of the constitution, as it would be granting powers to a corporation by a special act for other than municipal purposes.

Low v. Marysville, 5 Cal. 214.

34. The act authorizing the county recorder of Yuba county to be paid out of the county treasury for certain specified services contains no words which raise the presumption that he was to be allowed a preference over other creditors.

People v. Williams, 8 Cal. 97.

35. The act of March, 1851, commonly called the San Francisco water-lot act, should be construed favorably to the city, and includes all land within the boundaries fixed by the survey referred to in the act.

Hyman v. Read, 13 Cal. 444.

36. By an act passed in 1855, constables in El Dorado county were allowed the same fees as sheriffs for like services in criminal cases. In 1859 an act was passed allowing the sheriff of that county fifty cents per mile for travel in making an arrest. In 1860, by a special act making no reference to constables, the sheriff in that county was made a salaried officer, and allowed no fees, section 15 providing that all former acts "conflicting with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed so far as they relate to the said several officers herein named." In 1862 an act amendatory of the act of 1860 was passed, the second section of which provided, as an amendment to section 8 of the original act, that two deputies should be allowed the sheriff, and that "the said deputies or other officers performing such service should receive twenty cents per mile in criminal cases for each mile actually traveled in going only; and section 5 of which declared that "so much of any acts or parts of acts as are inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed;" Held, that the last act applied to constables, and repealed all the provisions of former acts in reference to their mileage in criminal cases, and that they are entitled therefore to only twenty cents per mile for travel in such cases.

Simonton v. El Dorado, 22 Cal. 554.

37. The provisions of a statute which provide for taking the lands of private persons for road purposes must be strictly followed, and the act must be strictly construed.

Curran v. Shattuck, 24 Cal. 427.

38. Where, in one section of a statute, it is provided that the respective boards of supervisors of Solano and Lake counties shall meet, etc., "and upon the receipt of the report of the viewers," etc., "to declare the road as located by the viewers thereof, a public highway," and in the succeeding section of the act it is provided that "when the report of the viewers shall have been received and approved, the said boards of supervisors shall declare the road open," etc.: Held, that the exercise of judgment, if not discretion, is required to approve the report.

People v. Lake, 33 Cal. 487.

39. The act of May 1, 1851, authorizing "the funding of the floating debt of the city of San Francisco," is substantially a trust deed whereby she agrees, on a valuable consideration, to place in the hands of certain trustees so much of her revenue and property, to be applied by the trustees to the redemption of her obligations, in the mode and according to the terms of her agreement.

People v. Bond, 10 Cal. 563.

40. The act being of this character, it was not competent for the legislature to substantially change its terms, without the sanction of the creditors. Id.

41. If an act both authorizes and empowers and makes it the duty of a board of supervisors to contract for a map, it will not be construed as mandatory.

Bowers v. Sonoma, 32 Cal. 66.

42. The thirty-ninth section of the act concerning courts of justice provides that "the clerk of the superior court shall be elected at the next municipal election of the city of San Francisco, and thereafter every two years, by the legal electors of the city of San Francisco, and shall hold his office for the term of two years from and after his election." At the time of the passage of this act, the municipal and general state elections were held on the same day in September. The fourth section of the amended charter of San Francisco provides that the municipal election shall be held on the fourth Monday in May in each year, and at an election held at this time, the relator was elected: Held, that by the thirtieth section of the amended charter the legislature intended that the clerk of the superior court should be elected at the municipal election on the fourth Monday in May, and the relator was therefore properly elected.

People v. Haskell, 5 Cal. 357.

PRIVATE ACTS.

43. An act of the legislature confirming sales of land before then made by a board of fund commissioners, which sales conveyed no title for want of power in the board, is a private statute of which the courts will not take notice as evidence of title, unless offered in evidence.

Ellis v. Eastman, 32 Cal. 447.

RULES OF CONSTRUCTION.

In General.

44. When two laws are passed on the same day in relation to the same subject-matter, they are to be read together as if part of the same act.

People v. Jackson, 33 Cal. 427.

45. It is a well-settled rule of construction that statutes upon the same subject-matter must be construed together, and that a general provision must be controlled by one that is special.

People v. Wells, 11 Cal. 329.

46. Two statutes upon the same subject-matter, passed at different times, which are in pari materia, must be read and construed as one act.

McMinn v. Bliss, 31 Cal. 122.

Merrill v. Gorham, 6 Id. 41.

People v. Broadway W. Co., 31 Id. 33.

47. Where two sections of a law relate to the same matter, both are to be read together, in order to ascertain the intent of the legislature.

Taylor v. Palmer, 31 Cal. 240.

48. Where a law is capable of two constructions, that one must be adopted which will preserve the sense as well of the several parts, as of the whole act.

San Francisco v. Kelsey, 5 Cal. 169.

49. Where a statute is ambiguous, such a construction will be given to it as not to deprive a party of a substantial right.

People v. Hodgdon, 55 Cal. 72.

50. An act authorizing a person to sell the real estate of an infant will not be construed as freeing such person from the supervision of the probate court under the general laws, unless its language clearly and explicitly requires such construction.

Paty v. Smith, 50 Cal. 153.

51. An act attempting to validate a void assessment on a lot in a city for a street improvement, if it has that effect, does not, by relation, make the assessment valid as of the date when it was levied, but only validates it at the date of the passage of the act.

Reis v. Graff, 51 Cal. 86.

52. Sections 3233 and 3234 of the political code, which relate to labor and materials on public buildings, seem to refer exclusively to the buildings of the state.

Babcock v. Goodrich, 47 Cal. 488.

53. The laws passed at the session of 1871-72 must prevail over the codes which were adopted at the same session. Id.

54. Language in a statute conferring franchises on a corporation, which is not free from doubt, is to be construed to the benefit of the public rather than to that of the corporation.

S. V. W. W. v. S. F., 52 Cal. 111.

55. The passage of a certain preamble and resolution by the board of supervisors held not to be the exercise of the judicial function; it was an attempt to make law, not to render a judgment under the existing law. S. V. W. W. v. Bryant, 52 Cal. 132.

56. An act authorizing and empowering a board of supervisors of a city to keep its streets clean by employing men and carts for that purpose, and by using the labor of persons sentenced or committed to the house of correction, does not compel the board to adopt the system which it provides for.

Weed v. Maynard, 52 Cal. 459.

57. If such act does not repeal a former act empowering said board to keep the streets clean in such mode and manner as it may deem best, the board, after its passage, may still exercise its discretion as to the mode and manner of cleaning. Id.

58. If, upon the face of an act, the legislative intent is ambiguous, a judicial reference may be had to the title of the act to assist in determining its meaning. Id.

59. The act of March 4, 1870, is not mandatory, but permissive; and in solving the question, the whole and not detached portions of it must be considered.

Harris v. San Francisco, 52 Cal. 553.

60. The words "authorized and empowered to appropriate, allow, and order paid out of the general fund," etc., do not show an intention that the act should be mandatory. Id.

61. Until the claim had been allowed and ordered paid by the board of supervisors, neither the auditor nor treasurer had authority to act. Id.

62. Under the fourth section of the act of April 1, 1876 (cited in the opinion), "to provide for a supply of water for the university and for the asylum for the deaf, dumb, and blind," the power to approve or disapprove of the appraisal, made under the act, is vested in the governor, and his discretion in the matter can not be controlled by mandamus.

Berryman v. Perkins, 55 Cal. 488.

63. The act of March 27, 1874 (stats. 1873-4, p. 711), authorizing and requiring the board of supervisors of the plaintiff to sell at public auction all of Channel street and Mission creek, except so much thereof as might be required for a street and sewer, and providing that the deed of the mayor to the purchaser of any lot, should vest the title in such purchaser, did not operate as a grant to the plaintiff.

San Francisco v. Ellis, 54 Cal. 72.

64. On May 1, 1851, the legislature passed two acts, one to regulate proceedings in criminal cases, the other to regulate fees in office, both fixing the fees of the clerk in criminal cases, and essentially different: Head, that the latter act must govern, as the subject of fees was the sole object of that act, and the fixing of fees in the former act being a mere incident, the main purpose of the act being to regulate criminal proceedings.

Dobbins v. Yuba Co., 5 Cal. 414.

65. If a part of an act which is not subject to constitutional objections can be separated from the remainder, such part may be enforced, regardless of the remaining sections. Kood v. McCargar, 49 Cal. 117.

66. The forty-fifth section of the revenue act of 1861, relating to the effect of a deed of land sold for taxes, has not been repealed. Mayo v. Haynie, 50 Cal. 70.

67. Statutes of the several states, regulating remedies by means of judicial proceedings, are to be understood as intended to apply only to proceedings in the courts of the particular state where adopted, unless it clearly appears they were intended to have a wider scope. Majors v. Cowell, 51 Cal. 478.

68. A state statute regulating remedies and proceedings in courts, will not be construed as furnishing remedies to suitors in federal courts, unless it clearly appears from the statute that it was intended to have that effect. Id.

69. If a claim against a county is barred by the statute of limitations, and the legislature passes an act requiring the board of supervisors to act upon and reject or allow it, notwithstanding the bar of the statute, the act does not have the effect of legalizing the claim, if it is illegal. Domingos v. Sacramento Co., 51 Cal. 608.

70. Although a statute may be conditional, so that its taking effect may depend upon a subsequent event which may be named in it, yet this event must be one which shall produce such a change of circumstances that the law-makers, in their own judgment, can declare it wise and expedient that the law shall take effect when the event shall occur. Lx Parte Wall, 48 Cal. 270.

71. When the legislature passes a law, it must pass entirely upon the question of its expediency; and it can not say that a law shall be deemed expedient, provided that the people afterwards, by a popular vote, declare it to be expedient. Id.

72. A statute to take effect upon a subsequent event must, when it comes from the hands of the legislature, be a law in presenti to take effect in futuro. On the question of the expediency of the law, the legislature must exercise its own judgment, definitely and finally. Id.

73. The rule that penal statutes must be strictly construed has been abolished in this state by the penal code. People v. Soto, 49 Cal. 67.

74. Section 2390 of the political code, which authorizes either of disagreeing parties as to damages for drifted lumber to select "two disinterested citizens of the county, who may hear proofs and determine" the damages, does not impose any duty on either party, because it does not propose an intelligible mode of selecting appraisers. Flanders v. Locke, 53 Cal. 21.

75. The right to resort, at the trial of an action for the conversion of personal property, to an arbitrary presumption of detriment was not, previous to the trial at which the presumption would have arisen, a "right acquired" within the meaning of section 286 of the amendments to the civil code, which took effect July 1, 1874.

Tully v. Tranor, 53 Cal. 274.

76. The commencement of an action before the "amendments" took effect was not a "proceeding taken" within the meaning of the section aforesaid. Id.

77. The volume of statutes continued in force, published by the code commissioners, has not received the legislative sanction, and is not, therefore, authority. Needham v. Thresher, 49 Cal. 392.

78. To determine the true interpretation of the terms of a doubtful or ambiguous section, it is proper to read it in connection with others in the same act dealing with the same general subject. People v. White, 34 Cal. 183.

79. The intent or proper construction of an act of the legislature which took effect upon the contingency of receiving a majority of the votes of the electors of a municipal corporation, is not to be determined by the views entertained of its provisions by the electors when they adopted it. French v. Teschemaker, 24 Cal. 518.

80. Courts will uphold where it is possible a contemporaneous interpretation of a statute under which interpretation rights of property have for many years been acquired. Will of Warfield, 22 Cal. 51.

81. Statutes should be construed according to what appears to be the intention of the legislature, and even though two statutes relating to the same subject be not in terms repugnant or inconsistent, if the latter statute was clearly intended to prescribe the only rule which should govern, it will be construed as repealing the original act. Sacramento v. Bird, 15 Cal. 294.

82. The motives of a member of the legislature in moving, or of the body of which he is a member, in passing a legislative act, is not a proper subject of judicial inquiry. Harpending v. Haight, 39 Cal. 189.

83. In construing a statute, it is an invariable rule to start out with the assumption that some effect is to be given, if possible, to every provision of the law to be construed. People v. Waterman, 31 Cal. 412.

Souter v. Sea Witch, 1 Id. 162.

San Francisco v. Kelsey, 5 Id. 169.

Smith v. Randall, 6 Id. 47.

Seabury v. Arthur, 28 Id. 142.

Appeal of N. B. & M. R. Co., 32 Id. 499.

Burr v. Dana, 22 Id. 11.

Gates v. Salmon, 35 Id. 576.

Cheever v. Hayes, 3 Id. 471.

People v. Southwell, 46 Id. 139.

84. It is a universal rule of construction that courts must find the intent of the legislature in the statute itself. Unless some ground can be found in the statute for restraining or enlarging the meaning of its general words, they must receive a general construction, and the courts can not arbitrarily subtract from or add thereto.

Tynan v. Walker, 35 Cal. 634.

85. In the construction of statutes for the purpose of ascertaining the legislative intent, regard is to be had not so much to the exact phraseology in which that intent has been expressed, as to the general tenor and scope of the entire legislative scheme embodied in the statute.

Palache v. Pacific Ins. Co., 42 Cal. 418.

86. If it appears from the language of an amendatory act, and of the act which is amended, that by the words "board of underwriters," used in the former, the legislature meant "board of fire underwriters," the court will construe it as intended.

In re Bulger, 45 Cal. 553.

In re Merrill, Id.

87. In construing a statute, all parts of the act must be considered, in order to ascertain from the whole what was the real intent of the legislature.

People v. San Francisco, 36 Cal. 595.

88. Although it may appear from the first section of an act that it was not intended to be mandatory, yet if the other provisions of the act are wholly inconsistent with this hypothesis, the act will be held to be mandatory.

Id.

89. The rule of the common law, that penal statutes should receive a strict construction in favor of him upon whom a penalty was to be inflicted, has been abrogated by the code, which has constituted itself, in this respect, its own interpreter.

Ex parte Gutierrez, 45 Cal. 429.

People v. Soto, 49 Id. 67.

90. Statutes should be so construed as to avoid absurd results, not within the evil to be remedied, and evidently not within the contemplation of the legislature.

People v. Turner, 39 Cal. 370.

91. In construing a statute, the sections must be taken together, and that interpretation should be placed upon the language, which will give the particular section utility and effect, make it compatible with common sense, and the plainest principles of justice.

Burnham v. Hays, 3 Cal. 115.

92. The consideration of the justice or policy of a statute, and its effect upon the general welfare of the state, is addressed to the discretion of the legislature, and, having been decided by the legislature, is not a proper subject of judicial inquiry.

Billings v. Hall, 7 Cal. 1.

93. It is the duty of the courts, to ex-cute all laws according to their true intent and meaning; that intent, when collected from the whole and every part of the statute taken together, must prevail, even over the literal sense of the terms, and control the strict letter of the law, when the letter would lead to possible injustice, contradiction and absurdity.

Ex parte Ellis, 11 Cal. 222.

94. The meaning of an act is to be ascertained, not from the debates which took place on its passage, but from the language of the act.

McGarrahan v. Maxwell, 28 Cal. 75.

Knowles v. Yeates, 31 Cal. 82.

96. Statutes in derogation of the common law should be construed strictly, especially when they open a door to fraud.

Hotaling v. Cronise, 2 Cal. 60.

People v. Buster, 11 Id. 215.

But see Ex parte Gutierrez, 45 Cal. 429; Turner v. Tuolumne W. Co., 25 Id. 397.

97. Opinions expressed by individual legislators upon the object and effect of particular provisions of an act under discussion, are entitled to little weight in the construction of the act. The intention of the legislature must be sought in the language of the act, and the object expressed or apparent on its face.

Leese v. Clark, 20 Cal. 387.

Calaveras Co. v. Brockway, 30 Cal. 325.

99. If a section in an amendatory or supplementary act refers to a section of the act amended or supplemented by number, and the section referred to does not express the legislative intent, but another section is found which does express that intent, the reference will be treated as being made to the latter section.

People v. King, 28 Cal. 265.

100. When a statute assumes to specify the effects of a certain provision, courts will presume that all the effects intended by the law-maker are stated.

Perkins v. Thornburgh, 10 Cal. 189.

101. In construing a particular section of a statute, it should be considered together with the other sections, and its language so interpreted as to give to it utility and effect, and to make it compatible with common sense and the dictates of justice. Cullerton v. Mead, 22 Cal. 95.

102. The general rule is that a proviso which is clearly repugnant to the body of an act is void. But, in construing statutes, it is the duty of the court to reconcile, if practicable, apparently conflicting provisions, so as to carry into effect the intention of the legislature as it appears from the whole act, and from contemporaneous legislation. Pond v. Maddox, 38 Cal. 572.

103. If it clearly appears, from all the sources of interpretation, that a provision of a statute was inserted through inadvertence, it will be disregarded. Id.

104. The act to prohibit lotteries, etc., passed April 24, 1861, and the act to aid the mercantile library association of San Francisco, passed February 19, 1870, are not repugnant in the sense of the rule which would construe the last act as a repeal of the first. Ex parte Smith, 40 Cal. 419.

105. Where an act of the legislature recognizes the existence of a general law upon any subject, and attempts to create an exception, the exception is not repugnant to the general law, or if it be, it is only to the extent of the exception. Id.

106. Legislative acts compelling municipal bodies to make improvements of a local character, may not only be passed, but will receive as liberal a construction as other acts. People v. San Francisco, 36 Cal. 595.

107. Legislative enactments, or municipal ordinances, "to prohibit noisy amusements, and to prevent immorality," are not repugnant to the constitution of the United States, nor to the constitution of the state. Ex parte Smith, 38 Cal. 702.

108. The seventeenth subdivision of section 433, article VI of the political code, repeals the provision of section 6 of the act of 1869-70, in respect to the duty of the controller to draw warrants in payment of salaries of the tide land commissioners. Stratton v. Green, 45 Cal. 149.

109. If a statute providing for the organization of a new county contains no provisions in relation to official bonds, they must be given in conformity to the general law upon that subject. People v. Ross, 38 Cal. 76.

110. The act of the legislature of this state (stats. 1867-8, p. 708), allowing those who have put improvements on lands of the United States, to remove the same within six months after the lands shall have become the private property of any person, in so far as it relates to improvements which are a part of the realty, is void, because in conflict with the act admitting this state into the union. Collins v. Bartlett, 44 Cal. 371.

111. There is a typographical error in the statutes of 1851, page 443, section 31. As printed, said section repeals the act of April 22, 1850, concerning railroad corporations. The enrolled act only repeals the third chapter of said act of April 22, 1850.

Brewster v. Hartley, 37 Cal. 15.

112. The second section of the act of 1868, "for the encouragement of silk culture," shows that the act of 1866, on the same subject, was not repealed for all purposes; but so much of it was left in force as was for the benefit of those who had, at the time of the passage of the act of 1868, already planted mulberry trees under the encouragement of the act of 1866.

Atty. Genl. v. Board of Judges, 38 Cal. 291.

113. By the act of 1866, it was the intention of the legislature to give for each farm or assemblage of mulberry trees of the age of two years—amounting to five thousand or more—a premium of two hundred and fifty dollars. Id.

114. Under that act, the state board of judges had no jurisdiction to allow a premium for a half of a plantation; or to subdivide a plantation, and denominate each subdivision a plantation, and award a premium therefor. Id.

115. An act which provides that it shall be the duty of the board of supervisors, within a certain time, to proceed and let a contract for a local improvement, and prescribes what the improvement shall be, leaving nothing to the discretion of the board, is mandatory on the board. People v. Supervisors, 36 Cal. 595.

116. The act of 1868, providing for the election of supervisors in Sacramento county, repealed so much of the act of 1863 as authorized an election to be held for three of the districts in 1869, and the ballots cast at that election for supervisors for those three districts were void. Christy v. Supervisors, 39 Cal. 3.

117. A statute declaring that a board of supervisors shall not be sued in any action whatever, but that it may be proceeded against by mandamus, does not change the essential nature or office of the writ itself. Tilden v. Sacramento Co., 41 Cal. 68.

Title of an Act.

118. It is well settled that the title of an act is no part of the law itself, although it may be referred to in case of doubt to ascertain the intention of the legislature. Cohen v. Barrett, 5 Cal. 195.

119. The title of an act can not be used to restrain or control any positive provision of the act, but where the meaning of the body of the act is doubtful, the title may be resorted to as a means of ascertaining the intention of the legislature. Flynn v. Abbott, 16 Cal. 338.

120. The title of an act in cases of doubt may be referred to as tending to elucidate the intent of the legislature, but it is never permitted to control the body of the act.

People v. San Francisco, 36 Cal. 505.

121. While the title of an act will not control the language of the statute in the body, it may be referred to as tending to explain the intention of the act when the language is doubtful.

Barnes v. Jones, 51 Cal. 303.

122. The head-notes to the chapters and titles in the practice act are entitled to more consideration in explaining the intention of the different sections, where the language is doubtful, than the title of the entire act. Id.

123. While the title can not be resorted to to control the body of a statute, yet in doubtful cases it may be referred to as an aid in construing doubtful clauses; and as the act in question is entitled "an act to confer additional powers," etc., it may be inferred that additional powers only were intended to be given, and that it was not the intention of the legislature to compel the board of supervisors to allow a claim without examination.

Harris v. San Francisco, 52 Cal. 533.

124. When the language of an act is plain, the title can not be resorted to for the purpose of restraining that language.

In re Boston M. & M. Co., 51 Cal. 624.

125. In construing statutes, resort is sometimes had to the title, as tending to throw some light upon the intention of the legislature, in very doubtful cases; but, in any case, it is entitled to but little weight, and is never allowed to enlarge or control the language in the body of the act.

Hagar v. Yolo Co., 47 Cal. 222.

Approval of Statutes.

126. The constitution provides that if any bill presented to the governor (having passed both houses of the legislature) shall not be returned within ten days after it shall have been presented to him, Sundays excepted, the same shall become a law in like manner as if he had signed it, unless the legislature, by adjournment, prevent such return.

Price v. Whitman, 8 Cal. 412.

127. In approving a statute, the executive acts as a component part of the law-making power, and his power of approval ceases on the adjournment of the legislature.

Fowler v. Peirce, 2 Cal. 165.

Time in Statute Directory.

128. Where time is prescribed to a public body in the exercise of a function in which the public is concerned, the time designated is merely directory, unless there are negative words restraining the exercise of the power to that time. Tuohy v. Chase, 30 Cal. 524.

129. Where an act of the legislature contains no provisions limiting its operation upon any contingency, and it is impossible to take the initial step in its execution within the time prescribed in the statute: Id., that the provision in respect to the time of taking said step is directory merely. Where a statute specifies the time at or within which an act is to be done, it is usually held to be directory, unless time is of the essence of the thing to be done, or the act contains negative words, or shows that the designation of the time was intended as a limitation of power, authority, or right.

People v. Lake Co., 33 Cal. 487.

130. Provisions in a statute in regard to the time within which an act is required to be done, are generally to be construed as directory, but such a construction is improper where a consequence is attached to a failure to comply with the statute.

Shaw v. Randall, 15 Cal. 384.

Amendments.

131. A general statute, controlled in some of its provisions by a subsequent special statute, is revived by the amendment of the latter, intended to give effect to the former; and though the first statute gave jurisdiction to a court which could not constitutionally exercise it, the act becomes effectual by an amendment, passed still later, transferring the jurisdiction to the proper body.

People v. Phoenix, 6 Cal. 92.

132. Under the constitution of this state, the amendment of a statute operates as an absolute repeal of the old statute or section so amended, even if the amendment takes nothing away from the old law, but merely adds a proviso in certain cases.

Billings v. Harvey, 6 Cal. 381.

Particular Words and Phrases.

133. Where the statutes use words and phrases of a well-known and definite meaning in the law, they are to be expounded in the same sense in the statute.

Harris v. Reynolds, 13 Cal. 514.

Sprague v. Norway, 31 Cal. 173.

135. The words of a statute must be interpreted according to their common acceptation.

Quigley v. Gorham, 5 Cal. 418.

136. In construing statutes, the rule is that general words are controlled by specific exceptions.

Lucas v. Payne, 7 Cal. 92.

137. It is a rule of construction of statutes that some effect, if possible must be given to every word, and certainly to every distinct provision of the act.

Langenour v. French, 34 Cal. 92.

138. When two acts are in pari materia.

or one is an amendment of the other, it will be presumed that a word used in a certain sense in the first act was used in the same senso in the subsequent one.

Robbins v. O. R. R. Co., 32 Cal. 472.

130. In construing statutes words are to be taken in their usual and popular sense, unless they have a well understood technical meaning; and if practicable, effect should be given to all the words and provisions of the statute.

Appeal of Houghton, 42 Cal. 35.

140. The words "final and conclusive," in the act of 1870, apply to the county court only, and do not prohibit an appeal to the supreme court. Id.

141. The courts will not permit an erroneous punctuation of a statute in printing it, to have the effect of giving it an absurd construction.

Randolph v. Bayne, 44 Cal. 366.

142. The words "payments and offsets" are substantially equivalent in meaning to the words "credits and offsets," as employed in the fifth section of the act.

Preston v. Sonora Lodge, 39 Cal. 116.

143. A word repeatedly used in a statute will bear the same meaning throughout the statute unless it is apparent that another meaning is intended.

Pitte v. Shipley, 46 Cal. 154.

Hoag v. Howard, 55 Id. 564.

144. In a proceeding for a writ of mandamus to compel the defendants to sell or fix the price of certain lots fronting on a new street opened through the market plaza of the city of San Jose, under the act of March 4, 1878 (stats. 1877-8, p. 163): Held, that the statute did not enjoin upon the defendants a duty to sell the lots in question, but simply conferred upon them the power to sell or not to sell, as they should deem best for the interests of the city.

Coopers v. San Jose, 55 Cal. 599.

145. The meaning of the terms "Allowed" and "Provided" construed.

Schmitt v. Dunn, 55 Cal. 651.

Retrospective Statutes.

146. A statute should be construed so as to take effect upon future, and not upon past transactions; but with the exception of cases within prohibitory clauses, in state constitutions, or in the constitution of the United States, it is competent for a state legislature to give to a statute a retroactive effect.

Von Schmidt v. Huntington, 1 Cal. 55.

147. No statute should be so construed as to give it a retrospective effect to divest the rights of individuals vested previous to its passage, or previous to the time the act took effect, unless such intention be expressed in terms. Thorne v. San Francisco, 4 Cal. 127.

148. Statutes should not be so construed as to give them a retroactive operation, unless it is clearly apparent that such was the intention. Gates v. Salmon, 28 Cal. 320.

149. Where a statute is declared to take effect from and after its passage, it takes effect at the very moment of its approval by the governor; and for the purpose of determining the right to an office, it is competent to inquire at what particular point of time in the day an act was approved by the governor. People v. Clark, 1 Cal. 406.

Remedial Statutes.

150. Where both the right and the remedy are given by statute, that remedy alone can be pursued. People v. Craycroft, 2 Cal. 243.

151. Where a new right is created by statute, the party complaining of its violation is confined to his statutory remedy, so far as the courts of common law are concerned. If, however, the right existed at common law, the remedy provided by statute is merely cumulative.

Ward v. Severance, 7 Cal. 126.

152. Where a statute provides a remedy not known to the common law, and by which no personal notice to the person proceeded against is required, the statute should receive a strict construction and not be extended to cases which do not clearly fall within its language.

Souter v. Sea Witch, 1 Cal. 162.

153. Remedial statutes should be beneficially construed.

Kent v. Laffan, 2 Cal. 595.

154. Remedial statutes must be construed liberally, and where the meaning is doubtful, it must be so construed as to extend the remedy.

White v. Tug Mary Ann, 6 Cal. 462.

Cullerton v. Mead, 22 Id. 95.

156. An act of a remedial character should receive, having due regard to the language in which it is expressed, a liberal construction, which will bring within its scope every case which comes clearly within its spirit and policy. Wallace v. Mooly, 26 Cal. 387.

157. The right to regulate the mode of redressing injuries belongs to the legislature, but when, under the semblance of a change of the remedy, a substantial existing right is defeated, impaired, or abridged, the act is null and void. Billings v. Hall, 7 Cal. 1.

REPEAL OF STATUTES.

In General.

158. Where the charter of an old hospital was repealed, and a charter granted to a new one, the officers of the former were directed to deliver to the trustees of the latter "all property, real and personal, held by them in trust for the old institution." And the same act makes it the duty of the new institution, "to pay out of any funds which may come into its hands, all of the debts which may be owing by the old one." The new corporation is bound to pay all such debts, without regard to the sufficiency of the fund derived from the corporation.

Johnson v. Hospital, 2 Cal. 319.

159. Where a general repealing statute is passed, and on the next day a supplementary act is passed, excepting certain counties from the operation of the repeal, to a certain extent: Held, that the case was a special one, and there being no doubt of the true intention of the legislature, the supplemental act must be regarded as a part of the repealing act, and must be given the same effect as if passed on the same day. So held in the construction of the act of April 29, 1857, repealing the then existing law concerning ex-sheriffs, as tax collectors, and requiring them to turn over the assessment rolls to their successors, taken in connection with the act of April 30, excepting certain counties from the operation of the repealing law of the day previous. Manlove v. White, 8 Cal. 376.

160. Where a statute repeals or super-sedes certain sections of a previous statute, a mere declaration in a still subsequent statute that the repealing statute shall not repeal these sections, is not a law reviving them or enacting them. There can be no law without a legislative intent that it become a law; and such intent must be manifested by language declaring the legislative will.

State v. Conkling, 19 Cal. 501.

161. Where a statute contains a clause repealing all laws and parts of laws in conflict with its provisions, a previous act upon the same subject-matter, the material provisions of which are repugnant to and irreconcilable with those of the new act, is repealed by it, unless the terms of the subsequent act show an intention to keep the previous one in force.

People v. Grippen, 20 Cal. 677.

162. An act containing a clause repealing all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with its provisions, but not repealing by name a previous act on the same subject-matter, leaves in force all such portions of the previous act as are not in conflict with its provisions.

People v. Durick, 20 Cal. 94.

163. A repeal of a statute under which alone a right of action exists, operates as an extinguishment of actions pending when the repeal takes effect, unless there is a subsequent law which enables the court to try and determine them.

McMinn v. Bliss, 31 Cal. 122.

164. The repeal of an act repealing a former act does not revive the former act, or give it any force or effect. To revive such former act it must be re-enacted.

People v. Hunt, 41 Cal. 435.

People v. Tyler, 36 Cal. 522.

165a. The repeal of a statute effectually annuls all proceedings had under the act repealed, unless the obligation of a contract would thereby be impaired, or a vested right destroyed: Held, accordingly, that all the proceedings under the Rogers act, above referred to, were annulled by the repeal of the act, and that therefore it would be neither necessary nor proper for the court to proceed further with the case.

Lamb v. Schoottler, 54 Cal. 319.

By Implication.

Scotfield v. White, 7 Cal. 400.

People v. S. F. & S. J. R. Co., 28 Id. 254.

167. A statute may be repealed by implication; and where a subsequent act is repugnant to a prior one, the last operates, without any repealing clause, as a repeal of the first; and where two acts, passed at different times, are not in terms repugnant, yet if it is clearly evident that the last was intended as a revision or substitute of the first it will repeal the first to the extent in which its provisions are revised or substituted.

Pierpont v. Crouch, 10 Cal. 315.

Crosby v. Patch, 18 Cal. 438.

169. Where a subsequent statute repeals in direct terms certain sections of a former statute, upon the same general subject, it is equivalent to a declaration that the remaining sections shall be in force, there being no necessary repugnancy between such remaining sections and the subsequent statute. Id.

170. Cases cited upon the rules applicable to the repeal of statutes by implication. Id.

171. A statute may be repealed by express words, or by necessary implication. The latter takes place whenever, by subsequent legislation, it becomes apparent that the legislature did not intend the former act to remain in force.

Christy v. Sacramento, 39 Cal. 3.

172. An act of the legislature is repealed by a subsequent act, when it appears from the last act that it was intended to take the place of or repeal the former, and when the two acts are so inconsistent that effect can not be given to both.

Ex parte Smith, 40 Cal. 419.

People v. Burt, 43 Id. 560.

People v. Burt, 43 Cal. 560.

174. If a section of an act is amended and published at length in a subsequent act, and the original section is again amended and published at length in a still later act, which repeals the first amendatory act, the last act is only an amendment of the original section, although it does not refer to the first amendatory act except in the repealing clause. Kimball v. Supervisors, 46 Cal. 19.

175. An act authorizing the board of supervisors of a county to levy and collect, for county school purposes, a rate of taxation which will produce an amount not exceeding a given sum, and which rate may be as high as fifty cents on the one hundred dollars, is in conflict with, and repealed by, a subsequent act passed for the whole state, in which it is provided that the board of supervisors of each county shall annually levy a school tax not exceeding thirty-five cents on each one hundred dollars of the property in the county. People v. Sargent, 44 Cal. 430.

176. Section 3891 of the political code, which declares that the provisions of the code with respect to revenue must be construed as if passed on the last day of the session of 1871-2, has the effect to repeal all acts passed at the session of 1871-2, concerning revenue, except acts amendatory of or carrying into effect the codes.

Mitchell v. Crosby, 46 Cal. 97.

177. The repeal of an act effects a repeal of an act amendatory of the act repealed.

PERSONAL PROPERTY.

Validity of Sale—Effect as to Creditors.

1. In order to constitute a valid sale of personal property against creditors, there must be, according to the statute of this state, an immediate delivery thereof, accompanied by an actual and continued change of possession.

Samuels v. Gorham, 5 Cal. 226.

2. A sale of personal property, to be valid against creditors, must be accompanied by actual and continued change of possession.

Whitney v. Stark, 8 Cal. 514.

3. The statute of frauds only requires an actual and continued change of possession as a protection against creditors and subsequent purchasers of the vendor.

4. A sale of personal property without delivery is not absolutely void, but only so as to creditors and subsequent purchasers. Visher v. Webster, 13 Cal. 58.

5. A sale of property, however fraudulent as to creditors, is good as between the parties to the sale.

Montgomery v. Hunt, 5 Cal. 366.

6. Every sale of property and personal chattels is good between the parties, and can not be attacked for fraud except by a creditor who has recovered judgment and taken out execution against the vendor, which has been returned unsatisfied, in whole or in part, with the single statutory exception of an attaching creditor, and his remedy being unknown to the common law, he must show affirmatively that his attachment has been properly issued, under the statute, before he can attack the sale.

Thornburgh v. Hand, 7 Cal. 554.

7. A sale of property by a debtor, even if void as against creditors, is good as between himself and his vendee, and all the world except his creditors. And such sale can not be attacked by a creditor merely from the fact that he is a creditor, but only when he has a judgment establishing his debt, and an execution issued thereon, or has some process regularly issued, as in the case of attachment authorizing a seizure of the property. Bickerstaff v. Doub, 19 Cal. 109.

8. Where W. agreed to sell a team and wagon to T., he to have the use thereof to draw wood to be delivered to W., and by him to be credited at the market price on the price of the team and wagon (the property to belong to W. until so paid for) and the performance of the contract was entered upon by T.: Held, that the contract is valid; that until a neglect or refusal by T. to complete the performance, W. could not have reclaimed the property, nor could the sheriff, under an execution against him, until then seize it. Id.

9. Held, further, that the sheriff could not question the transfer unless it were made to hinder, delay, or defraud creditors, and then he must produce both judgment and execution. Id.

10. The transfer of said property by said sale from C. to S., even if fraudulent, was good against all the world except creditors; and even a creditor at large could not attack it. Sexey v. Adkinson, 34 Cal. 346.

11. Where the plaintiff bought eight hundred sacks of flour, on storage in a warehouse, which stood therein as a separate pile, and the number of sacks of which was ascertained by counting the outside rows, and the number in the pile marked on one of the sacks, and it was thus delivered to the purchaser, who permitted it to remain in the same place, where it was several days afterwards attached as the property of the vendor: Held, that the delivery was sufficient, and the sale valid.

Cartwright v. Phoenix, 7 Cal. 281.

12. If A. sells his property to B. in consideration of so much money to be paid by B. to C., though the money is to be paid by or out of a sale of the goods, the contract is not void. There is no difference in such case between paying to A. and paying to A.'s order or creditor.

Wellington v. Sedgwick, 12 Cal. 469.

13. Where a vendee of personal property buys it bona fide, takes possession openly, and holds it in exclusive possession for a year or more, and afterwards puts the property into the possession of the vendor, as attorney in fact of the vendee, this qualified possession of the vendor does not, as a matter of law, show the sale to be fraudulent and void as against the creditors of the vendor. Stevens v. Irwin, 15 Cal. 503.

14. All the statute requires is that delivery must be made; the vendee must take actual possession; the possession must be open and unequivocal, carrying with it the usual marks and indications of ownership by the vendee. The possession must be continuous, not taken to be surrendered back again, not formal, but substantial. But it need not necessarily continue, indefinitely, when it is bona fide and openly taken, and is kept for such a length of time as to give general advertisement of the status of the property, and the claim to it by the vendee. Id.

15. The principle decided in Stevens v. Irwin, 15 Cal. 506, that, to make a sale of personal property good against creditors of the vendor, the vendee must take actual possession; that the possession must be open and unequivocal, having the usual indications of ownership by the vendee so as to notify the world of his claims, and that this possession must be continuous, etc., affirmed. Engles v. Marshall, 19 Cal. 320.

16. The court below did not err, in instructing the jury that the facts showed no valid sale for want of such change of possession of the property as the statute of frauds requires. Id.

17. In order that a verbal contract for the purchase of goods or chattels at a price exceeding two hundred dollars may be saved from the operation of the statute of frauds by a delivery, there must be a transfer of possession evidenced by acts, and not by words merely. Malone v. Plato, 22 Cal. 103.

18. Where, after an alleged verbal agreement for the sale of a pair of horses, they remained in the seller's livery stable, where they had been previously kept: Held, that proof of a direction by the purchaser to the seller to keep the horses in the stable for him, or of any other language of that import, was insufficient to show such a delivery as is required by the thirteenth section of the statute of frauds. Id.

19. Where the vendor of goods is not at the time in possession, the transfer is an "assignment" within the meaning of that term in the fifteenth section of the statute of frauds, and an actual and continued change of possession is required equally as in case of a sale by one in possession.

Weil v. Paul, 22 Cal. 492.

20. No delivery by the vendor of personal property is necessary as against parties who are neither creditors nor subsequent purchasers of such vendors.

Paige v. O'Neal, 12 Cal. 483.

21. The sale of personal property unaccompanied by immediate delivery and continued change of possession, as required by section 3440 of the civil code, is void as to creditors, notwithstanding the fact that the vendee obtains possession before the levy is made by the creditor.

Watson v. Rogers, 53 Cal. 401.

22. G., the owner of cattle and horses, rented land of L., and kept the cattle and horses on the land, in Sutter county, and P. worked for him. G. owed L. on a note given April 29, 1872. June 7, 1872, G. and P. went to Sacramento and delivered L. some hogs on the debt. The next day G. sold to P., and to R., his brother-in-law, his cattle and horses for one thousand eight hundred dollars, and all three of the parties started with the cattle and horses for Big valley, Siskiyou county, G. riding on a horse, and his family following behind in a wagon hauled by one of the horses sold by G. When about thirty miles from the place of starting, the cattle and horses were attached at the suit of L.: Held, that there was no such change of possession as is required by the statute, and that the sale was plainly fraudulent.

Regli v. McClure, 47 Cal. 612.

23. D. owned several teams, with which he was engaged in hauling bark for G. Drivers were employed, and D. did not personally superintend the work. The teams were fed and kept nights at a barn on G.'s land, and the drivers slept there. G. met D. at a town several miles from the barn, and bought the teams, and, returning toward the barn, met the teams on the road, and told the drivers of the purchase, and requested them to continue work for him, to which they agreed. He went to the barn the same night, and renewed the arrangement with the drivers, who, the next day, continued hauling bark, and were met by an officer, who attached the teams at the suit of a creditor: Held, that there was not an actual delivery and continued change of possession as required by the statute of frauds.

Gray v. Corey, 48 Cal. 208.

24. If a sale of property is made, which is fraudulent as to the creditors of the vendor, and the vendee then sells to a third person, in whose hands the goods are attached by a creditor of the first vendor, and the creditor, in an action against the sheriff, attacks the sale as a fraud on creditors, this admits the validity of the sales as between the vendors and vendees, and the creditor must show that the second vendee was a party to the fraud. The burden of proving the fraud is on him; and the questions whether the second vendee had notice of the fraud of the first sale, or was an innocent purchaser, or whether the second vendee paid a valuable consideration, have no application to the case. Such questions apply only to a case where property is purchased by such fraudulent representations as will vitiate the sale between the vendor and vendee.

Thornton v. Hook, 35 Cal. 223.

25. The statute of frauds does not annul a sale in favor of creditors, solely upon the ground that it was not founded on a valuable consideration. Id.

26. A creditor who attacks a sale on the ground of fraud as to him, admits the validity of the sale between the parties thereto, but seeks the benefit of the statute of frauds as to himself, and must show fraud. Id.

27. In the fall of 1856, L. rented of W. a portion of his brick-yard, for the purpose of making bricks. L. subsequently made a kiln of bricks, and left them in W.'s charge and possession for him to sell for L.'s benefit. In January, 1857, L. made and delivered a bill of sale of the bricks to R., and informed W. of the same, but there was no change of possession under the bill of sale. S., the defendant, as constable, seized the bricks under a process against L., and sold them as the property of L.: Held, that L.'s sale to R. was a fraud as against the creditors of L., and that defendant was justifiable in taking the bricks and selling the same.

Richards v. Schroder, 10 Cal. 431.

28. A constable having attached certain personal property, an action for its recovery was brought against the officer by one claiming the property as a purchaser from the defendant in the attachment proceedings. The district judge charged the jury that if the property was delivered to plaintiff, and was under his control from the date of the alleged purchase to the levy of the attachment, a period of six days, the sale was valid as against the attaching creditor: Held, in view of the facts in evidence, that the question should have been submitted to the jury.

Hesthal v. Myles, 53 Cal. 623.

Delivery and Change of Possession.

29. What constitutes delivery, depends on the character of the article and the circumstances of the case.

Chaffin v. Doud, 14 Cal. 384.

30. But we do not decide, that any removal from the land was necessary to vest a perfect title as against the creditors of B. Id.

31. Where no question is raised as to the validity of the contract, or the effect of the statute of frauds, and where the question is as to the kind of delivery which effects a change of property, although the goods can not be immediately delivered, the delay may be implied as one of the stipulations.

Stevens v. Stewart, 3 Cal. 140.

32. A delivery of an order for goods is only considered as a delivery of the goods themselves, where they are susceptible of an immediate delivery. Id.

33. But, where delivery of the goods is necessary to make the contract, a symbolical delivery can only be effectual, where it can be followed by an actual delivery. Id.

34. Words alone, unaccompanied by acts, will not constitute a delivery.

Gardet v. Belknap, 1 Cal. 399.

35. By an immediate change of possession is not meant a delivery instantor, but the character of the property sold, its situation, and all the circumstances must be taken into consideration in determining whether there was a delivery within a reasonable time, so as to meet the requirement of the statute, and this will often be a question of fact for the jury. Samuels v. Gorham, 5 Cal. 226.

36. Upon part delivery of goods, and an inability on the part of the vendor to deliver the whole quantity sold, he is, nevertheless, entitled to recover the stipulated price of the quantity actually delivered, deducting therefrom the damages sustained by the purchaser on account of the non-delivery of the whole. Coie v. Swanston, 1 Cal. 51.

37. The vendor, if employed by the vendee as his clerk, can not remain in the apparently sole possession of the goods after the sale; but if it be apparent to all the world that he has ceased to be the owner, and that another has become such, and that he is only a subordinate or clerk, the rule requiring an actual and continued change of possession is satisfied.

Godchaux v. Mulford, 26 Cal. 316.

38. After a sale of goods and chattels in good faith, and an actual and notorious change of possession, the employment of the vendor by the vendee as a mere clerk or salesman is not a fraud which vitiates the sale because the change of possession is not continued. Id.

39. Thus, where in an action in a district court of this state, an issue was raised as to whether a sale of personal property made in Oregon was fraudulent, and no proof was made of the laws of Oregon: Held, that the validity of the sale must be determined by the common law and statutes in force in this state on the subject.

Hickman v. Alpaugh, 21 Cal. 225.

40. If a merchant, having a stock of goods in his store, and engaged in a retail trade, with clerks in his employ, makes a sale in good faith of his entire stock in trade to a creditor in payment of the indebtedness, and for a fair price, and the creditor immediately goes into the store, takes entire control of the business, and proceeds to take an inventory, and also to retail the goods to customers with the assistance of the clerks of the vendor, this constitutes an actual and continued change of possession, and the sale is valid as against the creditors of the vendor, although there has been no formal discharge of the clerks of the vendor and rehiring of them by the vendee, and the vendor continues to occupy a room in the upper part of the store where he had previously slept.

Ford v. Chambers, 28 Cal. 13.

41. The validity of a sale of personal property, as between the vendee and an attaching creditor, when tested upon the question of the delivery and continued change of possession, is to be determined by the same rule whether the sale was absolute, or made by way of mortgage to secure an indebtedness.

Woods v. Bugbey, 29 Cal. 466.

42. The acts required to prevent a sale of personal property from being declared fraudulent for want of an immediate delivery and actual and continued change of possession, depend very much on the character and quantity of the property sold.

Lay v. Neville, 25 Cal. 545.

43. The plaintiffs purchased from B. a certain number of cattle, and presented to C., the agent of B., an order for their delivery. C. pointed out the cattle to the plaintiffs, as they were grazing in view, and told them that he delivered them possession, and then accepted an offer of employment from the plaintiffs, and remained in charge of the cattle until they were seized by the defendant: Held, that this was a delivery as immediate and as complete as the nature of the case would admit, and followed by an actual and continued change of possession.

Montgomery v. Hunt, 5 Cal. 366.

44. Where cattle, roaming at large, purchased in good faith, are collected together and marked with the brand of the purchaser, and then allowed to pasture on their accustomed range, these acts constitute a good delivery and continued change of possession.

Walden v. Murdock, 23 Cal. 540.

45. A mere execution of a bill of sale of cattle roaming at large, in which the brand with which they are marked is described, accompanied by a delivery of the branding iron, does not constitute a delivery of possession of the cattle. Id.

46. K. and S. were the owners of a mule team, which they used in hauling quartz-rock to their quartz-mill; the team was driven by one L., an employee. K. and S. sold the team to H., executing a bill of sale, and delivering the team by the discharge of L., the driver, who was immediately employed by H., and saying to H., "There is the team." K. and S. then hired of H. the team at eight dollars per day, and put it in the same business of hauling quartz-rock as before, and with L., the same driver. Team was kept and fed at K. and S.'s stable, as before the sale: Held, that there was no such actual and continued change in the possession of the property, under H.'s purchase, as to take the case out of the operation of the statute of frauds.

Hurlburd v. Bogardus, 10 Cal. 518.

47. S., a clothing merchant, whose goods were under attachment, sold them to W., who procured the release of the attachment, and removed the stock to his, W.'s, cigar store. Within less than two weeks thereafter, S. was engaged professionally as employee of W. in peddling out the goods and managing their sale at retail, in which condition they were again attached as the property of S.: Held, that there was no such actual and continued change of possession as was required by the fifteenth section of the statute of frauds, and that the goods were therefore liable to the attachment.

Weil v. Paul, 22 Cal. 492.

Segregation of Property.

48. If goods are sold, while mingled with others, by number, weight, or measure, the sale is incomplete, and the title remains in the seller until the bargained property is separated and identified.

McLaughlin v. Piatti, 27 Cal. 451.

49. A sale of a chattel can not apply to any article until it is clearly designated, and its identity ascertained. Id.

50. A sale of a given number of cattle, then running in a herd of a larger number, is an executory contract, and does not apply to any particular cattle until the number sold have been separated from the herd. Id.

51. Where A. had a large quantity of flour stored in the warehouse of B., and sold a portion of it to C., and gave an order for the flour sold on B., who accepted the same and gave C. in exchange a receipt for the same, and transferred it on his warehouse books to the account of C., but did not separate any specific portion from the flour of A. as the property of B., and the whole was subsequently seized in an action against A.: Held, that the sheriff was not liable to C. in the absence of segregation of the flour, but that B. was estopped by his receipt from denying his liability.

Adams v. Gorham, 6 Cal. 68.

52. Where the plaintiffs bought a certain amount of flour, being part of a large quantity on storage belonging to the vendor, and the plaintiff did not remove the flour purchased nor separate it from the remainder, but the vendor subsequently sold the remainder, and more, to other parties, who removed what they purchased, leaving on storage a less amount than had been purchased by plaintiff, which was afterwards attached in a suit against plaintiff's vendor: Held, that the sale and removal of all the flour, except that bought by plaintiff, was a segregation of plaintiff's flour, vesting in him a clear title at the time of the seizure.

Horr v. Barker, 6 Cal. 489.

53. Nor can the claim of a subsequent purchaser of flour from the same vendor, taking an order on the same storekeeper, embarrass the plaintiff's claim, there being no flour in store to meet the order in favor of such subsequent purchaser. Id.

54. And where the plaintiff's action, in such case, was brought for the value of the flour against another party claiming the flour, who had seized the same, the fact that plaintiff claims a less quantity of flour than he is really entitled to, does not operate otherwise than as a waiver of his claim to such additional quantity. Id.

55. The doctrine of segregation is not applicable to a man's property alone. In an action against a trespasser, and having claimed damages for a less quantity of flour than was his, it can not be objected that his action must fail for want of segregation of the flour for which he claims, from that which he does not claim, though it is his. Id.

56. Where the owner of a certain number of barrels of flour on storage in a warehouse sold them all to different purchasers, giving them orders on the warehouseman, which were given by the purchasers to the warehouseman, and new receipts given to them in their own names by the latter, and entries made on his books charging the vendor, and crediting the purchasers with their respective lots: Held, that there was a sufficient delivery of possession without a separation of the various lots. Id., 8 Cal. 603.

57. Where a vendor only sells a part of goods on storage, those sold, if all together and of the same mark, must be separated from the larger mass, in order to change the possession; but where all the goods of the vendor in the hands of a third party are sold, the change of possession is complete by delivery of the order, taking a new receipt, and entry of the transaction on the books of the warehouseman. Id.

58. The different purchasers have a right to leave the goods, so by them purchased, in one mass, subject to an apportionment between themselves of any loss. Id.

59. Hay cut on land in possession of B. lies in three fields, of about one hundred and fifty acres, in swaths, cocks, windrows, and stacks. Plaintiffs mowed it, and boarded with B. B. mortgages the hay to plaintiffs for work, and they cease to board with B., whose dwelling is separated from these fields by a fence. Plaintiffs proceed to gather and stack the hay, until the levy of an execution on it eight days afterwards, by defendant, as B.'s property: Held, that even conceding removal from the premises to be essential to a complete delivery of the hay, still plaintiffs were entitled to reasonable time to do it, and that the court erred in assuming as matter of law that eight days was too long.

Smith v. Friend, 15 Cal. 124.

60. A sale of growing crops, the product of periodical planting and cultivation, does not come within the provisions of the statute of frauds, relating to sales of an interest in real estate, and therefore, though not in writing, is valid.

Marshall v. Ferguson, 23 Cal. 65.

61. Where A. purchases personal property, worth more than two hundred dollars, of B., but B. does not deliver him possession of the same, and A. then sells the goods to C., a third party, and receives his pay for the same, the sale by A. to C. is a sufficient delivery by B., and A. can not avoid the payment of the purchase money for want of delivery, or a note of memorandum in writing.

Id.

62. B. put in a crop on land leased of D., the lease providing that D. was to have one half the crop after expenses paid, and subsequently D., by written contract, sold to B. all his right, title, and interest in the crop which was then growing: Held, that the fact that D. was on the premises and occupied a house there, shows no possession of the crop as against B., under the contract.

Visher v. Webster, 13 Cal. 58.

63. Visher v. Webster, 13 Cal. 58, that where two parties are living on a ranch, and one sells his interest in the growing crops to the other, the fact that both parties continue to live on the ranch, and that the vendee works for the vendor as a hired man, does not make the sale void as against creditors, affirmed, and the principle applied to this case.

Bernal v. Hovious, 17 Cal. 541.

64. Growing crops are not goods or chattels within the meaning of the statute of frauds, and will pass by deed or conveyance, from the very necessity of the case, as they are not susceptible of manual delivery until harvested and reduced to actual possession.

Bours v. Webster, 6 Cal. 661.

65. Bours v. Webster, 6 Cal. 661, that growing crops are not goods and chattels within the fifteenth section of the statute of frauds; and that, not being susceptible of manual delivery, until harvested and reduced to actual possession, they pass by deed or conveyance from the necessity of the case, affirmed.

Bernal v. Hovious, 17 Cal. 541.

Stevens v. Stewart, 3 Id. 140.

When Void as to Creditors Only.

66. A sale of personal property, unaccompanied by immediate delivery, is void as to creditors, and this, though delivery be made before levy is made by the creditors.

Chenery v. Palmer, 6 Cal. 119.

67. And where such sale is absolute in terms, but with an understanding between vendor and vendee that it was only to operate as a mortgage, then it is a secret trust as to the surplus, and void as to creditors. Id.

68. Whether a sale of personal property is void as to subsequent purchasers must be determined under the fifteenth section of the statute of frauds.

Vance v. Boynton, 8 Cal. 554.

69. F. sold and delivered to V. P. certain goods, the possession of which V. P. retained for two or three days, when he leased the premises in which the goods were, and delivered the goods to F., his vendor, and one M., who, after carrying on the business in connection with F. for a few days, retired, leaving F. in the exclusive possession of the property, which possession continued until the goods were seized by L., as constable, under an execution against F.: Held, that the sale of the goods to V. P. was void as to creditors, and the goods were subject to the execution against F.

Van Pelt v. Littler, 10 Cal. 394.

70. The statute of this state makes a sale of personal property fraudulent and void as to creditors when there is not an actual and continued change of possession, and courts can not evade its force and effect by an inquiry into the consideration paid by the purchaser, or the good faith of the transaction.

Woods v. Bugbey, 29 Cal. 466.

71. The purchaser or mortgagee of a kiln of bricks while being burned must take that possession of the property which places him in the relation to the same that owners usually have to a like kind of property, in order to secure it against attaching creditors of the vendor. Id.

72. If the owner of a kiln of bricks, before the burning of the same has been complete, makes a sale thereof in good faith, and for a valid consideration to a creditor, and the vendor completes the burning of the kiln, exercising the same apparent control as before, the sale is to be deemed fraudulent as to an attaching creditor for want of a change of possession. Id.

73. A bona fide purchase made by a creditor of the goods of his debtor, who is in insolvent circumstances, is not fraudulent merely because such creditor thereby obtains a preference over other creditors, and may be aware at the time that his purchase will have the effect of delaying or defeating the other creditors in the collection of their debts.

Walden v. Murdock, 23 Cal. 540.

74. A bona fide sale of cattle roaming at large over the plains, upon a defined or certain range, is not fraudulent as against the creditors of the vendor, merely because the sale is not followed by an immediate delivery of possession; but the parties are entitled to a reasonable time after the sale to prepare for a rodeo, and give the proper notices thereof, in order that they may separate the cattle purchased from stock owned by others, and to properly mark and brand them; and in the mean time the rights acquired by the purchaser will not be lost. Id.

Evidence of Fraud.

75. Where the defense to an action rests upon the fact of fraud in a sale of property to the plaintiff, the declarations of a person not a party to the action are admissible in favor of defendant, if such person was a party to the purchase alleged to be fraudulent, and his connection with the purchase may be established by the admissions, or conduct equivalent to admissions, of the plaintiff. Mamlock v. White, 20 Cal. 598.

76. The rules of law in regard to the right of a failing debtor to give a preference to some of his creditors have no application to a sale for cash to a person not a creditor, although the proceeds may have been applied to pay creditors. Id.

77. Where the purchaser has obtained the goods from the fraudulent vendee, in payment of a pre-existing debt, or as an execution debtor, it is not necessary, on the trial, to prove that he participated in the fraud of the fraudulent vendee.

Sargent v. Sturm, 23 Cal. 359.

78. In an action brought by a vendee of personal property against a sheriff to recover possession of the same, where the sheriff claims the property under an execution in favor of a creditor of the vendor, and attacks the sale for fraud, if the testimony is conflicting as to whether there was an actual and continued change of possession in the plaintiff after the sale to him, this question should be submitted to the jury. If, however, the facts are undisputed, it is a question of law, whether these facts constitute a continued and exclusive possession in the vendee. Hodgkins v. Hook, 23 Cal. 581.

79. Where, after sale of personal property, the creditors of the vendor attack the same for fraud, and on the trial there is evidence that the vendee, after the sale and delivery, exercised some slight acts of ownership and control over the property, but this is not shown to have been done with the knowledge or consent of the vendor, the fact that the vendor does not offer any evidence explanatory of the vendee's acts, does not add anything to the weight of the evidence touching the vendee's connection with the property. Id.

80. The employment of the vendor by the vendee after the sale, may be proved as a fact tending to show that there has been no actual or continued change of possession; but when proved it does not become conclusive of the question, but only an element of proof to be weighed by the jury.

Godchaux v. Mulford, 26 Cal. 316.

81. In case of a sale of goods and chattels, the subsequent employment of the vendor by the vendee, in the subordinate capacity of a clerk or salesman of the same goods, is not absolutely incompatible with an absolute and continued change of possession, and is not of itself, regardless of all other facts and circumstances, conclusive evidence of fraud. Such employment is a circumstance tending to show that there has not been such a change of possession as the statute requires; but it is not, per se, a fraud which admits of no explanation. Id.

82. After a sale of goods and chattels, and an actual change of possession, the employment of the vendor by the vendee, in the capacity of a clerk or salesman, is not, per se, a conclusive evidence of fraud which admits of no explanation. Id.

83. The fact that the purchaser of a mining claim, after his purchase, takes a large amount of gold dust out of the same, is not admissible in evidence for the purpose of proving that the sale was fraudulent as to the creditors of the vendor by reason of inadequacy of the price paid.

Henry v. Everts, 29 Cal. 610.

Sale, How Taken out of Statute.

84. A delivery of goods, in order to take a case out of the statute of frauds, must be of such a nature that the property is placed under the control and power of the vendee; and the acts to change the possession of the property from the vendor to the vendee, must be such as to deprive the vendor of his right of lien as security for payment of the purchase money. Garlet v. Beiknap, 1 Cal. 399.

85. Where the vendor of personal property acquired his title to the property in fraud of the creditors of his vendor, his vendee, for a valuable consideration and without notice of the original fraud, is not affected by taint of his title. The title, although originally fraudulent, is cured by the subsequent conveyance to an innocent party.

Paige v. O'Neal, 12 Cal. 483.

86. The declarations of such vendor, made after the sale of the wheat, are not admissible for the purpose of proving that the sale was not bona fide. Id.

87. Our statute of frauds was not intended to go beyond the extreme rule adopted by the supreme court of the United States and the English courts, to wit, that retention of the possession of personal property by the vendor, after an absolute sale, is per se fraud. The word "actual" in the statute was designed simply to exclude a mere formal change of possession, and the word "continued" to exclude a mere temporary change. But the statute does not require that the vendor, under penalty of forfeiture of the goods, shall never have any control over or care of them. Stevens v. Irwin, 15 Cal. 503.

Fraudulent Assignment of Personal Property in Trust.

88. Where the complaint charged that A. was indebted to the plaintiff, and had conveyed his property to B. to be disposed of for his benefit, and had drawn an order in favor of plaintiff on B., who had accepted it, and further charged that B. had subsequently reconveyed a portion of the property to A. without consideration, praying that B. be compelled to execute the trust in favor of plaintiff: Held, that A. was a proper and necessary party to the action, and that the order of A. on B. is not void by the statute of frauds. The conveyance by the former to the latter was a sufficient consideration to support their promise.

Lucas v. Payne, 7 Cal. 92.

89. By the acceptance of the order they became liable to the plaintiffs as trustees, which liability they could not escape by a subsequent fraudulent transfer of the trust property. Id.

90. A voluntary promise by the holder of defendant's agreement, that he would not assign it, was not binding; and where the contract was in fact made for the benefit of a company in which the obligee held stock, with knowledge of that fact on the part of the defendant, such promise was in fraud of the company's rights, and the defendant could not avail himself of it.

Cal. S. N. Co. v. Wright, 8 Cal. 585.

91. Nor if the fact is that defendant was kept in ignorance by the obligee of the contract, that he was acting for the company, can the defendant avail himself of the fact as a defense, no fraud being alleged, while he retains the consideration paid for his contract. He can not retain the consideration on the ground of fraud, and resist the payment of the penalty of an infraction of his contract on the same ground. Id.

92. If a defendant, sought to be charged as trustee on a contract within the statute of frauds, admits the contract in his answer, and does not claim the benefit of the statute, he is considered as waiving its protection; but if he claims the benefit of the statute in his answer, he is entitled to it.

Burt v. Wilson, 28 Cal. 632.

Fraudulent Mortgages of Personal Property.

93. Where notice of a mortgage is had by a subsequent purchaser or mortgagor, he is not protected by our statute of frauds.

Mitchell v. Steelman, 8 Cal. 363.

94. A mortgage stipulating for the enjoyment of the possession of personal property by the mortgagors until breach of the condition, is invalid under the seventeenth section of our statute of frauds, as to all persons except the parties to it.

Meyer v. Gorham, 5 Cal. 322.

Ritter v. Stevenson, 7 Cal. 388.

96. Where a debtor, who was at the time insolvent, executed a mortgage of all his property and effects to certain specified creditors, to secure his indebtedness to them, and to protect them from liabilities incurred by their indorsement of his paper: Held, that the mortgage was not an assignment either within the letter or spirit of the thirty-ninth section of the "act for the relief of insolvent debtors and protection of creditors," and did not create a trust for the use of the mortgagor, prohibited by the statute of frauds.

Dana v. Stanfords, 10 Cal. 269.

97. The eleventh section of the statute of frauds does not apply to mortgages, whether they contain the usual defeasance upon their face and thus create an open trust, or exist in the form of an absolute conveyance, with an understanding that they are intended as mortgages and thus create a secret trust.

Godchaux v. Mulford, 26 Cal. 316.

98. The trust mentioned in the eleventh section of the statute of frauds arises where the debtor places his property in the hands of a trustee having no beneficial interest therein, to hold for his benefit solely, and enable him to receive and enjoy its income to the prejudice of his creditors. Id.

99. Contracts for the sale of growing periodical crops (fructus industriales) are not contracts for the sale of an interest in the land, and need not be in writing in order to be valid. Davis v. McFarlane, 37 Cal. 634.

100. The intent of the provision relating to mortgages of growing crops, in section 17 of the statute of fraud (stats. 1856, p. 87), was to protect the lien of such a mortgage, without any delivery of possession, until the crop was so far harvested as to be capable of manual delivery and transportation; but the continuance of such lien afterwards, as against a subsequent purchaser in good faith, depends upon actual delivery of the crop to the mortgagee, and his retention of the possession thereof.

Goodyear v. Williston, 42 Cal. 11.

101. Where a mortgage was given upon growing crops of wheat and barley, as provided in section 17 of the statute of frauds (stats. 1856, p. 87), and after they were cut and put into stacks and shocks, the mortgagor sold and delivered them to a purchaser in good faith, and for value: Held, that the lien of the mortgage, without possession in the mortgagee, extended only to a severance of the crops from the land, and that the purchaser took them relieved of the mortgage lien. Id.

CONTRACT FOR SALE WHEN VOID— MEMORANDUM IN WRITING, WHEN VOID UNDER STATUTE.

102. A contract for the sale of goods, for the price of two hundred dollars or over, is void, unless a note or memorandum of such contract be made in writing, and be subscribed by the parties to be charged therewith; or unless the buyer shall accept or receive part of such goods; or unless the buyer shall at the time pay some part of the purchase money; but held, where the evidence given at the trial did not appear to be fully returned, and there appeared to have been no objection raised or exception taken to the insufficiency of the evidence, that this court would presume that sufficient evidence of a proper character was given to warrant the finding of the jury.

Bunting v. Beideman, 1 Cal. 181.

Craig v. Godfroy, 1 Cal. 415.

104. A sale of personal property, with intent to benefit the seller and injure creditors, is fraudulent and void.

Riddell v. Shirley, 5 Cal. 488.

105. The plaintiff contracted with defendant for certain goods on board a vessel, and delivered to him a bill of sale, and an order on the captain of the vessel for the delivery of the goods. When defendant presented the order, he was informed that the goods could not be discharged for some time, to which defendant replied that he would then have nothing to do with them, and nine days elapsed before they were discharged, of which defendant had notice, but refused to take them, and pleaded the statute of frauds.

The court below charged the jury that the bill of sale and order took the case out of the statute of frauds: Held, that this was error.

Stevens v. Stewart, 3 Cal. 149.

106. Where a sale or mortgage of personal property was void for want of immediate delivery, subsequent advances after delivery can not be recovered where it appears that they were paid under the general contract. The contract being void, all subsequent acts relate to its inception, and are alike tainted with fraud.

Chenery v. Palmer, 6 Cal. 119.

107. Where H., the owner of barley, which he has piled up in his corral, sells five hundred sacks thereof to V., who has it separated, marked "V.," and piled up in another part of the corral, and employs a third person to take care of the same for him, and H. afterwards sells and delivers the same to B.: Held, that B. was entitled to the property, the sale from H. to V. not being followed by an actual and continued change of possession. Vance v. Boynton, 8 Cal. 554.

SALE OF REAL ESTATE.

108. The statute of frauds, requiring an instrument in writing to create an interest in land, does not apply to the taking up of mining claims. A mere verbal authority to one man to take up a claim for another is sufficient. No title is divested out of the government, but a right of entry given under it. Gore v. McBrayer, 18 Cal. 582.

109. A written but unsealed transfer of a legal estate in land is good as a contract to convey, under the statute of frauds.

Owen v. Frink, 24 Cal. 171.

110. A release of an equitable estate in land can only be proved by a deed or conveyance in writing, subscribed by the party granting the same, or by his lawful agent thereunto authorized by writing.

Millard v. Hathaway, 27 Cal. 119.

Hoen v. Simons, 1 Id. 119.

Toller v. Folsom, Id. 207.

Videau v. Griffin, 21 Id. 389.

McLaren v. Hutchinson, 22 Id. 187.

Bayles v. Baxter, Id. 575.

111. A conveyance that would come within the statute of frauds if made by an individual, if made by a corporation would be liable to the same construction, and if void in the former case, would be void in the latter; and such conveyance can not affect the lien of a judgment regularly obtained against the grantor.

Smith v. Morse, 2 Cal. 524.

112. The statute of frauds will never in equity be allowed to operate as a protection to fraud, and for the purpose of showing that a fraud has been committed, or is being attempted, parol evidence will be admitted, even against the words of the statute. Hidden v. Jordan, 21 Cal. 92.

113. No eviction is necessary to enable a vendee to recover back the purchase money of real estate, where the sale was void under the statute of frauds.

Reynolds v. Harris, 9 Cal. 333.

114. A lease for two years, executed by the lessees, and by an agent of the lessors, but who had no written authority to do so, is within the sixth section of the statute of frauds, and void.

Folsom v. Perrin, 2 Cal. 603.

115. Where A. agrees with B. that he will purchase from C., at a given price, a sheriff's certificate of sale which C. holds of a tract of land, and that B. shall furnish one-half of the money, and that the assignment of the certificate shall be taken in A.'s name, for the joint benefit of A. and B., and B. furnishes A. his proportion of the money, when in truth A. has already bought the certificate unknown to B.: Held, that A. is estopped from alleging that he had made the purchase before his agreement with B., and that on this ground said agreement is within the statute of frauds, and does not create a resulting trust.

Dikeman v. Norrie, 36 Cal. 94.

CONTRACTS FOR SALE OF REAL ESTATE.

116. The provisions of the sixth section (chapter 1) of the statute of frauds relate exclusively to contracts in respect to real estate.

Sandfoss v. Jones, 35 Cal. 481.

117. To take a contract for the sale of lands out of the statute of frauds (ch. 1, sec. 8), a mere note or memorandum in writing, subscribed by the vendor or his agent, containing the names of the parties and a summary statement of the terms of the sale, either expressly or by reference to something else, is all that is required. The note or memorandum required by the statute may be something different and less specific than the contract of sale itself, and may be valid under the statute, although insufficient as part of a pleading declaring on the contract of which it is the evidence.

Joseph v. Holt, 37 Cal. 250.

118. A contract by which P. agrees that if H. will, within a fixed time, find a purchaser of P.'s land at two hundred dollars per acre, P. will sell and convey the land to the purchaser, and that H. may have for his services all that can be obtained from the purchaser over two hundred dollars per acre, is not a contract for the sale of any land or interest in land, within the meaning of the eighth section of the statute of frauds.

Heyn v. Philips, 37 Cal. 529.

119. When two parties who are each in possession of adjoining tracts of land on the same quarter section, apply to the owner to purchase, each one half of the same, and enter into a mutual written agreement that each shall deed to the other the land he obtains a title to, which is in the possession of the other, upon being reimbursed the money he pays for the same, these mutual promises constitute a sufficient consideration to support the agreement, and take it out of the eighth section of the statute of frauds.

Murphy v. Rooney, 45 Cal. 78.

120. An agreement in writing for a mutual conveyance of land in exchange is not void under the statute of frauds.

Brennan v. Ford, 46 Cal. 7.

121. If R. orally agrees with F. to give him a certain portion of the purchase money, and also a certain parcel of land for his services in effecting the sale of R.'s land, there being no note or memorandum in writing of the promise, the whole contract, as well for the money as for the land, is void, and no action will lie either for the money or the land.

Fuller v. Reed, 38 Cal. 99.

122. In such a case the injured party has no remedy at law upon the contract; he may, however, disaffirm the contract and maintain his action to recover back the money paid, or the value of the services rendered. Id.

122a. If part of a contract is void under the statute it is void in toto. Id.

123. If A. transfers property to B., and B. as a consideration agrees to pay the debt or debts of A., the creditor or creditors of A. who hold such demand or demands have a cause of action against B. without an assignment of the contract. Such contract need not be under seal.

Morgan v. Overman M. Co., 37 Cal. 534.

124. A., the owner of a lot of land in San Francisco, requested B. to sell the same, and delivered to him the title-deeds in order to enable him to effect a sale; B. agreed verbally with the plaintiff to sell the land to him, but A. refused to comply with the verbal agreement which B., his agent, had made with the plaintiff: Held, in an action by the plaintiff against A. to compel the execution of a deed or the payment of damages, that the agreement was void and could not be enforced, and that the defendant A. was not liable in damages.

Harris v. Brown, 1 Cal. 98.

Abell v. Calderwood, 4 Id. 90.

125. A mere parol agreement for the conveyance of land made before the adoption of the common law and the re-enactment of the statute of frauds in this state, is void, there being neither delivery of possession, nor of title-deeds, and no part payment of the purchase money.

Harris v. Brown, 1 Cal. 98.

126. A parol sale of real estate, made in California while the laws of Mexico were in force here, if fully executed, was valid, and passed the title to the vendee.

Hall v. Yoell, 45 Cal. 584.

127. When a purchaser of real property, under a verbal agreement, pays the entire consideration of the purchase, enters into the possession of the property, and expends large sums of money upon it in its improvement, there is exhibited such a state of facts as will take the case out of operation of the statute of frauds.

Hoffman v. Fett, 39 Cal. 109.

128. If there be a sale of real property, and the conditions of the sale, on the part of the purchaser, have been fully complied with, it will be presumed that the vendor undertook to make such a conveyance as will render the sale effective. Id.

129. The statute of frauds does not annul a sale in favor of creditors, solely upon the ground that it was not founded upon a valuable consideration.

Thornton v. Hook, 36 Cal. 223.

130. A verbal agreement for an exchange of real property, which has been carried into effect by the execution of proper conveyances in pursuance of the agreement, is not void under the statute of frauds.

Ryan v. Tomlinson, 39 Cal. 639.

131. A mere intruder on real property having no privity with the former owner, can not invoke the aid of the statute of frauds for the protection of such owner. Id.

132. A verbal agreement made by a grantee, when he buys land, and receives a deed therefor, to pay the grantor a further sum of money as a part of the price, out of the proceeds of the sale of the land when he sells it, is valid, and the statute of frauds does not require it to be in writing.

Price v. Sturgis, 44 Cal. 591.

133. Such contract is not for the conveyance of land, but for the payment of a certain sum of money upon the happening of a certain event. Id.

134. A sale of land at auction where no note or memorandum is made by the auctioneer, and no writing exists between the parties, is void by the statute of frauds.

People v. White, 6 Cal. 75.

135. In case of a sale of land, a verbal agreement made by the vendee when he receives the conveyance, to reconvey the land to the vendor, if he does not pay the purchase money when demanded by the vendor, is void under the statute of frauds.

Gallagher v. Mars, 50 Cal. 23.

136. Where plaintiff made a parol contract for the purchase of land, and subsequently, by parol, agreed with defendant to permit him to become the purchaser in his stead, and in pursuance of this agreement, and by direction of plaintiff the land was conveyed by defendant: Held, that in an action to recover the value of the assignment, the defendant could not rely upon the statute of frauds.

McCarthy v. Pope, 52 Cal. 561.

137. Although the statute requires a contract for the sale of land to be in writing, yet, if in pursuance of a parol contract the land is conveyed, there is nothing immoral about the transaction. Id.

138. Had the owner refused to convey to defendants, a conveyance could not have been enforced, and the contract would be inoperative. But the contract having been executed, the statute of frauds cuts no figure between plaintiff and defendant. Id.

139. The statute of frauds only requires that the memorandum in writing for the sale of land shall be signed by the vendor or his agent. It need not be signed by the vendee, and need not be a specialty; and the power to an agent to make it may be given verbally. Rutenberg v. Main, 47 Cal. 213.

140. A memorandum in writing, made by an agent for the sale of the land of the principal, which declares that the agent has sold the land on account of the principal, and which is signed by the agent as attorney in fact for the principal, is sufficient in form, and is executed in such a manner as complies with the statute of frauds. Id.

141. Part performance of a parol agreement to execute a written lease of land, for more than one year, takes the agreement out of the operation of the statute of frauds.

McGarger v. Rood, 47 Cal. 133.

OTHER CONTRACTS WITHIN THE STATUTE OF FRAUDS.

Parol Agreements.

142. When a verbal contract of partnership is made for the term of more than one year, and the parties act upon it, and conduct the partnership business upon the terms agreed upon, and in the firm name, neither party can afterwards avoid the obligations of the contract, as to past transactions under it, on the ground that it was a contract not to be performed within one year from its date, and therefore within the prohibition of the statute of frauds.

Pico v. Cuyas, 47 Cal. 174.

143. A verbal contract, by which the plaintiff agrees to cut and deliver to the defendant, at the defendant's mill, saw-logs sufficient to keep the defendant's mill running to its full capacity for two years from its date, is not to be performed within one year, and is therefore void under the statute of frauds.

Patten v. Hicks, 43 Cal. 509.

144. For labor and services performed under a contract, which is void under the statute of frauds, a recovery may be had by declaring a quantum meruit, but not by declaring on the contract itself. Id.

145. A verbal contract between the lender and borrower that money loaned is to be repaid when nut-bearing trees, about to be planted on the borrower's farm, yield an income sufficient to pay the same, over and above paying the expenses of the farm and of the borrower's family, is void under the statute of frauds, because the parties must have contemplated that more than one year would elapse before the time of payment would arrive.

Swift v. Swift, 46 Cal. 266.

146. A parol promise to pay for improvements made upon land is not within the statute of frauds.

Godeffroy v. Caldwell, 2 Cal. 480.

147. Hoare and Hindley were partners in a band of cattle, which were pastured on a public range. In June, 1869, they dissolved the partnership and corralled and divided all the cattle they could find, and agreed that Hindley should retain the partnership brand, and Hoare the partnership ear-mark, and that any cattle which had the partnership brand and ear-mark after the expiration of one year should belong to Hoare, and that, in the mean time, they should make divisions, and alter the ear-mark of cattle coming to Hindley and the brand of those coming to Hoare: Held, that all that was to be done under the contract was to be performed within one year, and that it was not, therefore, in violation of the statute of frauds.

Hoare v. Hindley, 49 Cal. 274.

148. A contract to sell and deliver at a future day one hundred shares of mining stock, for the sum of one thousand three hundred and fifty dollars, is void, under the statute of frauds, if no part of the stock is delivered, and no portion of the purchase money is paid, and no note or memorandum of the sale or transaction is made or signed by the parties. Mayer v. Child, 47 Cal. 142.

Agreement to Answer for Debt or Default of Another.

149. A parol contract to answer for the debt of another is void.

Luce v. Zeile, 53 Cal. 54.

150. It is essential to the validity of a contract to answer for the debt, default, etc., of another, that it, or some note or memorandum thereof, be in writing; that it express the consideration; and that it be subscribed by the party to be charged thereby.

Ellison v. Jackson W. Co., 12 Cal. 542.

151. A promise by B. to perform J. W.'s contract, could furnish no consideration for a promise from E., nor could the consideration of the original contract attach to the subsequent promise of B. Id.

152. E. contracted with J. W. to construct an extension to a ditch, and after the ditch was completed, it was to be paid out of the sales of water. At the time of the execution of the contract, B. held a mortgage upon the ditch. After E. had partly completed his work, B.'s mortgage fell due, and he brought an action to foreclose it, and had a receiver appointed to receive the water rents of the ditch. E. refused to go on and complete the work. B. agreed with E., that if he would go on and complete the work, he should be paid out of the receipts from the sale of water by the receiver. Under this promise, E. completed the work: Held, that this is an undertaking to answer for the debt, default or miscarriage of another, and is therefore within the statute of frauds. Id.

153. An indorsement made by a third person on a contract entered into between two parties, and made simultaneously with the contract, by which the indorser, without expressing any consideration received, agrees that the undertaking of one of the contracting parties shall be fulfilled, is an original and not a collateral promise of the indorser to answer for the debt of another, and not within the statute of frauds.

Otis v. Haseltine, 27 Cal. 80.

154. By such act the indorser makes the contract his own, and the consideration therein expressed becomes the consideration of his promise. Id.

155. The promise of a guarantor, when made before the delivery of the note, is not within the statute of frauds.

Ford v. Hendricks, 34 Cal. 673.

156. It is well settled in this state that the promise of a guarantor of a note is not within the statute of frauds, if made before the delivery of the note.

Howland v. Aitch, 38 Cal. 133.

157. But that fact is not the test as to whether the guaranty is an original contract or not. The true test is: Were the promises of the principal debtor and of the grantor parts of one and the same original transaction? Thus, where three days after the execution and delivery of a promissory note from A. to H., T. indorsed thereon, in pursuance of a previous agreement, "I guarantee the payment of the within note," upon the faith of which previous agreement H. had sold and delivered to A. certain horses: Held, that said indorsement was not within the statute of frauds. Id.

158. A contract in writing, agreeing to pay to the party of the second part such sums as he may afterwards advance to a foreman of a toll-road company, is not a promise to pay the debt of another, and not within the statute of frauds.

Gradwohl v. Harris, 29 Cal. 150.

159. Where the obligation with which it is sought to affect defendants personally arises out of an alleged promise given by them to W. and A. Elder, of whom they bought the land mortgaged by Pangburn to plaintiff, that they would pay a portion of the purchase money, equal to the amount due or to grow due upon the note given by Pangburn to plaintiff and secured by said mortgage, this is not a promise to pay the debt of another, nor to pay the Pangburn note, but an original promise by them to the Elders, to pay their own debt to them by paying a certain amount of money to plaintiff. If such promise was given, plaintiff could recover upon it as the party beneficially interested.

Wormouth v. Hatch, 33 Cal. 121.

160. By the statute of frauds, a promise to pay the debt of a third person must be in writing, though to be performed within one year. Gordon v. Ross, 2 Cal. 156.

Comstock v. Breed, 12 Id. 286.

161. Where the consideration of a contract is expressed in writing, although fictitious, it satisfies the statute of frauds.

Happe v. Stout, 2 Cal. 460.

162. A guaranty, made by one who writes his name only on a promissory note, is not within the statute of frauds, for the want of a consideration expressed in writing.

Riggs v. Waldo, 2 Cal. 485.

163. A. executed a lease to B. and C., writing underneath it, "I hereby agree to pay the rent stipulated above when it shall become due, provided the said B. does not pay it." Held, that such a transaction is not embraced within the statute of frauds, as the credit given by the written guaranty of the third party is the consideration upon which the transaction is closed.

Evoy v. Tewksbury, 5 Cal. 285.

164. The statute requires the written agreement to answer for the debt of another to express the consideration upon which it is made; but where the agreement is executed at the same time as the lease, and forms the consideration for the execution, it is not a promise to answer for the debt of another, but must be considered as an original undertaking, and as a promise made, upon the strength of which another was enabled at the time to obtain possession of property and enjoy its use. Id.

165. Where a defendant entered into a contract with a builder for the construction of a brick house, and the builder applied to the plaintiffs, who were proprietors of a brickyard, for the sale of the necessary brick, and the defendant said to the proprietors, to induce the sale, that he would become responsible for all the brick furnished his building, and whatever contract or agreement was made with the builder he would see carried out, or would pay for the brick if the builder did not: Held, that the promise of the defendant was within the statute of frauds.

Clay v. Walton, 9 Cal. 323.

166. Wherever the leading object of the promisor is not to become surety or guarantor of another, but to subserve some interest of his own, his promise is not within the statute, although the effect of the promise may be to pay the debt or discharge the obligation of another. Id.

167. A guaranty indorsed on a charter party at the same time with its execution, and the consideration of one being in fact the consideration of the other, and being in these words: "I hereby guarantee the fulfillment of the within charter, on the part of the charterer," is good. Hazeltine v. Larco, 7 Cal. 33.

168. The instrument referred to in the guaranty becomes part thereof. If the guaranty were executed subsequently, it would fail, for there is either no consideration for the promise in fact, or the new consideration is not expressed in the instrument referred to. Id.

169. The provision of the statute of frauds which requires the promise to pay the debt of another to be in writing, expressing the consideration, does not apply to the promise of A. to pay money he owes by contract with B. to C. This is paying A.'s own debt, and creating his own obligation, not assuming another's.

Barringer v. Warden, 12 Cal. 311.

170. Where A., who is indebted to B., promises, in consideration of his release, to B., to pay the amount to C., who is a party to the arrangement, it is sufficient consideration to support such promise. Id.

171. Where a sheriff seized and sold a wagon on execution in favor of R., who pointed out the wagon, requested the sheriff to seize it, and verbally agreed to hold him harmless, etc.: Held, in suit by the sheriff against R. for damages recovered against the sheriff for the seizure, that the agreement to indemnify is valid; that it was not a "special promise to answer for the debt, default or miscarriage of another," within the statute of frauds; because the sheriff was acting, not for himself, but as agent of R., and the promise was to be responsible for his acts as such agent. Stark v. Raney, 18 Cal. 622.

172. A guaranty not under seal, nor expressing consideration, made contemporaneously with the contract guaranteed, is a part of that contract, and the expression of the consideration in the contract takes the guaranty out of the statute of frauds.

Jones v. Post, 6 Cal. 104.

Fraudulent Contracts and Agreements as to Creditors.

173. If a part of the sum, secured to be paid by the promissory note, whether principal or interest, is illegal, the note must defraud creditors, if enforced, and is, therefore, void, under the positive provisions of the statute. McKenty v. Gladwin, 10 Cal. 227.

174. The statute of frauds makes every bond or other evidence of debt, given with intent to hinder, delay, or defraud creditors, void. Id.

Miscellaneous Provisions.

175. An executed parol agreement is a good defense against an action upon a specialty. The statute of frauds contains no provision with regard to the dissolution of agreements or contracts under seal for the sale of lands. Beach v. Covillaud, 4 Cal. 315.

176. Nothing can be regarded as a part performance, to take a verbal contract for the sale of land out of the operation of the statute, which does not place the party in a situation which is a fraud upon him unless the contract be executed.

Arguello v. Edinger, 10 Cal. 150.

177. Taking possession is held such act of part performance, as the party might be treated as a trespasser if he could not invoke the protection of the contract. And if, upon the faith of the contract, the purchaser should proceed to make valuable improvements, the most palpable fraud would be perpetrated if the vendor were permitted to withdraw from its execution. Id.

178. The defense arising from a verbal contract for the sale of land, accompanied with acts of part performance, taking the contract from the operation of the statute, is permissible, under our system of practice, to an action of ejectment for the recovery of the premises. The only effect of this mode of asserting the rights of the defendants, instead of filing a bill in equity, is to require the court to pass upon the questions raised by the answer in the first instance. If, upon hearing the evidence, the court should determine there was ground for relief, it would enjoin the further prosecution of the action with its decree for a specific performance; and, on the other hand, if it should refuse the relief, it would call a jury to determine the issue upon the general denial. Id.

179. Where the answer discloses the fact that the contract is not in writing, but also avers acts of part performance, which take the contract out of the operation of the statute, the answer is not demurrable. Id.

180. The true rule is laid down in Arguello v. Edinger, 10 Cal. 160, that nothing can be regarded as a part performance to take the case out of the operation of the statute which does not place the party in a situation which is a fraud upon him unless the contract be executed.

Weber v. Marshall, 19 Cal. 447.

181. A plaintiff's recovery can not be barred by the statute of frauds unless the statute be pleaded.

Osborne v. Endicott, 6 Cal. 149.

182. An unexecuted verbal agreement between joint proprietors of land for the division thereof according to certain boundaries, is not binding. Until executed, either party may rescind the agreement.

Woodbeck v. Wilders, 18 Cal. 131.

183. A verbal promise to pay a debt, by a discharged insolvent, is sufficient to take the case out of the statute.

STAY OF PROCEEDINGS.

1. ON APPEAL.

ON APPEAL

1. Pending an appeal, an order was granted by a justice of this court, staying proceedings on the judgment, though no "undertaking" was given to stay proceedings.

Ross v. Austill, 2 Cal. 183.

2. By the code the undertaking on appeal providing for the liabilities of the sureties upon condition of the affirmance of the judgment operates as a stay; and if, by a mere neglect to prosecute the appeal, and for that reason suffering it to be dismissed after the respondent has been deprived of his rights under the judgment by the undertaking, the sureties could be released upon the pretense that the judgment was not affirmed, it is evident that great injustice would in many instances be perpetrated, and a fraud practiced upon the respondents.

Karsh v. Light, 15 Cal. 327.

3. Where a suit is pending in the supreme court on appeal, the judgment below is suspended for all purposes, and it is not evidence upon the questions at issue, even between the parties.

Woodbury v. Bowman, 13 Cal. 634.

4. An appeal from an order of reference stays the proceedings.

Smith v. Pollock, 2 Cal. 92.

5. Where the sureties to an undertaking, on appeal to the supreme court, justify in a sum less than double the amount specified in the undertaking, but more than double the amount of three hundred dollars, such undertaking is sufficient under section 348 of the code, though insufficient to stay the issuance of the execution.

Mok. Hill Co. v. Woodbury, 10 Cal. 185.

6. Where the examination of the sureties does not disclose sufficient property to make the undertaking operate as a stay, but does disclose sufficient to render the appeal effectual, respondent's remedy is by motion in the court below for leave to proceed on the judgment, notwithstanding the undertaking, and not by motion in the supreme court to dismiss the appeal.

Dobbins v. Dollarhide, 15 Cal. 374.

7. A stay of proceedings from its nature, under an appeal, only operates upon orders or judgments commanding some act to be done, and does not reach a case of injunction.

Merced M. Co. v. Fremont, 7 Cal. 132.

8. If the appellants have been guilty of no laches in perfecting their appeal, the court may enlarge the time for them to file their bond to entitle them to a stay of proceedings under the statute, and in the mean time order a stay of all proceedings in the inferior court until the extended period shall have expired; in such case the court may impose such terms as shall appear to be proper.

Bradley v. Hall, 1 Cal. 199.

9. A justice of the peace has jurisdiction to grant appeals and stay proceedings thereupon, and his action can not be reviewed on certiorari.

Coulter v. Stark, 7 Cal. 245.

10. The stay of proceedings granted according to the statute on the execution of the undertaking on appeal is a sufficient consideration thereof.

Dore v. Covey, 13 Cal. 508.

11. It is only of orders or judgments which command or permit acts to be done, that a stay of proceedings on appeal can be had.

Hicks v. Michael, 15 Cal. 107.

12. On appeal from an order granting a new trial in such case, the verdict being in favor of the defendant and appellant, an undertaking for damages and costs, according to section 348 of the practice act, is sufficient to stay proceedings pending the appeal.

Ford v. Thompson, 19 Cal. 118.

13. A bond to stay proceedings is not necessary in order to perfect an appeal from a decree of the district court of the United States, approving of survey of a Mexican or Spanish grant.

Thornton v. Mahoney, 24 Cal. 569.

14. An appeal from an order refusing to change the venue of an action operates as a stay of all further proceedings in the case in the court below, until such appeal is determined.

Pierson v. McCahill, 23 Cal. 249.

15. An undertaking in the sum of three hundred dollars, as required by the three hundred and forty-eighth section of the practice act, is sufficient to perfect such appeal and stay proceedings.

Id.

16. An appeal duly taken to the court of last resort suspends all proceedings in the court below.

Thornton v. Mahoney, 24 Cal. 569.

17. If, in foreclosure cases, a judgment in personam is rendered against the defendants, and also one enforcing a lien, and an appeal is taken from the whole judgment, in order to stay proceedings upon the whole judgment, the appellant must give an undertaking for costs, one in double the amount of the personal judgment, and one for the payment of waste and such deficiency as may remain due after the sale of the property, and all these undertakings may be in one instrument, or several, at the option of the appellant.

Englund v. Lewis, 25 Cal. 337.

18. In such cases, if the undertaking is given only for costs, and waste and deficiency, an execution on the personal judgment is not stayed pending the appeal; and if the undertaking is given only for costs and double the amount of the personal judgment, an execution for the sale of the property upon which the lien is foreclosed is not stayed pending the appeal.

Id.

ON NEW TRIAL.

19. The pendency of a motion for a new trial does not operate as a stay of proceedings, so as to deprive the court of the power of vacating an order appointing a receiver made before the trial.

Copper Hill Co. v. Spencer, 25 Cal. 11.

20. A motion for a new trial, filed within the time allowed by law, stays the operation of the judgment, and preserves all rights, until it can be heard and determined, and is not affected by the adjournment of the court for the term.

Lurvey v. Wells, 4 Cal. 106.

Crowther v. Rowlandson, 27 Cal. 376.

22. The pendency of a motion for new trial does not stay proceedings upon the judgment. The party in whose favor the judgment is rendered is entitled immediately to the proper process for its enforcement unless proceedings are stayed by the court.

People v. Loucks, 28 Cal. 68.

MISCELLANEOUS DECISIONS.

23. A stay of proceedings under the judgment will fully protect the losing party.

Hutchinson v. Bours, 13 Cal. 52.

23a. Notice of a motion to set aside an execution and a levy made thereunder, will not operate as a stay of proceedings.

Bryan v. Berry, 8 Cal. 130.

24. In an action pending in the superior court of the city of San Francisco, plaintiff had verdict and judgment. Defendant filed a statement to be used on motion for a new trial. Plaintiff filed and served certain amendments to the statement, but gave no notice within two days of the settlement of statement before the judge. The court made an order directing the motion for a new trial to be heard on the twenty-ninth of April, 1857. On that day, the court adjourned the hearing of the motion to the thirtieth, which was the last day of the existence of that court. On that day a motion for a new trial was denied. On the next day, papers and records of said court were transferred to the fourth district court. On the twenty-seventh day of May, 1857, fourth district court made an order for the plaintiff to show cause why the order of the superior court denying a new trial should not be set aside, and on the day fixed to show cause why district court set aside said order of the superior court: Held, that the order of superior court granting a stay of proceedings had the effect of extending the jurisdiction of the court, and that district court had the right to make the order.

Hart v. Burnett, 10 Cal. 64.

25. The presiding judge of the highest court in a state has no power to grant a stay of proceedings on a judgment rendered in that court until an application can be made to some justice of the supreme court of the United States to issue a citation on a writ of error.

Clarke v. Forshay, 3 Cal. 290.

3. Counsel, in the trial of a cause, can not object that the court did not render judgment on the special verdict of the jury, where they have stipulated that such additional facts may be found by the judge, as would, in his judgment, be sufficient to present all the questions raised by the pleadings.

Marius v. Bicknell, 10 Cal. 217.

4. Where the parties in the court below stipulated that a motion for a new trial should be denied, they can not question in this court, the correctness of an order denying such motion.

Brotherton v. Hart, 11 Cal. 405.

5. Verbal stipulations as to the pleadings or evidence can not be regarded, except as they are admitted by the parties against whom they are invoked.

Patterson v. Ely, 19 Cal. 28.

6. An attorney can not bind his client by a verbal stipulation made during the progress of a trial, and not entered on the minutes, to waive his rights under an issue made in the pleadings.

Merritt v. Wilcox, 52 Cal. 238.

7. Verbal stipulations with reference to proceedings in pending actions can not be regarded except so far as they are admitted by the parties against whom they are sought to be enforced.

Reese v. Mahoney, 21 Cal. 305.

8. A stipulation not in writing and filed with the clerk nor entered in the minutes of the court at the time it was made, is not binding upon the parties, and can not be enforced by the court.

Borkheim v. N. B. Ins. Co., 38 Cal. 623.

9. B. had several actions against different parties, turning upon the same issues, and prosecuted and defended by the same attorneys respectively. Counsel, with consent of B., stipulated verbally in open court, that but one case should be tried, and the others should abide the result; but the stipulation was not reduced to writing and filed with the clerk, nor entered in the minutes of the court: Held, that the stipulation was void, and could not be afterwards enforced by a nunc pro tunc order, directing it to be entered in the minutes of the court. Id.

10. A party who has procured a judgment to be entered in his favor by means of one part of a verbal stipulation, is not at liberty to repudiate the other part; but, having received the benefit of the stipulation, must bear the burdens which it imposes on him.

Himmelman v. Sullivan, 40 Cal. 125.

11. An order vacating a dismissal of appeal, obtained upon a stipulation signed by counsel for respondent in ignorance of the dismissal, will be set aside on his motion.

Noriega v. Knight, 20 Cal. 172.

Godchaux v. Mulford, 26 Cal. 316.

13. If a stipulation entered into by the respective attorneys in an action is in subsequent proceedings virtually disregarded by both parties, the court will not, after it has been thus disregarded, enforce it.

People v. Holden, 23 Cal. 123.

14. If a party has been injured by a disregard of a stipulation entered into by him, his remedy must first be sought in the court in which it was filed, or in some court of original jurisdiction.

Clarke v. Forshay, 3 Cal. 290.

15. When a motion is made to place a cause on the calendar of the supreme court in accordance with a stipulation of the parties, it must be shown that the transcript, and the briefs or points and authorities of both parties, have been filed, or the motion will be denied.

Plant v. Smythe, 43 Cal. 42.

16. A plaintiff who obtains judgment in violation of his written stipulation on file dismissing the action, may be restrained by the court in which judgment was obtained, from enforcing it.

McLeran v. McNamara, 55 Cal. 508.

17. The court can not alter or vary the terms of a written stipulation made by attorneys, or relieve them from its obvious consequences. Keys v. Warner, 45 Cal. 60.

18. A stipulation as to the location of one of the lines of a Mexican grant as surveyed, under a decree confirming the grant, will not be construed as admitting that the line was correctly surveyed, unless from the whole reading of the same it appears to have been the intention of the parties. San Jose v. Uridias, 37 Cal. 339.

19. A stipulation that the petitioner has such an interest in the proceedings as to make him a proper party thereto, does not preclude inquiry into the facts going to show the existence of such interest.

Harpending v. Haight, 39 Cal. 189.

EFFECT OF.

Hihn v. Courtis, 31 Cal. 398.

21. Where counsel, in a cause pending in the supreme court, stipulate to submit the case to the court on two grounds only, it is a clear waiver of all other assignments of error, and they will not be allowed to go behind such stipulation, and insist upon points other than those mentioned in the stipulation. Cahoon v. Levy, 10 Cal. 216.

22. The supreme court will not examine errors assigned on appeal, where, after the service of the notice of appeal, the parties stipulated that all errors in the record, referee's report, decree, and judgment, were waived. Glotsback v. Foster, 11 Cal. 37.

23. A stipulation in the supreme court, that a cause be continued for the term, and that any motion may be made therein at the next term, by either party, which might have been made at the first term after the filing of the transcript, covers only the rights a party had at the time of the stipulation, and not those already lapsed by the laches of the party.

Reynolds v. Lawrence, 15 Cal. 359.

24. If an attorney stipulates, under a mistake of fact, that a notice of appeal has been filed, when no notice has been filed, the court below, upon a proper application, may relieve him from it, but the supreme court can not.

Bonds v. Hickman, 29 Cal. 460.

25. A stipulation that no execution shall issue until the determination of the appeal, is not a waiver of an objection that the notice of appeal was not filed in season.

Moulton v. Ellmaker, 30 Cal. 527.

26. A stipulation between parties to an action as to the kind of judgment to be entered, whatever force it may have in regulating the judgment to be entered, does not impair the effect of the judgment which is entered, even if not entered in accordance with the stipulation.

Sample v. Wright, 32 Cal. 659.

27. A stipulation signed by the parties "that the foregoing twenty-one pages constitute the transcript on appeal from the order, and contain true, full, and correct copies of the affidavits referred to in the bill of exceptions, judgment, order, notice, bill of exceptions," etc., does not preclude respondents from denying the correctness or sufficiency of the bill of exceptions.

Wetherbee v. Carroll, 33 Cal. 549.

28. If the transcript does not contain all the judgment roll, but contains all that is necessary, the defect is waived by a stipulation that it contains all that is necessary for the purpose of the appeal.

Solomon v. Reese, 34 Cal. 28.

29. If counsel stipulate in open court that the jury may assess damages in currency if they find for the plaintiff, they are estopped from raising an objection to the verdict on that ground.

Dreyfous v. Adams, 48 Cal. 131.

30. A stipulation filed in the supreme court, consenting to a judgment, must be signed by the attorneys who are the attorneys of record for the parties in the court below, or by a party in person who did not appear by attorney.

Estate of Arguello, 50 Cal. 308.

31. If the parties, before a trial, agree on the facts, and then stipulate that either party may, on the trial, add such documentary evidence as he sees proper, the stipulation will be construed to mean evidence pertinent to the issue and which was in existence at the date of the stipulation.

Donner v. Palmer, 51 Cal. 629.

32. If the parties in an action of ejectment agree to the facts, which facts are based on the presumption that at a certain time the title to the demanded premises was in a third person, and the court is asked to determine which has acquired the title of such third person, and the court decides on the facts, neither party will afterwards be heard to assert, for the purpose of availing the effect of the judgment, that such third person had no title.

Id.

33. If, in an action to recover money, the complaint alleges and the answer denies that it was payable in gold coin, the attorney for the defendant can not bind his client by a verbal stipulation made during the progress of the trial, and not entered on the minutes, to allow the plaintiff, if he recover, to have judgment in gold coin.

Merritt v. Wilcox, 52 Cal. 238.

34. A general verdict in favor of the plaintiff imports a finding in his favor upon all the allegations of the complaint material to his recovery; but it does not import a finding in his favor upon an issue as to whether money sued for was payable in gold coin.

35. The probate court has power to enforce the terms of a stipulation, entered into by parties litigant before it, in reference to a subject-matter of which the court has jurisdiction.

Grady v. Porter, 53 Cal. 680.

36. A court has power to relieve a party from the effects of a stipulation which admits a fact which is not true.

Richardson v. Musser, 54 Cal. 196.

37. If the finding of a fact on a material point is contrary to a stipulation of the parties made in the course of the trial as a substitute for evidence, a new trial will be granted, on the ground that the finding is contrary to the fact as stipulated, and therefore unsupported by the evidence.

1. This case is distinguished from mere executory agreements, through a performance of the terms of which a party becomes entitled to property, because here C. was entitled, as of original right, to his stock, and the conditions annexed to the issuance of the certificates to him, even if not waived, were mere qualifications in favor of G. and B., in the nature of security to them, the substance of which security they enjoyed, though not in the precise way described.

STOLEN GOODS.

1. An auctioneer who receives and sells stolen property, innocently, and in the ordinary course of his business, is liable to the true owner for the conversion thereof; and that, too, without the previous prosecution and conviction of the felon, and although the auctioneer had paid over to the felon the money received on the sale of the goods, before notice that the goods had been stolen. Rogers v. Huie, 1 Cal. 429.

2. An auctioneer who, in the regular course of his business, receives and sells stolen goods, and pays over the proceeds of sale to the felon, without notice that the goods were stolen, is not liable to the true owner as for a conversion. Id., 2 Cal. 571.

STOPPAGE IN TRANSITU.

1. The right of a vendor of goods to a stoppage in transitu exists until they arrive at their final destination or come into the possession of the consignee. Depositing the goods at an intermediate point with an agent of the vendee to be forwarded, does not terminate the transitu.

Markwald v. Creditors, 7 Cal. 213.

2. The vendor of goods who has sold them on credit to one who is insolvent, has a right to stop the goods and take them into his possession at any time before they arrive at their place of destination, and go into the possession of the purchaser.

Blackman v. Pierce, 23 Cal. 508.

3. This right of stoppage in transitu is paramount to any lien on the goods claimed by third persons through the purchaser, and may be exercised to defeat an attachment or execution levied upon the goods by a creditor of the vendee. Id.

4. It renders a stoppage in transitu unnecessary, for there is a rescission before there could be a stoppage.

Le Cacheaux v. Cutter, 6 Cal. 514.

5. An express demand for the goods is not required in order to charge the carrier. If he is clearly informed that it is the desire of the vendor to retake the goods, the notice is sufficient. Jones v. Earl, 37 Cal. 630.

6. The vendor of goods upon credit may retake them, upon the discovery of the insolvency of the vendee, at any time before they have been delivered to the vendee, or before any third party has acquired bona fide rights in the goods. Id.

GENERALLY.

1. The municipal government of a city, in causing street improvements to be made, acts under the authority conferred upon it by the legislature, and is subject to all the constitutional limitations and restraints imposed on the legislature, and has no other or greater power than is and lawfully may be conferred on it by the legislative act.

Creighton v. Manson, 27 Cal. 613.

2. An attempt by the city of San Francisco to convert a public easement to private use, or to defeat the right of way over a public street, is beyond the power of a corporation, and the legislature has no authority to interfere with the disposition of the land and premises upon which the easement is situated, after title has passed from the state. Wood v. San Francisco, 4 Cal. 190.

3. Where a city is laid out with streets running to the water, such streets should be held to continue on to the high water, if the city front is filled in, or the space enlarged by accretion or otherwise. Id.

4. It was necessarily anticipated that the water lots would be filled up to a level, suitable for building or land carriage.

Eldridge v. Cowell, 4 Cal. 81.

5. All the public streets of the city of San Francisco running into the water, as laid down on the official map of the city, were, by operation of the act of March 26, 1851, extended and carried to the front line of the city, and, as such, are subject to the free enjoyment of the public, and exempt from executions against the city.

Wood v. San Francisco, 4 Cal. 190.

6. East street, San Francisco, extends from Folsom to Market street, the latter, and not Jackson street, being its northern terminus.

Burr v. Dana, 22 Cal. 11.

7. The fact that East street was dedicated on the old plan of the city, that is, the map or plan of 1850, is insufficient to extend the street as a public highway beyond its first limits, to wit, from Folsom street to the southerly side of Market, and to the bay.

Jacobs v. Kruger, 19 Cal. 411.

8. The twentieth section of the act for improving the streets of Oakland, which provides that when a street is constructed to the satisfaction of the council and marshal it shall be accepted, and that thereafter it shall be improved by the city, requires such acceptance of the street, to the full width of the street, when improved under regulations adopted by the council. Such regulations must specify, among other things, the character of the work to be done, before the street can be accepted. An acceptance of work done on a street is not sufficient to make the street an accepted street.

Oakland Paving Co. v. Rier, 52 Cal. 270.

9. The courts will take judicial notice of the streets of San Francisco as designated on the official plan or map of the city.

Whiting v. Quackenbush, 54 Cal. 306.

10. Section 19 of article XI of the constitution is not a provision which requires legislation to enforce it; and the provisions of the act of April 1, 1872, relating to street improvements in San Francisco, which authorize the superintendent of streets to execute contracts for such improvements, in advance of the levy and collection of the assessment, are inconsistent with the section referred to, and ceased to be operative on the first day of January, 1880.

McDonald v. Patterson, 54 Cal. 245.

11. A municipal corporation may maintain ejectment to recover possession of streets which it owns, and is entitled to possess, subject to the right of citizens to pass and repass as an open highway.

San Francisco v. Sullivan, 50 Cal. 603.

12. One who claims title to land alleged to be a public street or highway can not maintain an action to quiet his title thereto against a street commissioner of a city, who claims no interest in the land.

Leet v. Rider, 48 Cal. 623.

13. Such street commissioner is the mere agent or servant of the city, and his acts done in the performance of his duty in opening streets are the acts of the city. Id.

DEDICATION.

14. Under an act of 1862, relating to the city of San Francisco (stats. 1862, p. 391, sec. 1), the mere dedication of land by the owner to public use, as public streets, lanes, alleys, or other public places, converts it into public streets, lanes, alleys, or other public places, for the purposes of said act, without any formal acceptance of the same as such by the board of supervisors, who may thereafter improve them in the manner provided by law, although until this is done there may not be any obligation to keep them in a safe or passable condition for public use.

Stone v. Brooks, 35 Cal. 490.

15. M., who was the owner of the middle one of three adjoining one-hundred-vara lots, which filled the space between Second and Third streets, in the city of San Francisco, offered it for sale, and sold portions of it at public auction in parcels or subdivided lots, each having a width of twenty-five feet, and fronting on either side on an extension of Perry street, which at that time, so far as actually opened, was but a cul de sac, extending at a right angle from Third street midway through the adjoining one-hundred-vara lot lying on Third street and terminating at M.'s said lot. But at said sale, M. had represented on a large map, by which the sale was made, said subdivided lots as each fronting on an extension of Perry street, made midway through her said lot, and terminating at the other adjoining one-hundred-vara lot lying on Second street. The sales were made to the highest bidder, and were absolute: Id est, that in law this constituted a dedication by M. of that portion of her lot which was represented on said map as an extension of Perry street to public use as a street, and as such was thereafter subject to the jurisdiction of the board of supervisors for all purposes of its improvement; which, when made, operates as a complete acceptance of the dedication, and perfects the right of the public to its use as a public highway for all purposes. Id.

16. A street or court which is a mere cul de sac may be dedicated to public use in like manner as a thoroughfare. Id.

17. P. executed to the city of San Francisco a quitclaim deed of certain strips of land to be used as public highways, under the name of "Belle Air place" and "Pfeiffer street," the same being part of a city lot occupied by himself and wife as a homestead. Afterwards, the parcels thus sold never having been open or used as highways, P. and wife executed a mortgage upon their homestead, describing it as bounded in part by a line running a certain course and distance "to Belle Air place," and thence a certain course and distance "to Pfeiffer street." The mortgaged premises having been sold under a decree of foreclosure in an action to which the husband and wife were parties, and the plaintiff having acquired the title of the purchaser, the mortgagors commenced to erect a building upon the spaces designated as streets, claiming that the same remained a part of their homestead and had not been dedicated as highways. In an action by plaintiff to enjoin this work: Held, that as to the mortgagees and those claiming under them, the mortgage was a dedication of the streets named as public highways, and vested in them a right of way; that the deed to the city might be referred to to show the width of these streets; that the homestead claim was barred by the foreclosure and sale; and that the right of way passed to the purchasers as an appurtenance of the lot, and therefore free from the claim of homestead.

Kittle v. Pfeiffer, 22 Cal. 484.

18. A deed which conveys to the present and future owners of town lots in a city, certain streets and public squares in such city, "for the public use of the inhabitants of such city, to be applied to such public purposes as the future incorporated authorities of said city from time to time declare and determine," dedicates the land to public use, and contains a sufficient designation of the grantees to make it operative as a conveyance. Mayo v. Wood, 50 Cal. 171.

19. If a city lays out and dedicates public squares on the pueblo lands within its limits, and the dedication is ratified by an act of the legislature, and congress afterwards relinquishes to the city the title of the United States to the lands, for the uses and purposes mentioned in the ratifying act, the act of congress confirms the dedication, and makes it operative upon the legal title, as well as upon such title as the city held prior to the act of congress.

Hoadley v. San Francisco, 50 Cal. 265.

POWERS OF LEGISLATURE AND OF BOARDS OF SUPERVISORS.

20. The legislative charter of the city and county of San Francisco confers the entire control, supervision and management of all the public streets, thoroughfares, etc., within its corporate limits, upon the board of supervisors and superintendent of public streets and highways. Eustace v. Jahns, 38 Cal. 3.

21. The law does not impose upon the owner of a lot fronting upon a public street in San Francisco the duty of repairing defects in the portions of the street upon which his lot abuts. Id.

22. Under the provisions of sections 3 and 8 of the act of 1862 (stats. 1862, p. 391), the jurisdiction is vested in the board of supervisors to determine whether the whole or a portion, and if a portion, what portion, of a street improvement shall be done as a single improvement. It is necessary to a proper execution of this important power, and to protect the interests of property-owners, that such determination should be distinctly and clearly expressed, so as to enable those interested to act intelligently. When so expressed the subsequent proceedings of the board must be in strict pursuance thereof as their sole authority, and if not so pursued, such subsequent proceedings will be void. Dougherty v. Hitchcock, 35 Cal. 512.

23. The board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco, in respect to street improvements, have whatever power is conferred by the statutes on that subject, and no other. The power which they possess must be exercised in the mode prescribed by said statutes, and in no other. "The mode in such cases constitutes the measure of the power."

N. P. Co. v. Painter, 35 Cal. 699.

24. The board of supervisors have no power, in making street improvements, so far as conferred by said statutes of 1862 and 1863, to do any kind of work which, for any cause, can not be let or contracted for in the mode prescribed by said statutes, or which the owners of the frontage are legally prohibited from performing. Id.

25. It was the intention of the statute authorizing street improvements in the city and county of San Francisco, to leave open for judicial inquiry all questions of a jurisdictional character, and to submit all other questions to the decision of the board of supervisors.

Chambers v. Satterlee, 40 Cal. 498.

26. Proceedings by which the citizen is to be divested of his property in invitum must be strictly pursued.

Stockton v. Whitmore, 50 Cal. 554.

27. By the act of April 3, 1876, providing for the change of grade of certain portions of Montgomery avenue, it was provided that the county court should appoint three disinterested citizens, freeholders in the city and county of San Francisco, to assess benefits and damages to such lots of land as might, in their opinion, be more benefited than damaged: Held, that the act was impracticable, and could not be carried into effect; that, in the absence of any defined assessment district, every freeholder in the city and county had an interest to decide that his own real property was not benefited by the change of grade, and that it was therefore impracticable to appoint disinterested commissioners, as required by the act.

Montgomery Avenue case, 54 Cal. 579.

Polack v. S. F. O. Asylum, 48 Cal. 490.

29. The municipal authorities of a city can not vacate a street without the consent of the legislature. Id.

30. The legislature may vacate a portion of a street, even if a person owns property fronting on another portion of the street which will incidentally be injured thereby. Id.

31. The state has no proprietary interest in the streets of a city dedicated to public use; and when it grants to a private corporation an easement over the streets not common to the public at large, it merely grants, in its sovereign capacity, a franchise, and not any proprietary interest in the streets.

San Francisco v. S. V. W. W., 48 Cal. 493.

32. As a general rule the fee of the streets in a city dedicated to public use is in the owners of the adjoining lands on each side, to the center of the street. Id.

33. The legislature has power to change a rule of evidence after the contract to which the rule applies has been made, and after the action in which the rule is to be applied has been commenced.

Himmelmann v. Carpentier, 47 Cal. 42.

34. There is no constitutional impediment which estops the legislature from enacting that, if a property-owner neglects to pay an assessment made for improving a street, it shall bear interest, even if the contract was made before the passage of the act.

Dougherty v. Henarie, 47 Cal. 9.

35. The legislature has no power to levy an assessment not uniform and equal, in an incorporated city for the purpose of improving a street.

Brady v. King, 53 Cal. 44.

36. The legislature, in providing for the improvement of the streets of a city, may adopt one mode for a part of the streets, and a different mode for the remainder, and may authorize the levy of an assessment per front foot to pay for either mode of improvement. Oakland P. Co. v. Rier, 52 Cal. 270.

37. The board of supervisors of San Francisco possess all the authority in respect to the improvement of streets which is not conferred expressly, or by necessary implication, upon some of the officers mentioned in the statute. Donnelly v. Tillman, 47 Cal. 40. Donnelly v. Marks, Id. 187.

38. The board of supervisors of San Francisco can not delegate the power to determine where work is necessary on a street.

People v. Clark, 47 Cal. 456.

Turney v. Dougherty, 53 Cal. 619.

40. Under section 3 of the act of April 1, 1872 (stats. 1871-2, p. 804), the board of supervisors of San Francisco had the power to order the construction of a sewer or other street improvement, extending through two or more streets.

Mahoney v. Braverman, 54 Cal. 565.

41. The sixth section of the present street law of San Francisco (stats. 1871-3, p. 808), requiring the superintendent of public streets upon the failure of a contractor to complete his work before the expiration of the contract time, to report the same to the supervisors, and the supervisors to relet the work, is mandatory, and excludes the exercise by the board or superintendent, of any power to extend the time for completing the work after the expiration of the contract time, or an extension ordered during the running of the contract time, and such an extension is therefore void.

Beveridge v. Livingstone, 54 Cal. 54.

RESOLUTION OF INTENTION.

42. A resolution of the board of supervisors of San Francisco, declaring an intention to improve a street, may include a declaration of intention to both grade and macadamize. Such resolution sufficiently describes the work to be done if it declares that the street will be graded and macadamized from one designated point to another.

Emery v. S. F. G. Co., 28 Cal. 345.

43. Under the provisions of section 3 of the act of 1862, the mayor of the city and county of San Francisco is not required to sign a resolution of the board of supervisors declaring their intention to improve a public street. Cochran v. Collins, 29 Cal. 129.

Hendricks v. Crowley, 31 Id. 471.

Taylor v. Palmer, Id. 241.

44. A resolution of the board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco, declaratory of intention to grade a street, must be presented to the president of the board for his approval.

Thompson v. Hoge, 30 Cal. 179.

45. Creighton v. Manson, 27 Cal. 613, affirmed as to necessity of a resolution of the board of supervisors of San Francisco of intention to grade a street being presented to the president of the board for his signature.

Id.

46. A resolution declaring an intention to improve a street in San Francisco is not vitiated because it states an intention to grade and macadamize from Mission to Howard street, while the contract executed under the resolution calls for grading and macadamizing that portion of the street "except where done."

Emery v. S. F. Gas Co., 28 Cal. 345.

47. The board of supervisors of San Francisco have power to cause to be graded the distance of several blocks, in one contract.

Himmelman v. Steiner, 38 Cal. 175.

48. A resolution of intention was for the grading of Clay street, from Taylor to Jones, and from Jones to Leavenworth streets, and the crossing of Clay and Jones street. The board ordered the work to be done; the advertisement for proposals was for the same work, the bidders being notified to put in separate bids for each block and the crossing, and by the resolution of award, the contract for the whole work was awarded to the lowest bidder, at specified prices for each block and the street crossing. The contract entered into was for one block only: Held, that the contract was wholly unauthorized.

Dougherty v. Hitchcock, 35 Cal. 512.

49. The board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco acquire jurisdiction of the subject-matter of improving a street in the city and county of San Francisco, after the expiration of the notice of intention to improve.

Dougherty v. Miller, 36 Cal. 83.

50. The place where work is to be done in improving a street in San Francisco must be determined by the judgment of the board of supervisors in the resolution of intention. The board can not leave the selection of the place where work is to be performed between any two points to the superintendent of streets, or any other person.

Richardson v. Heydenfeldt, 46 Cal. 68.

51. If a resolution of intention to improve a street in San Francisco provides that the street shall be improved where necessary, the board of supervisors acquires no jurisdiction, and the assessment is void.

People v. Ladd, 47 Cal. 603.

Chambers v. Satterlee, 40 Cal. 498.

53. In order to get jurisdiction to order street work done in San Francisco, the board of supervisors must describe the work in the resolution of intention.

Brady v. King, 53 Cal. 44.

54. The board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco must specify in a resolution of intention to perform work on a street, the work to be done. It is not sufficient to declare its intention to cause certain repairs to be made "where necessary."

Randolph v. Gawley, 47 Cal. 458.

55. A resolution passed by the board of supervisors of San Francisco, declaring their intention to improve a street, need not contain a complete plan and specifications of the proposed improvement. The resolution of intention need not describe the work with any more exactness than it is described in the law itself.

Harney v. Holler, 47 Cal. 15.

56. In the city of Stockton, if the council adopt a resolution of intention to improve a street, or part of a street, it has no jurisdiction to improve only a portion of the street embraced in the resolution.

Stockton v. Whitmore, 50 Cal. 554.

57. In San Francisco, the macadamizing of a street, and the construction of sidewalks, are different kinds of work, and when a street is ordered to be macadamized, it is meant that the roadway only is to be improved.

Himmelman v. Satterlee, 50 Cal. 66.

58. Under a resolution of intention to macadamize and curb a street, the board of supervisors of San Francisco do not acquire jurisdiction to order work to be performed on a sidewalk; and if the notice for sealed proposals calls for work also to be done on the sidewalks, the contract following the notice is void unless the work done on the sidewalks can be separated from that done on the roadway.

Id.

59. A resolution of intention to curb and macadamize a street does not include the sidewalk.

Dyer v. Chase, 52 Cal. 440.

60. The twenty-eighth section of the act to authorize the improvement of streets in the city of Oakland, which provides that the council shall have full power to improve Broadway street in such manner as it may deem proper, does not dispense with the necessity of the passage of a resolution of intention, and its publication, before an improvement can be made on Broadway.

Oakland Paving Co. v. Rier, 52 Cal. 270.

61. Under said section, after a resolution of intention to improve Broadway street has been passed by the council, and published, so that jurisdiction is acquired, the council may order such portion of the proposed work to be done, as it may deem proper, or may leave the amount of work to be done on the crossings and culverts to the determination of the street superintendent. Id.

62. If, in improving a street in a city, the specifications require work not mentioned in the resolution of intention, it does not vitiate the assessment if such additional work is not mentioned in the contract, and it does not appear that it was done, or that any charge was made for it. Id.

63. In improving the street of a city, if the resolution of intention calls for "additional macadamizing," the specifications may provide for lifting the rock on the roadway, and relaying a part with new rock, and this is "additional macadamizing." Id.

64. The question reserved, whether the board of supervisors of San Francisco should order the publication of a resolution of intention to improve a street, or whether it may be published without such order.

Dyer v. North, 44 Cal. 157.

65. The provisions of the statute, which authorizes the board of supervisors to order street work to be done, after notice of their intention to order the work has been published for ten days, requires the notice to be given by the board itself, and the publication required can only be made by their authority. Chambers v. Satterlee, 40 Cal. 497.

66. After the board has acquired jurisdiction to act, by due publication of the resolution of intention, they must still exercise their power in the mode prescribed by law. Id.

67. The board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco have no jurisdiction to give notice of an intention to order or to order grading done on any street mentioned in the third section of the act of 1872, p. 805, in the absence of a petition signed by the owners of a majority of the frontage of the land made liable for the grading, except public property.

Turriil v. Grattan, 52 Cal. 97.

68. There is no substantial difference between the absence of a petition and a petition lacking the essential averment. Id.

69. A resolution of intention to improve a street in San Francisco, under the act of April 4, 1870, must be published five days, exclusive of Sundays.

People v. McCain, 51 Cal. 360.

Advertising for Proposals.

70. An order of the board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco, authorizing the clerk of the board to advertise for proposals to do street work is sufficient, although it does not mention sealed proposals nor specify the time or place of giving notice.

Himmelmann v. Byrne, 41 Cal. 500.

71. A resolution of the board of supervisors of San Francisco, authorizing their clerk to advertise for proposals to do certain work mentioned in the resolution, on a street therein named, is sufficient authority to said clerk to advertise five days for proposals in the mode provided by law, as well as to post notices in the office of the superintendent of streets. Shepard v. Colton, 44 Cal. 628.

72. The posting of the notice inviting proposals for the execution of work, in the office of the superintendent of streets, for a period of three days instead of five, as required by law, is a violation of the statute in a matter affecting the substantial rights of persons interested, and is such a defect as renders all the subsequent proceedings void.

Hughes v. Reis, 40 Cal. 255.

73. The notice inviting proposals for improving a street in the city and county of San Francisco must be posted in the office of the superintendent of public streets and highways, for five official days; that is, before nine o'clock A. M. of the first day, and must remain posted until four o'clock P. M. of the fifth day.

Himmelmann v. Cahn, 49 Cal. 285.

Brooks v. Satterlee, Id. 289.

74. The erroneous use of the word "regraded" instead of "graded," in the notice inviting sealed proposals for the grading of a street, does not vitiate the notice.

Brady v. Feisel, 53 Cal. 49.

75. Under the act of March 27, 1872, "to reincorporate the city of Stockton," notices inviting sealed proposals to do street work must refer to a diagram and specifications of the proposed work.

Stockton v. Clark, 53 Cal. 82.

76. The adoption of a resolution by the city council of Stockton, directing the publication of advertisements inviting proposals for street work, to be done "in accordance with the plans and specifications thereof now on file in the office of the city clerk," is equivalent to the adoption of such plans and specifications, and is tantamount to a prior direction to the city surveyor to make a survey, diagram, estimates, and specifications. Stockton v. Skinner, 53 Cal. 85.

ORDER FOR WORK.

77. Under the consolidation act of 1856 for San Francisco, and the act of 1859 amendatory thereof, the board of supervisors have no power to order a contract for plank-ing, paving, piling or repaving a street which has been once paved, piled, etc., except in the instance given in section 53 as amended by section 10 of the act of 1859.

Blanchard v. Beideman, 18 Cal. 261.

78. In other cases not within this excep-tion, where the plank-ing or paving of a street or sidewalk needs local repairs, the supervisors can not authorize a contract to be made by the superintendent of streets for such repairs; but the proceeding must be by notice to the owner, etc., of the property, according to section 56 as amended by sec-tion 12 of the act of 1859. Id.

79. The Nicolson pavement being an invention, and the plaintiff being the sole owner, the board can not order the same to be laid down, as there can be no competition amongst bidders for laying it down which the street law provides for.

N. P. Co. v. Painter, 35 Cal. 699.

80. The board of supervisors of San Fran-cisco can not order the Nicolson pavement to be laid down, in cases where the lands of the property-owner are to be assessed, unless upon the petition of a majority of the own-ers, or their agents, in frontage, and upon the condition that the same shall not cost to exceed twenty-eight cents in coin per square foot. Id.

81. An order to improve a public street, made by the board of supervisors of San Francisco, after having acquired jurisdiction, is in the nature of a judgment.

Dougherty v. Foley, 32 Cal. 402.

82. An ordinance for the improvement of the streets, passed by the council before the expiration of the time for the presenta-tion of the protest, is not thereby invalid.

Burnett v. Sacramento, 12 Cal. 76.

83. The statute only inhibits the council from proceeding with the improvements in case of such protest, and it was competent for them to pass the ordinance in advance of the time, provided they did not attempt to enforce it until afterwards. Id.

84. The charter of the city of San Fran-cisco provides that when the common coun-cil think proper to open or improve a street, etc., notice shall be given, and if no pro-test be made, as provided, then the council shall proceed with the improvement: Hell, that when an ordinance had passed to give the required notice, which was given, and no protest made, the full discretionary power of the council had been exercised, and it be-came binding as a contract between the city and the property-holders to make the im-provement, the remaining acts on the part of the city being mere ministerial duties of its proper officers.

Lucas v. San Francisco, 7 Cal. 463.

85. Parties who do not remonstrate against a proposed street improvement in San Fran-cisco can not claim the benefit of a re-monstrance filed by other parties.

Harney v. Heller, 47 Cal. 15.

86. If a remonstrance to a street im-provement in San Francisco is filed with the board of supervisors, and it is referred to a committee, and the board, before the com-mittee reports, and without any action di-rectly on the petition, directs the work to be done, it is practically a passing upon and a decision against the remonstrance. Id.

CHANGE OF GRADE.

87. Under the act of March 23, 1868 (con-cerning the change of street grades in San Francisco), it was the purpose of the legisla-ture to confine the award of damages to those who should petition for their allowance as provided by said act.

In re Beale Street, 30 Cal. 495.

88. The commissioners under the above act have no authority to award damages in excess of the amount claimed in the petition. Id.

89. A city has the right to raise the grade of a street; and if the contractor performs the work with proper care and skill, he is not responsible for any damage which may result to the contiguous property.

Shaw v. Crocker, 42 Cal. 435.

90. It is the duty of commissioners ap-pointed under that act to ascertain and re-port the damages to the owner of each spe-cific parcel of land affected by the proposed work, which should include the value of lands taken for the street.

Jacobus v. Oakland, 42 Cal. 21.

91. The legislature did intend that the aggregate damages to private property, in-cluding the value of land taken for the street, and the expenses of the commissioners, should be paid for in money by assessment upon the several parcels of land benefited by the proposed improvement, in proportion to the benefits to accrue to each. Id.

92. The only remedy for property-owners who have suffered damage under the acts of 1868 and 1870, relative to modifying grades of streets in San Francisco, is by application to the legislature for relief.

Appeal of Houghton, 42 Cal. 35.

93. The auditor, in making a duplicate copy of the assessment roll, under the act of March 30, 1868, for modifying the grade of certain streets in San Francisco, need not attach thereto a copy of the certificate of the mayor appended to the original roll, certifying to its correctness.

S. F. v. Certain Real Estate, 50 Cal. 188.

AWARD OF WORK.

94. The resolution of award is the letter of authority to the superintendent, and he has no more power to contract for the performance of only a part of the work therein specified than of additional work.

Dougherty v. Hitchcock, 35 Cal. 512.

95. In an action for the recovery of an assessment for the improvement of a street in San Francisco, it is necessary for the plaintiff to prove, if the same is denied, that notice of the award of the contract to the plaintiff for the improvement was published for five days, pursuant to an order of the board of supervisors.

Shepard v. Colton, 44 Cal. 628.

CONTRACTS—EXTENSIONS—RE-ADVERTISING—RELETTING.

96. The common council of the city of San Francisco passed an ordinance authorizing the street commissioner to advertise for proposals to grade, plank, and sewer a portion of Mission street, in said city, "the same to be paid for by the property-holders adjacent, * * * the proposals to be opened and awarded by the street commissioner, with the committees on streets from both boards of aldermen." This ordinance was published for ten days successively in a daily newspaper of the city, and the advertisement required was made in like manner for the same period. Proposals, based upon certain specifications, were received under the ordinance, and opened by the committees of the two boards and the commissioner, and the work awarded to B. Subsequently, an instrument was executed by B., as contractor, and by the street commissioner, purporting to act in the name of the city, setting forth the acceptance by the city of B.'s proposal, and an agreement by her to pay him for the work at certain designated rates, and an agreement on his part to do the work to the satisfaction of the city and the street commissioner. B. began the work, and afterwards transferred his contract and his interest therein to plaintiff, who completed the work in the best manner, and to the satisfaction of the street commissioner and the city. The work was measured, as it progressed, by the city's engineer, who duly certified to the accounts for the same, which accounts were duly audited, and upon them warrants were drawn by the controller, by authority of the city, and delivered to plaintiff. The warrants were presented to the treasurer, and payment demanded and refused, on the ground that there were no funds in the treasury applicable to them. Previous to the demand, assessments had been duly levied by the city upon the property adjacent to the improvements, to meet their expenses, and these assessments had been collected by the collector of street assessments, and by him paid into the city treasury. Plaintiff sues the city, as liable either on the express contract, or upon the warrants, or upon implied contracts, for the services rendered and materials furnished, or for money received by defendant to his use: Held, that, as under the charter, the city had authority to order the improvements in question, the acceptance of the proposals of B. by the street commissioner and the committees of the two boards converted what were previously mere propositions on the part of the city into contracts, perfect in all their parts, binding alike upon the city and the contractor; held, further, that the city is primarily liable; that she, and not the contractor, must look to the property-holders adjacent to the improvements for the necessary expenses; that the property-holders are not parties to the contracts; that the city must levy and collect the assessments; that the contractor has no claim upon the property or the property-holders, but must look alone to the city; that the clause in the ordinance as to how the improvements shall be paid for, is only a designation of the sources upon which the city relies for payment.

Argenti v. San Francisco, 16 Cal. 255.

97. Plaintiff, by virtue of contracts entered into with an officer of the city of San Francisco, which contracts were executed by such officer in his official capacity, made valuable and permanent improvements to the city, for the exclusive benefit of it and its inhabitants; such improvements were made under the immediate supervision of an officer of the city, and when completed, were approved of and received by him, on behalf of the city; plaintiff, in making the improvements, relied on the validity of the contracts and the obligation of the city to pay, as therein provided; the city authorities were fully informed of these facts, took no steps to repudiate the contracts, or to inform plaintiff as to her disposition to pay: Held, that plaintiff can recover on the contracts, although there is no evidence that the officer signing them was expressly authorized; that the silence of the city authorities, under the circumstances, was equivalent to a direct sanction of the acts of such officer, and estops the city from denying his authority; that the city having acquiesced in the contracts from the commencement to the completion of the improvements, never questioning the validity of the contracts until she had received all the benefit to be had from their performance, it would be a fraud on plaintiff to permit her now to repudiate them. Id.

98. The mayor and controller of said city having drawn warrants on the treasurer thereof, payable out of the street assessment fund, in favor of plaintiff, for the improvements so made under said contracts: Held, that plaintiff can not recover on the warrants; that being payable out of a particular fund, they are neither bills of exchange nor promissory notes, and that the treasurer must pay from that fund, and no other.

Id.

99. A contract to grade a street in San Francisco need not follow the precise language of the statute, or contain a condition in express terms that "the materials used shall be such as are required by the superintendent of streets." If by fair and reasonable construction it can be held to contain such condition, the call of the statute is answered. Taylor v. Palmer, 31 Cal. 240.

100. If a contract to do work provides that the work shall be done according to certain specifications which are annexed to it, the specifications are a part of the contract. Id.

101. Since the amendments to the consolidation act, passed in 1863, the board of supervisors of San Francisco may extend the time within which a contract to perform work on a street is to be performed. Id.

102. A contract to macadamize a street in San Francisco, made with the superintendent of streets, binds the party to use such materials as are required by the superintendent if it provides that the work shall be performed according to specifications annexed, and such specifications made by the superintendent name the material to be used.

Emory v. S. F. Gas Co., 28 Cal. 345.

103. After the board of supervisors of San Francisco have taken steps to acquire jurisdiction, and have ordered a public street of said city to be improved, and have let the contract, if the contractor fails to enter upon the performance of the work within the time fixed in his contract to perform, the board may readvertise for bids and relet the contract without taking steps to acquire jurisdiction as in the first instance.

Dougherty v. Foley, 32 Cal. 402.

104. Conlin v. Seaman, 22 Cal. 546, to the effect that the superintendent of streets of San Francisco has the power to extend the time for completion of contracts for the improvement of streets made by him, affirmed.

Houston v. McKenna, 22 Cal. 550.

105. The law of contracts is not applicable, when the state or county government is a party, in respect to the mode or measure of enforcement.

Sharp v. Contra Costa Co., 34 Cal. 284.

106. Where the owner of a lot neglects for three days, after notice from the superintendent of public streets of said city, to repair the street in front of his lot, the superintendent has a right to make a contract for that purpose; and an action will lie in the name of the party performing the work against the owner of the lot adjacent for the amount. Hart v. Gaven, 12 Cal. 476.

107. The city would not be liable independent of the contract made by her acceptance of the proposals of the contractor. A municipal corporation can only act in the cases and in the mode prescribed by its charter, and for street improvements of a local nature, express contracts, authorized by ordinance, are necessary to create a liability. The doctrine of liability as upon implied contracts, has no application to cases of this character.

Argenti v. San Francisco, 16 Cal. 255.

108. In this case, the city having discharged the assessments, by receiving in payment thereof outstanding warrants, she is primarily liable to plaintiff as for moneys received to his use, even on the theory that she acted simply as the agent of the plaintiff in collecting the assessments.

Id.

109. The improvements in this case, being to particular streets, were local in their character, and though to some extent of general benefit, yet were chiefly for the benefit and advantage of the immediate neighborhood. The advantages resulting from them do not constitute that kind of general advantage to the city, from the existence of which any liability to pay for the same can be inferred. The general doctrine that when one takes a benefit which is the result of another's labor he is bound to pay for the same, does not apply to cases of this kind. The benefit is immediate to the adjacent property-holders, and only indirectly to the city at large.

Id.

110. The street superintendent of San Francisco, under the consolidation act, has power to enlarge the time for completion of a contract for street improvements made by him, and if any property-owner feels aggrieved by such action he must appeal to the board of supervisors, or he will be deemed to have acquiesced therein.

Conlin v. Seaman, 22 Cal. 546.

111. Under the statutes regulating street improvements in San Francisco, the board of supervisors have the power to readvertise for bids where a contractor has failed to perform the work, without repeating the steps necessary to obtain jurisdiction.

Himmelman v. Oliver, 34 Cal. 246.

112. The legislature has the power to ratify the resolutions for the extension of the time for the completion of the contract.

Himmelman v. Steiner, 38 Cal. 175.

113. When the person who has contracted to grade a street in the city of San Francisco, fails to perform the work, and it becomes necessary or expedient to relet the job, the same course must be pursued in reletting which is prescribed in the first instance by the sixth section of the statute in relation to the improvement of streets in San Francisco.

Meuser v. Risdon, 36 Cal. 239.

114. In case of such reletting, the clerk of the board of supervisors, as such, has no power to give the notice inviting proposals for the work, nor does the original resolution of the board inviting proposals confer such authority, nor can the board confer such authority on him by a general resolution, directing him in all cases where contractors fail to perform to readvertise for proposals. Id.

115. Each proceeding to improve a street in San Francisco, whether in relation to the first contract or a reletting on the failure of the first contractor to perform, is a separate and independent proceeding, and must stand or fall by itself. Id.

116. Under the statute regulating street improvements in San Francisco, the board of supervisors adopted a resolution of intention to grade Clay street from Taylor to Jones and from Jones to Leavenworth streets, and the crossing of Clay and Jones streets, and subsequently ordered said work to be done, and the clerk advertised for proposals for its performance, notifying bidders to put in separate bids for each block and said crossing. The board awarded a contract for the whole work. The only contract entered into by the superintendent of streets, etc., with the successful bidder was for the grading of one block only—that from Jones to Leavenworth streets: Held, first, that the resolution of intention and its publication constituted the sole authority of the board to proceed, in the statute mode, to order said work to be done, and that thereby no authority was conferred to act upon any other or different work; second, that the work designated in the resolution of intention constituted one distinct and entire subject-matter; third, that the resolution of award constituted the sole authority to the superintendent, who acted ministerially only in making a contract under it, and that the contract, by reason of variance between its terms and the resolution of award, was unauthorized and void; and, fourth, that a contract duly authorized under said act, and executed according to its requirements, is indispensable to the validity of any assessment upon property to pay for street improvements.

Dougherty v. Hitchcock, 35 Cal. 512.

117. Proposals for bids to make certain improvements in the city of San Francisco, consisting of more than one kind of work, were made by the board of supervisors, and let to R., who was the sole bidder therefor, as one job. One of said kinds of work was to put down the Nicolson pavement, the exclusive right to construct which in said city was at that time owned by the plaintiff, R.'s assignee, under letters patent of the United States: Held, that because this course had the effect to preclude all persons other than the owner of said patent right from bidding, and the property-owners from taking the contract for any portion of said work, the contract as let was void.

Nicolson Pavement Co. v. Fay, 35 Cal. 695.

118. Whatever power said board of supervisors has in relation to the Nicolson pavement is derived from the statute relating thereto (stats. 1865-6, p. 720), under which the power can be exercised only upon the petition therefor of a majority of the owners, or their agents, in frontage, and upon the condition that the pavement shall not cost to exceed twenty-eight cents in coin per square foot. Where the board advertised for proposals and awarded a contract for the construction of said pavement in said city, without having received said petition: Held, that the contract was void.

Nicolson P. Co. v. Painter, 35 Cal. 699.

119. Where said board, while assuming to act under said statutes of 1862 and 1863, advertised for proposals to put down on a street in said city the Nicolson pavement, which had been patented under the laws of the United States, and awarded a contract therefor to R., who owned the exclusive right to put down said pavement in said city, and who alone put in a bid for said contract: Held, that the board exceeded its authority, and the contract was void. Id.

120. Although contracts are made on behalf of the city and county of San Francisco in the name of the superintendent of streets, he is but the agent of the corporation in that behalf; and, pro hac vice, his act is the act of the corporation.

Drew v. Smith, 38 Cal. 326.

121. In entering into a written contract for the performance of street work, ordered by resolution of the board of supervisors, the superintendent of streets becomes pro hac vice the special agent of the board, with authority to execute the contract which has been awarded, and no other or different contract. Chambers v. Satterlee, 40 Cal. 497.

122. An act performed by a special agent in excess of his authority, which is divisible in its nature, so that the part which he was authorized to perform can be separated from the rest, without injury to the principal; the latter will be bound by it so far as he authorized it, and it will be void only for the excess. Id.

123. A contract entered into by the superintendent of streets, under a resolution of the board of supervisors, ordering a street to be graded to the official grade, but which provided, in addition, that the roadway should be graded one foot below the official grade, is divisible in its nature, and is valid to the extent that it is authorized by the resolution of the board. Id.

124. If the street superintendent of a city enters into a written contract with a party to improve the streets of a city, which is void for want of authority to make it, and the other contracting party makes a written assignment on the back thereof of "the articles of agreement on the other side thereof written, and all moneys hereafter due, payable, or to be paid therefrom, and the full benefit, profit, and advantage thereof," it is not a mere assignment of the written contract, but transfers to the assignee the right to collect, demand, and receive all moneys due or to become due for the work specified in the contract, even if recovered on a quantum meruit, or for work and labor.

Wetmore v. San Francisco, 44 Cal. 294.

125. If an ordinance of a city, providing for grading a street containing several blocks, requires that bidders shall bid on each block separately, a bid to grade the entire street at so much per cubic yard is an error which enables a lot-owner to defeat the collection of an assessment.

Stockton v. Creanor, 45 Cal. 643.

126. If the charter of a city authorizes the council to cause the streets to be graded and to let contracts for that purpose, and provides that the council may reject all bids, a committee of the council can not accept a bid or award a contract to grade a street. Id.

127. The owner of property adjacent to a street is not a party to a contract for the improvement of the same, made between a third party and the superintendent of streets. Dyer v. Barstow, 50 Cal. 652.

128. The owner of property adjacent to a street, and which is assessed for a street improvement, is first brought into relations with the proceedings when the assessment is issued. Id.

129. The act of April 4, 1870, relative to street assessments in San Francisco, does not apply to contracts made previous to the passage of that act, nor to the remedies for their enforcement. Id., 53 Cal. 81.

130. If a corporation attempts to confer power on its president to contract with a city for the improvement of a street, and the power is defective, but the contract (in form) is made with the corporation, the work is done by the corporation, the assessment is issued to the corporation, and suit for the work is brought by the corporation, both the city and corporation are estopped to deny the due execution of the contract, and the lot-owner when sued for the assessment can not be heard to allege that the contract was not executed by the corporation.

Oakland Paving Co. v. Rier, 52 Cal. 270.

ASSESSMENT, DIAGRAM AND WARRANT.

131. Section 13, article XI of the constitution, provides for equality and uniformity of taxation upon property, but applies only to that charge or imposition upon property which it is necessary to levy to raise funds to defray the expenses of the government of the state, or of some county or town. It has no reference to special assessments for local improvements, by which individual parties are chiefly benefited in the increased value of their property, and in which the public is only to a limited extent interested.

Burnett v. Sacramento, 12 Cal. 76.

132. For the expenses of such improvements, it is competent for the legislature to provide, either by general taxation upon the property of all the inhabitants of the county or town in which they are made, or upon property adjacent thereto, and specially benefited thereby. Id.

133. Where the charter of the city of Sacramento authorized the common council to levy a special assessment for grading and improving the streets of the city, and provided, that when the council thought it expedient to open, alter or improve any street, they should give notice, etc., and if one third of all the owners in value of the adjacent property protest against the proposed improvement within ten days after the last publication, it shall not be made; and a protest was presented more than ten days after the last publication of such notice: Held, that such protest was not presented in time, and was therefore ineffectual; held, further, that it must appear that one third of the owners in value of the adjacent property united in it. Id.

134. That provision of the charter authorizing the improvement, and the mode and manner of the assessment, is not in conflict with the thirteenth section of article XI of the constitution of this state. Id.

135. If a street is opened in a city, and to pay for the land taken, and the damages to improvements thereon or adjacent thereto, and injured thereby, and all other expenses, bonds are issued; and to pay the same and the interest thereon, an annual percentage is directed to be levied on the lots benefited thereby, which percentage is upon the enhanced value of the lots, as fixed by a board of public works, this imposition is an assessment and not a tax.

Doyle v. Austin, 47 Cal. 353.

136. In such case the interest to accrue on the bonds, and the discount suffered in converting them into cash, are incidental expenses, and the property benefited is only charged with the cost of the improvement. Id.

137. When a statute for opening a street in a city provides that, to pay the damages and expenses incurred thereby, an assessment shall be levied on the lots benefited "according to the enhanced value of the respective parcels of lands as fixed" in a report of a board of public works, the assessment must be limited to the increased value of each lot caused by the improvement, and must not include the value of the lot without the improvement. Id.

138. When, to pay the expenses of opening a street in a city, an assessment is imposed on the lots to be benefited thereby, in proportion to the benefits accruing to each, the exemption from the assessment, of lots belonging to the United States, to this state, and to the city, does not render the statute void, or the assessment illegal. Id.

139. An assessment for improving a street in San Francisco must contain a description of the property assessed.

Himmelman v. Cahn, 49 Cal. 285.

140. An assessment made upon lots in a city for the purpose of improving a street may be apportioned by reference to the number of front feet to the lots, or any other standard which will approximate equality; yet, whatever standard is adopted, it must be levied with uniformity and equality.

People v. Lynch, 51 Cal. 15.

141. If, in levying such assessment, a lot of land within the district declared to be benefited is not assessed, and the whole expense is assessed upon the remaining lots, the whole assessment is void. Id.

142. Street assessments in Sacramento are required to be levied and collected as provided in the general revenue laws of the state.

Mayo v. Ah Loy, 32 Cal. 477.

143. Assessments for improvement of streets in Sacramento are required to be listed to the owner, if known; if not known, to him as "unknown owner." Id.

144. If such assessment is not paid, the district attorney must sue the person assessed, the real estate, and all "owners and claimants" to the same. Id.

145. When such assessment is thus made, and the suit is thus brought, and the summons is properly served, the judgment when rendered is conclusive and binding upon all the world. Id.

146. If the person who contracts with the street superintendent in San Francisco to improve a street, before the contract is made, makes a private contract with a part of the owners of the lots liable to be assessed for the improvement to do their work for less than the price allowed by the contract, this private contract is in fraud of the law under which the streets are improved; but the fraud is no defense in an action by the contractor to recover the assessment, and must be taken advantage of by a remonstrance to or an appeal to the board of supervisors.

Nolan v. Reese, 32 Cal. 484.

147. The word "assessment" is employed in the constitution to represent those local burdens imposed by municipal corporations upon property bordering upon an improved street, for the purpose of paying the cost of the improvement, and laid with reference to the benefit the property is supposed to receive from the expenditure of the money. Property not benefited by the improvement can not be subjected to an assessment for it.

Taylor v. Palmer, 31 Cal. 240.

148. The power of "assessment" can not be exercised as an independent or principal power, like that of "taxation," but must be used as an incident to the power of organizing municipal corporations. Id.

149. To render valid an assessment on a lot for the improvement of a street in San Francisco, the various acts prescribed by the statute must, in all essential particulars, be strictly performed.

Smith v. Davis, 30 Cal. 536.

150. An assessment on a lot in San Francisco for street improvements must be made to the owner, if known, and if not known, the word "unknown" must be written opposite the number of the lot and the amount of the assessment.

Himmelman v. Steiner, 38 Cal. 175.

151. Under the San Francisco street assessment law, the assessment and diagram, as recorded, must show in what direction the streets run.

Norton v. Courtney, 53 Cal. 691.

152. The assessment must show the locality of the street assessed, and if a diagram is used, it must contain such references as will enable the description of the premises to be understood.

San Francisco v. Quackenbush, 53 Cal. 52.

153. A diagram for a street assessment in San Francisco is sufficient, if it correctly exhibits the street and street crossings on which work has been done, and shows the number of front feet assessed for the work contracted for and performed, and the relative location of each lot or portion of a lot to the work done.

Dorland v. McGlynn, 47 Cal. 47.

154. The description in an assessment for a street improvement may be made by a diagram; and on such diagram, the point of a scroll is as competent as the barb of an arrow to denote north. Accordingly, where the diagram in such an assessment exhibited the streets on which the work has been done, the lot itself as designated by its number, the number of its feet front on the street, and the depths of its side lines, and also a scroll designating the direction of the street: Hehl, that the description was sufficient.

Whiting v. Quackenbush, 54 Cal. 406.

155. An assessment on a lot for street improvements in San Francisco is void, unless made to the true owner, or to "unknown owners." Taylor v. Donner, 31 Cal. 480.

156. When an assessment for street improvements in San Francisco is made to a person as the owner, it creates no liability against any other person, and not against him unless he is the owner. Id.

157. The word "unknown," written in the assessment opposite the number of the lot, is sufficient to show that the name of the owner was unknown to the superintendent of streets, and is an exact compliance with the statute in that respect.

Hughes v. Reis, 40 Cal. 255.

158. An assessment on property for street work, made by the superintendent of streets, to "unknown owners," amounts to an official certificate by the proper officer that the owner of the particular lot designated was unknown to him. The certificate is conclusive of the truth of the fact so certified, and can not be collaterally called in question in an action brought upon the assessment.

Chambers v. Satterlee, 40 Cal. 498.

159. The superintendent of streets in San Francisco, unless he is satisfied beyond all doubt as to the ownership of a lot, may assess it to "unknown owner" (and it is almost impossible to show that he did know the owner), and when the assessment is made to "unknown owner," payment of an assessment on it for improving the street may be demanded publicly on the premises.

Himmelman v. Hoadley, 44 Cal. 213.

160. If a lot in San Francisco is assessed for a street improvement to a person by name, and not to unknown owners, the contractor can not recover judgment against another person for the assessment.

Blatner v. Davis, 32 Cal. 328.

161. An assessment on a lot in San Francisco for a street improvement, made to a person by name, is an assessment to him as owner. Such assessment, to be valid, must be made to the owner, if known. Id.

162. In a proceeding for the improvement of streets in San Francisco by contract, under the regulations of the consolidation act, the liability of the real owner is not released or affected by an erroneous assessment of the tax upon his property to another person.

Conlin v. Seaman, 22 Cal. 546.

162a. If the superintendent of public streets and highways in San Francisco, in assessing a lot for improvements on the street on which the lot fronts, makes the assessment to a deceased person, the assessment is void.

Smith v. Davis, 30 Cal. 536.

163. By the legislative acts of 1862 and 1863, concerning street improvements in San Francisco, it is made the duty of the superintendent of streets, in the first instance, to make the assessment for street improvements, and deliver the same, with a warrant attached, to the contractor, authorizing him to collect the money from the owners of the lots liable therefor. Smith v. Cofran, 34 Cal. 310.

164. An assessment for the improvement of a street in a city is a municipal tax, and in San Francisco the property-owner is not brought into relations with the proceedings resulting in the assessment, until the tax is levied, which is when the assessment is made and issued.

Hancock v. Whittemore, 50 Cal. 522.

165. If an assessment for the improvement of a street in San Francisco is made after the death of the property-owner, the tax assessed is not a claim against his estate which is required to be presented to the administrator for allowance. Id.

166. The making of an assessment is an official act on the part of the superintendent, and its character and authority can be attested in only one manner, and that is the official signature of the superintendent; signing the warrant only, is not sufficient.

Dougherty v. Hitchcock, 35 Cal. 512.

167. Where an assessment is void, it is the duty of the superintendent to make a new one, without regard to time.

Himmelman v. Cofran, 36 Cal. 411.

168. The property-owner is for the first time brought into relation with the proceedings for the improvement of the street, when the assessment is made.

Himmelman v. Steiner, 38 Cal. 175.

169. An assessment for grading a street in San Francisco, which gives the numbers of the lots to be assessed, as shown upon a diagram attached to the assessment, and the frontage of each lot, and refers to the diagram for further description, sufficiently describes the property to be assessed.

Hughes v. Reis, 40 Cal. 255.

170. Unless all the provisions of the statute, prior to the award of a contract for a street improvement in San Francisco, are complied with, the defendant is not liable for the assessment.

Himmelman v. Danos, 35 Cal. 441.

171. Where the statute requires a series of acts to be performed before the owners of the property are properly chargeable with the tax, such acts are conditions precedent to the exercise of the power to levy the tax, and all the requirements of the statute must be complied with or the tax can not be collected.

Hughes v. Reis, 40 Cal. 255.

172. The tax collector of the city and county of San Francisco has no authority to add five per cent. to an assessment for widening Kearny street, on failure of the owner to pay the assessment when due.

Bucknall v. Story, 36 Cal. 67.

173. If, at the time the board of supervisors of San Francisco acquire jurisdiction to improve a street, and when the contract is entered into, any part of the land fronting on the street to be improved constitutes one lot, the contractor is entitled to have the cost of the improvement made opposite the lot assessed on the whole of the same, in one assessment; and no subsequent change in cutting up the lot by selling parts of the same, can defeat that right.

Dougherty v. Miller, 36 Cal. 83.

174. When a contract is let for improving a street in San Francisco, and the length of the street is afterwards increased, and lots fronting on that portion added to the street are assessed for the improvement, the question arises as to whether the assessment is not void for want of jurisdiction.

Himmelman v. Hoadley, 44 Cal. 276.

175. An assessment for widening a street, void on its face, creates no lien on the property, and a purchaser at the sale does not acquire even a color of title which will operate as a cloud on the true title.

Bucknall v. Story, 46 Cal. 589.

176. If property is assessed for the widening of a street, not to the true owner, but to a stranger, and the owner pays the money to prevent a sale by the tax collector, he will be deemed to have known when he paid it that a sale by the tax collector would be a nullity, and would not invest the purchaser with even a colorable title, and in such case the payment will be deemed voluntary. Id.

177. When an assessment is void upon its face, because made to one who does not own the property, and the true owner, with a knowledge of the fact, but under a misapprehension of, or in ignorance of the law, pays the tax under protest, and to avoid a threatened sale of the property by the tax collector, it is to be deemed a voluntary payment, and he can not recover back the money in a suit against the tax collector. Id.

178. One who is a party to, and bound by legal proceedings in relation to an assessment for widening a street, can not attack these proceedings for mere error, in a collateral action. His remedy is by appeal. Id.

179. An assessment for the improvement of streets is a municipal tax, levied by the corporation upon the property adjacent to the street, to defray the expenses of the improvement, and no demand can be made a set-off against it unless expressly so authorized by the statute.

Himmelman v. Spanagel, 39 Cal. 389.

180. An assessment for street work in the city and county of San Francisco, under the consolidation act, is not "taxation," within the meaning of the thirteenth section of article XI of the constitution.

Chambers v. Satterlee, 40 Cal. 497.

181. An act validating an assessment for improving a street, if of any effect, makes the assessment valid only from the time of its passage. People v. Kinsman, 51 Cal. 92.

182. It is the duty of the superintendent of streets in San Francisco, after the fulfillment of a contract to improve the same, to make an assessment on the lots to cover the sum due for the work, and then to issue a warrant thereon. No time is limited within which the assessment must be made, nor is the fact that a void assessment has already been made an excuse for not making a valid one. Himmelman v. Cofran, 36 Cal. 411.

183. An abortive attempt to make a valid street assessment does not exhaust the power of the superintendent, nor does it constitute a good defense to an application for a mandate to require the superintendent to make an assessment in the mode prescribed by law.

Himmelman v. Danos, 36 Cal. 411.

184. Assessments on lots for street improvements, in the city of San Francisco, to be valid, must be made to the true owner, if known; and if not, to "owners unknown."

Himmelman v. Steiner, 38 Cal. 175.

185. It is the duty of the superintendent of streets, if, upon reasonable inquiry, he entertains doubts about the ownership of property to be affected by the assessment, to assess it to "owners unknown." Id.

186. The statute prescribing the mode of making assessments does not require the superintendent to act upon presumption or probabilities, nor upon implied or express notice of the existence of facts, in his determination of the question of ownership; neither does it require that he shall undertake to determine the question of ownership as between different parties or claimants. When, from any cause, a rational doubt may exist as to the fact of ownership, he can not, in the sense of the statute, be held to know the fact; and then he is authorized, and required, to assess the premises to owner "unknown," and to leave the risk and responsibility of ascertaining the party who holds the legal title to the party interested in collecting the assessment by an enforcement of the lien. Id.

DEMAND AND RETURN.

187. A demand by a contractor against the owner of a lot in San Francisco for an assessment on the lot for street improvements is assignable.

Cochran v. Collins, 29 Cal. 129.

188. A person owning only one half interest in an assessment is competent to make the demand as to the entire assessment.

Gaffney v. Gough, 36 Cal. 104.

189. There are three modes in which demand may be made by the contractor for street assessments, to wit, first, of the person assessed; second, of his agents; and, third, a demand, publicly made, upon the premises assessed.

Guerin v. Reese, 33 Cal. 292.

190. The legal purpose of the demand is to give to the owner, as far as practicable, actual notice of the existence of the lien created by the assessment and resting upon his property, so as to enable him to take the proper steps for its discharge. Id.

191. The warrant is a process in the hands of the contractor, which he is required to serve, and he will be held to the same measure of diligence in its service as is an officer holding legal process for service. In making the service it is the duty of the contractor first to make a reasonable effort to find and serve the person assessed; failing in this, it is his next duty to make a like effort to find and serve the agent of the person assessed; and only when such first and second efforts have failed, is he authorized to make service by a public demand for the assessments upon the premises assessed. Id.

192. The statute requires the return to state "the nature and character of the demand" made by the contractor. Under this requirement it is incumbent on him, by his return, to show a demand upon the person assessed, or a satisfactory reason why it was not done, before resorting to the other modes of making the demand. Where the return of a contractor to a warrant showed service made as to R. only by a public demand upon the premises assessed, and the only reason stated therefor was "that he [contractor] could not conveniently find R.," Hell, that the return was insufficient. Id.

193. When more than one person, either by the original contract, or by assignment from the contractor, is interested in a contract for improving a street in San Francisco, the demand required by the statute, for the payment of the assessment on a lot for improving the street, before the lot can be charged with a lien for the same, is sufficient, if made by one alone of the persons interested in the contract.

Gaffney v. Gough, 36 Cal. 104.

194. The statute does not prescribe any time within which the affidavit of demand shall be recorded by the superintendent of streets. Himmelman v. Reay, 38 Cal. 163.

195. In an action by a contractor to recover an assessment on a lot in San Francisco for improving the street, the return of an agent of the plaintiff, indorsed on the warrant for the collection of the assessment, showing a demand of payment of the assessment, is evidence of such demand.

Himmelman v. Hoadley, 44 Cal. 213.

196. When, in such case, the superintendent includes in the assessment on the lot fronting on the old street, the expenses of the work on that part added to the street, it is an error only, but it must be corrected by appeal to the board of supervisors, and it is not a defense in an action to recover the assessment. Id. 276.

197. An agent of an assignee of a street contractor is competent to make the demand of payment of the assessment, and to make return of such demand on the warrant.

Himmelman v. Woolrich, 45 Cal. 249.

198. The assessment, diagram, and warrant, for improvements on a street in San Francisco, must be recorded before the demand of payment and return of the same by affidavit, or a failure to pay the assessment confers no right of action on the contractor. Himmelman v. Danos, 35 Cal. 441.

199. Where, in an action to recover a street assessment, a judgment of nonsuit had been rendered because of the insufficiency of the tone of voice in which the demand for payment had been made: Hell, that the judgment should not be disturbed because of error in holding the demand insufficient.

Himmelman v. Booth, 53 Cal. 50.

200. A demand for the payment of an assessment levied on a lot for improving a street in a city must be for the amount which is properly chargeable against the lot; and if the assessment is for improving roadway and sidewalk both, and the lot is chargeable only with the cost of improving the roadway, the demand must be for such sum. Dyer v. Chase, 52 Cal. 440.

201. A demand for the aggregate sum due on two lots, under a street assessment, is insufficient. The demand should be on each lot, for the amount assessed thereon.

Schirmer v. Hoyt, 54 Cal. 280.

202. When there is a tenant occupying a lot in San Francisco which has been assessed for street work, should not the demand for the payment of the assessment be made upon the tenant? Quære!

Himmelman v. Townsend, 49 Cal. 150.

REMEDY BY APPEAL.

203. The owner of a lot sued for street improvements in San Francisco can not show in defense that the contractor did not perform the work according to his contract, if the superintendent of streets has accepted the work as completed. His remedy is an appeal from the decision of the superintendent to the board of supervisors.

Cochran v. Collins, 29 Cal. 129.

204. The remedy of an owner of a lot in San Francisco assessed for work on a street in front of the same, if dissatisfied with the decision of the superintendent of public streets that the contractor has fulfilled his contract, is an appeal from such decision to the board of supervisors.

Emery v. Bradford, 29 Cal. 75.

205. An error in determining whether a street contractor in San Francisco had fulfilled his contract is not a jurisdictional defect which vitiates an assessment levied on a lot to pay for the work specified in the contract. Id.

206. In an action by a contractor against the owner of a lot in San Francisco to recover the tax assessed on the same for work done on the street in front of the lot under a contract with the superintendent of public streets, if the contract was fulfilled to the satisfaction of the superintendent, the defendant can not introduce evidence to prove that the work was not done according to the specifications of the contract nor in accordance with the ordinance. He must appeal. Id.

207. An assessment on a lot in San Francisco for a street improvement, if made to one alone of several joint owners, can be corrected only by an appeal to the board of supervisors.

Taylor v. Palmer, 31 Cal. 241.

208. For repairs to the space formed by the intersection of Battery and Market streets, the consolidation act makes no provision, unless the expense of such repairs could be charged as local repairs under section 56, solely upon the lots on the south side of Market street; and this question is not raised.

Bassett v. Enright, 19 Cal. 635.

209. Where a lot is not liable to be assessed for repairs under the consolidation act, the owner thereof is not a party directly interested in the contract, work or assessment within the forty-fifth section, and is not bound to appeal from the assessment. This section does not mean that a mere stranger to the locality must appeal from the assessment to the board of supervisors, or be cut off from his defense. Id.

210. By the provisions of said acts the assessment for street improvements and the warrant for the collection of the money from the owners of the lots, chargeable therefor, are required to be put in the hands of the contractor, who then has fifteen days from the date of the warrant within which to examine it, and if found in any respect to be incorrect or illegal, it is made his duty to apply to the board of supervisors, by appeal, to have it corrected and made legal.

Smith v. Cofran, 34 Cal. 310.

211. This power of correction, conferred on the board of supervisors, extends to a case where an assessment had been made by the superintendent against a person not then living, and not to the owner of the lot, or unknown owners, and was therefore illegal and void. Id.

hold the latter responsible in damages for the result. Id.

213. If the city of Oakland contracts with a corporation, through its president, for the improvement of a street, and the president has not full authority from the corporation to make it, the remedy of the lot-owner is by appeal to the city council.

Oakland Paving Co. v. Rier, 52 Cal. 270.

214. In such a case the defect in the contract is not cured by the failure of the lot-owners to appeal for its correction to the board of supervisors, because, had an appeal been taken, the defect could not have been remedied by the board.

Dougherty v. Hitchcock, 35 Cal. 512.

215. In case of an appeal to supervisors, provided for by law, where the proceedings are sufficient to give them a right to hear it, such right necessarily includes the power to determine it.

Barber v. San Francisco, 42 Cal. 631.

216. Where a contract for street work entered into by the superintendent of streets, is not in compliance with the resolution of the board of supervisors by which it is authorized, the remedy for the aggrieved party is by appeal to the board, and failing to avail himself of that remedy he can not afterward set up such irregularity as a defense to an action to recover the amount of the assessment.

Chambers v. Satterlee, 40 Cal. 493.

217. Where a petition on appeal to the supervisors of San Francisco from a street assessment, based upon the ground that petitioners did the work in front of their premises in time, and were not allowed therefor, omitted to show that petitioners had obtained the certificate from the surveyor required by law (stats. 1867-8, p. 361, sec. 8, subd. 11): Hell, that such petition was not bad on account of such omission, or insufficient to give the board jurisdiction.

Barber v. San Francisco, 42 Cal. 631.

218. The San Francisco street law of 1863, in providing for an appeal to the board of supervisors (stats. 1863, p. 530, sec. 12), does not exact from persons objecting to assessment the same strictness and precision in stating their objections, which would be required in a pleading at common law. Id.

219. In an action for street assessments in San Francisco, the admission "that after the completion of the work the same was accepted by the superintendent, and no appeal from the decision of the superintendent in reference thereto was taken to the board of supervisors," is conclusive of the case, and judgment should be taken for plaintiff without further proof.

Shepard v. McNeil, 38 Cal. 72.

220. If an appeal lies to the board of supervisors of San Francisco for errors in the diagram for a street assessment, there is no other remedy.

Dorland v. McGlynn, 47 Cal. 47.

221. When an appeal from an assessment on a lot for improving a street in San Francisco is taken regularly and in proper time, the board has no power to dismiss it; and even if an order is made dismissing it the assessment does not become a finality, and an action can not be maintained on it.

People v. O'Neil, 51 Cal. 91.

222. In an action upon a street assessment in San Francisco (under the act of April 1, 1872), the defense was that the superintendent of streets entered into the contract before the expiration of five days from the first publication of the award, the period within which, under the sixth section of the act, the property-owners might elect to do the work: Held, that the premature action of the superintendent was one that affected his power or jurisdiction, and was void; and that it did not become valid by a failure to appeal to the board of supervisors.

Burke v. Turney, 54 Cal. 486.

223. In an action upon a street assessment, it appeared that an appeal had been taken from the assessment, which had been dismissed upon the report of the city and county attorney; but it did not appear that any testimony was offered by the party appealing: Held, that this was consistent with the fact that the only matter urged on the appeal was a question of law, and did not show that the appeal was improperly dismissed. Mahoney v. Braverman, 54 Cal. 565.

224. Held further, in the same action, that the assessment was void because the work was not completed within the time specified in the contract; and that it was not made valid by the appeal. Id.

LIEN.

225. The charter gives the contractor a direct lien upon the adjacent property for his work, but where the city has collected this money from the property-holders she is liable to the contractor therefor, and can be compelled to return the same. The city, being the trustee of the contractor, and also the agent of the property-holders, it follows that a liability created thereby is not a violation of that portion of her charter which limits the power of the corporation in contracting debts.

Lucas v. San Francisco, 7 Cal. 463.

226. A lien for a street assessment attaches to the lots fronting on the improvement, as they existed at the time the jurisdiction of the board of supervisors over the subject-matter attached under the statute, and such lien can not be affected by any subsequent changes in lines of the lots or transfers of the property.

Dougherty v. Miller, 36 Cal. 83.

227. A statute creating a lien upon a lot in the city, to secure the payment of an assessment levied on the lot for improvements in the street adjacent, must be strictly construed, and the proceedings authorized by the statute to create and enforce the lien must be followed precisely as directed, or the whole proceeding will be void. Creighton v. Manson, 27 Cal. 613.

228. Under the act of 1862, relating to streets in San Francisco, the return by the contractor of the warrant of the superintendent of streets, within the time and in the form prescribed in the eleventh section of said act, is essential to the continuance of the contractor's lien upon the lands, lots, and portions of lots assessed, after the time limited in said act for the contractor to make said return. As the contractor is not entitled to a personal judgment against the person assessed, he is bound to pursue the course specified in said act for the preservation of his lien upon the property charged therewith, otherwise he is without remedy for the collection of the assessments.

Guerin v. Reese, 33 Cal. 292.

229. Before a lien can be created on the land assessed, the assessment, diagram, and warrant must be recorded, and the record officially signed by the superintendent of streets.

Himmelman v. Danos, 35 Cal. 441.

230. Until the record is signed there is no official record; it is mere waste paper, of which no one need take notice. Id.

231. If at the time a contract in San Francisco is regularly let to improve a street, a lot fronting on the same is owned as one lot, the owner can not, by selling a part of it before the assessment is made, prevent the whole of it from being assessed as one lot to pay the cost, and can not, by such sale, prevent the contractor from having a lien on the whole lot for such assessment, even if the part sold extends along the entire front next to the street. Such lien attaches to the whole lot, into whosoever hands it may go. Dougherty v. Miller, 36 Cal. 83.

232. The jurisdiction of the board of supervisors of San Francisco to improve a street and render a lot fronting on the same liable for an assessment for the costs of such improvement, when it once attaches, extends to the whole lot through all the subsequent proceedings, although it may afterwards, and before the assessment is made, be divided by sales to different parties. Id.

233. A contractor for the improvement of a street does not lose his lien on lots fronting on the same, for the assessments made thereon, by the mere lapse of two years before the entry of judgment, from the date of recording the assessment, diagram, and warrant, provided his action to enforce the lien is commenced within that time.

Randolph v. Bayue, 44 Cal. 366.

234. If an action to enforce a lien for an assessment for improving a street in San Francisco is commenced within two years after the lien attaches, the lien does not expire on the expiration of two years, but continues until the judgment is rendered.

Dorland v. McGlynn, 47 Cal. 47.

Dougherty v. Henarie, Id. 9.

Himmelmänn v. Carpentier, Id. 42.

235. A deed executed under a sale made for the non-payment of an assessment for widening Kearny street, in San Francisco, without other evidence, is not prima facie evidence of title.

Bucknall v. Story, 36 Cal. 67.

236. A lien for a street assessment in San Francisco can not be enforced without making all the owners of the property defendants, and serving them all with summons.

Hancock v. Bowman, 49 Cal. 413.

237. A lien for the improvement of a street in San Francisco can not be enforced unless the assessment and diagram as recorded contain a sufficient description of the lot to enable the court to enforce a lien on it.

Himmelmänn v. Bateman, 50 Cal. 11.

Santa Barbara v. Huse, 51 Cal. 217.

239. An action can not be maintained to enforce a lien for a street improvement, which lien did not exist at the time the action was commenced.

Reis v. Graff, 51 Cal. 86.

240. The assistant city and county attorney of San Francisco has no authority to commence an action under the act of April 4, 1870, to enforce the lien on a lot for an assessment for improving a street until after the tax collector of the city and county shall have published a notice for the period of thirty days that the assessment is in his hands for collection, and that the same will be delinquent if not paid in that time.

People v. Reay, 52 Cal. 423.

241. Where two or more lots are separately assessed for the expense of improving a street, each lot is chargeable only with the amount assessed upon it, and in enforcing the lien, the judgment should state the amount for which each lot is liable, and should order a sale of each lot, or so much thereof as may be necessary to satisfy such amount and costs.

Brady v. Kelly, 52 Cal. 371.

PUBLICATION OF NOTICE.

242. Sundays are included in the count of the "ten days" which a resolution of the board of supervisors of San Francisco, declaratory of an intention to perform work on a street, is required to be published.

Taylor v. Palmer, 31 Cal. 240.

243. A resolution of the board of supervisors of San Francisco, declaratory of their intention to perform such work on a street, need be only published ten days, Sundays included.

Miles v. McDermott, 31 Cal. 271.

244. Where, under the statute, a notice of intention to make street improvements, etc., in San Francisco, was required to be published daily (Sundays excepted) for ten days, in the newspaper having the contract for the city and county printing, which paper is required to be printed and circulated in said city; and when such notice was only printed in such paper for only eight out of ten consecutive days (the remaining two days not being Sundays), but on said two days no issues were made by said paper: Held, that the notice by publication was insufficient and void.

Haskell v. Bartlett, 34 Cal. 281.

245. To constitute a publication in a city paper, it must appear that the paper is both published and circulated in the city, the former alone being insufficient.

Id.

246. Where such a daily newspaper, having the contract for said city and county printing, issued daily two editions, to wit, a morning edition, which was circulated in said city and the country, and an evening edition, which was circulated in the country only: Held, that the publication of notice of street improvements in the evening edition of said paper only was insufficient and void.

Id.

247. Where a statute requires a notice to be published in a daily newspaper, but does not specify a particular language in which it must be published, a publication in a German newspaper, but in the English language, is sufficient.

Richardson v. Tobin, 45 Cal. 30.

248. A newspaper which is published six days in each week is a daily newspaper.

Id.

249. The publication of notice of an award of a street contract in San Francisco must be made in pursuance of an order of the board of supervisors. Without such order a publication of such notice is void.

Donnelly v. Marks, 47 Cal. 187.

Donnelly v. Tillmann, Id. 40.

Reis v. Groff, 51 Id. 86.

250. The notice of an award of a contract for improving a street in San Francisco, must be published by order of the board of supervisors. The clerk of the board can not publish it without being authorized so to do by the board.

Himmelmann v. Satterlee, 49 Cal. 387.

251. A resolution of intention to improve a street in San Francisco, under the act of April 4, 1870, must be published five days, exclusive of Sundays or non-judicial days; and if the last day of a publication of five days falls on Sunday, the board does not acquire jurisdiction.

San Francisco v. McCain, 50 Cal. 210.

252. When the resolution of intention to improve a street in San Francisco requires the street to be graded to the official grade, and two notices are published inviting sealed proposals, and the record only contains the first notice, which requires the street to be graded one foot below the official grade, and is not published five days, and the award is made under the second notice, and judgment was for the plaintiff, the presumption is that the second notice was in accordance with the resolution of intention, and was published for the requisite time.

Himmelmann v. Carpentier, 47 Cal. 42.

253. In an action to recover a street assessment in San Francisco, the complainant must allege that the notice of the award of the contract was published by order of the board of supervisors.

Himmelmann v. Townsend, 49 Cal. 150.

PERSONAL LIABILITY.

254. The legislature has not, by the consolidation act for the government of San Francisco, and the amendments thereto prior to 1862, done anything more than to provide for a lien upon the lots adjacent to a street for improvements made on the street, and define the manner in which the same may be enforced. These acts do not create any personal liability on the part of the owners of such lots for such improvements, nor does the amendment of 1862 create any personal liability for work done or to be done under contracts entered into before its passage.

Creighton v. Manson, 27 Cal. 613.

255. The owner of land in a municipal corporation, bordering upon an improved street, can not be made liable for the cost of the improvement beyond the value of his land.

Taylor v. Palmer, 31 Cal. 240.

256. The legislature has not the power to charge the persons who reside on a street in a city with the expenses of an improvement on that street.

Creighton v. Manson, 27 Cal. 613.

LIABILITY OF CITY.

257. When the law compels the corporation to give out a contract for grading a street to the lowest bidder, it takes away from the corporation the responsibility arising from the acts of the person taking the contract. James v. San Francisco, 6 Cal. 528.

258. The liability of the city for street improvements is limited to the expense of improving the crossings. The remainder is to be paid by the property fronting upon the streets. The city, in contracting as to the latter, must be regarded as the mere agent or trustee, and is therefore not primarily liable. Lucas v. San Francisco, 7 Cal. 443.

259. The act known as the consolidation act, passed in 1856, released the city and county of San Francisco from all liability for damages for injuries sustained by any person on its graded streets or public highways, in consequence of said streets or highways being out of repair.

Parsons v. San Francisco, 23 Cal. 462.

260. The obligation of a municipal corporation to keep the streets in repair is necessarily suspended while they are actually undergoing such alterations as, for the time, made them dangerous.

James v. San Francisco, 6 Cal. 528.

LIABILITY OF STREET RAILROAD.

261. Companies operating street railroads in San Francisco are only required to keep in repair that part of the street lying between the rails along which the cars run and between which the horses travel. They are not required to repair that part of the street lying between a double track.

Robbins v. O. R. R. Co., 32 Cal. 472.

FRONTAGE, WHAT CONSTITUTES.

262. The clause in the sixth section of the act of 1862, amending the consolidation act relating to San Francisco, allowing the owners of the major part of the frontage of lots liable to be assessed for street improvements to take a contract at the price awarded without having put in a bid, means, in those cases where a small street terminates in a principal street, the owners of the major part of the frontage on the principal street.

Cochran v. Collins, 29 Cal. 129.

263. An assessment for improving a street in a city is a tax, and therefore must be levied with equality and uniformity. But if it be so levied under a system which apportions it with reference to the number of feet fronting on the improvement, or by any other standard which will approximate equality and uniformity, it is not void.

Whiting v. Quackenbush, 54 Cal. 306.

ACTION.

264. In suing a lot-owner for a street assessment, the contractor is quasi assignee or agent of the city, and is vested with all her rights. Hendrick v. Crowley, 31 Cal. 471.

265. If A. owns a lot on a street to be improved, and takes the contract, and then assigns to B., who performs the contract, B. may sue A. for the assessment against his lot. Id.

266. An action to recover an assessment for improving a street in San Francisco should be brought in the name of the contractor, and not in the name of the city.

Dyer v. North, 44 Cal. 157.

267. The act of April 4, 1870, requiring actions to recover street assessments in San Francisco to be brought in the name of the city and county of San Francisco, instead of being brought in the name of the contractor, as was required by law before that time, does not apply to contracts for improving streets, entered into before April 4, 1870.

Dyer v. Pixley, 44 Cal. 153.

268. If the owner of a lot in a city pays an assessment levied on the same for improving it, which is illegal and void, it will be regarded as a voluntary payment, and he can not recover it back in an action at law against the officer, even if it was paid under protest after a threatened sale.

De Baker v. Carillo, 52 Cal. 473.

Complaint.

269. A complaint to recover the amount assessed on a lot in the city of San Francisco, for an improvement of the street on which the lot fronts, should show either by general or special averments a compliance by the board of supervisors with all the steps prescribed by law, to confer jurisdiction on the board.

Himmelman v. Danos, 35 Cal. 441.

270. An averment in a complaint in an action to recover upon a street assessment in San Francisco, that "the said superintendent duly made an assessment to cover the sum due for the work performed and specified in said contract, including the expenses thereof," is a sufficient averment of the assessment.

Himmelman v. Woolrich, 45 Cal. 249.

271. It is not necessary to aver in such complaint that the board of supervisors ordered their clerk to sign the resolution of intention to grade a street. Id.

272. It is not necessary in such action to aver that notice of the intention of the board was given in the resolution, nor to give the name of the official newspaper; and it is sufficient to aver that the contract "was in the form and contained the notices, matters, and conditions prescribed by law," and to aver that the work was completed within the time fixed by the superintendent. Id.

273. The power of the legislature to prescribe the requirements of a complaint in actions relative to assessments for street work, admitted by counsel.

Richardson v. Tobin, 45 Cal. 30.

274. In an action to recover a street assessment in San Francisco, an averment that a resolution to do the work was passed by the board of supervisors, and that the resolution was signed by the clerk, and published ten days (Sundays excepted) in the official newspaper, is sufficient to support a judgment by default, or to authorize proof that the board directed the resolution to be published.

Dyer v. North, 44 Cal. 157.

275. In a complaint to recover an assessment for improving a street in San Francisco, it is sufficient to aver that notice of the award of the contract to the contractor, and the particulars thereof, were published for five days, without alleging that the board of supervisors passed a resolution directing notice of the award, etc., to be published.

Himmelman v. Haskell, 46 Cal. 66.

276. The fact that an assessment was made and issued is a material averment in a complaint to enforce the collection of street assessment in San Francisco.

San Francisco v. Eaton, 46 Cal. 100.

277. Laying the venue in the caption of a street assessment, by inserting the words "state of California, city and county of San Francisco, ss.," is sufficient to show that the property sought to be charged is within the jurisdiction of the superintendent of streets of that city and county.

Whiting v. Quackenbush, 54 Cal. 306.

278. The complaint, in an action to enforce a lien for a street assessment in San Francisco, must aver that the defendants are the owners of, or have some interest in the land sought to be charged with the alleged lien.

San Francisco v. Doe, 48 Cal. 560.

279. When the complaint does not allege the several steps to be pursued, required by the statute concerning street improvements, it is fatally defective.

Himmelman v. Danos, 55 Cal. 441.

280. The plaintiff, in an action to recover an assessment for improving a street in San Francisco, can not recover, except upon the presumption that a notice of intention to improve, containing a proper designation of the work to be done, was given, and that the contracts afterward awarded substantially conformed to the description of the proposed work as given in the notice.

People v. Clark, 47 Cal. 456.

281. When such notice is not set forth in the complaint, and a contract is set forth, it will be presumed that the contract given, conformed in its description of the work to the description in the notice, and if the description in the contract is for work on the street designated "where necessary," the complaint is fatally defective. Id.

Defenses.

282. In an action to recover an assessment for street improvements against the owners of the lot and certain persons who "have, or claim to have," an interest or claim in, or to the premises, the nature and extent of such interest or claim must be set up before they can be admitted to defend the action. Himmelmann v. Spanagel, 39 Cal. 389.

283. The law of 1869-70, concerning street assessments in San Francisco, which prohibits any defense, except that the board did not acquire jurisdiction to order the work, or payment, or fraud in the assessment, was not intended to prevent the defendant from denying material averments in a complaint, but was merely intended to restrict affirmative defenses to those mentioned. San Francisco v. Eaton, 46 Cal. 100.

284. Damages for injury to the property against which the assessment was issued can not be set up as a counter claim in an action to recover an assessment for the improvement of the street.

Himmelmann v. Spanagel, 39 Cal. 389.

285. If the contractor, to improve streets in San Francisco, makes a private fraudulent contract with a part of the owners, it is no defense in an action brought by the contractor against another lot-owner to recover his assessment. If such fraud is not discovered in time to appeal to the board of supervisors, relief can only be obtained by a direct attack on the contract.

Himmelmann v. Hoadley, 44 Cal. 213.

286. In an action to recover an assessment levied on a lot for grading a street in a city, the lot-owner may show and rely on, as a defense, any substantial error in the proceedings which could not have been remedied by an appeal to the council.

Stockton v. Creanor, 45 Cal. 643.

287. H., a contractor to make certain street improvements, agreed with R., whose property was assessed for the improvement, and to whom H. was indebted, that H.'s debt might be credited by the amount of R.'s assessment. Before any work was done by H., he assigned his contract for making the improvement to D., who did the work, and afterwards assigned his claim for the improvements to the plaintiff. Neither D. nor plaintiff had any notice of the agreement between H. and R. In an action by plaintiff against R. for the amount of his assessment, it was held, that the indebtedness from H. to R. furnished no ground for a counter claim.

Himmelmann v. Reay, 38 Cal. 163.

288. The title to a lot on which an assessment for street improvements in San Francisco is made, if put in issue by the pleadings in an action for the assessment, may be litigated in that action.

Taylor v. Donner, 31 Cal. 480.

Evidence.

289. The thirteenth section of the statute in relation to street improvements in San Francisco, to the effect that the assessment, warrant, and diagram, with the affidavit of demand and non-payment, shall be prima facie evidence of the defendant's indebtedness, does not establish a rule of pleading, but a rule of evidence only.

Himmelmann v. Danos, 35 Cal. 441.

290. A provision in a city charter which declares that the delinquent tax list on an assessment for grading a street shall be evidence to prove "that all the forms of law in relation to the levy and assessment had been complied with," does not make it conclusive evidence, but the lot-owner may go behind the same and show a substantial error in the proceedings. Stockton v. Creanor, 45 Cal. 643.

291. Held, that the provision of the statute, making the assessment, warrant, etc., prima facie evidence of the plaintiff's right to recover, is a rule of evidence, and not of pleading; and it was, therefore, competent for the defendants to disprove the presumption thus arising, by proving that the contract was prematurely made; that the defense is not an affirmative defense, and it is, therefore, unnecessary to decide whether the legislature can deprive a defendant of other defenses than those specified in the statute.

Burke v. Turney, 54 Cal. 486.

292. In an action upon a street assessment it appeared that ten days before the order of the board of supervisors directing the clerk to advertise for bids written objections were filed by the owners of more than one half in frontage of lots fronting on the improvement: Held, that under the first section of the act of 1863, relating to street improvements in San Francisco, such written objections displaced the prima facie proof of regularity made by the warrant, assessment, and diagram, and threw upon the plaintiff the burden of showing that the bar effected by the objections had been removed. Dougherty v. Harrison, 54 Cal. 423.

293. The ninth section of the act of April 4, 1870, as to street assessments in San Francisco, did not have the effect of changing the rule of evidence fixed in the fourth section of the act of March 26, 1868, which provides that the warrant, assessment, and diagram, with the affidavit and demand of non-payment, shall be prima facie evidence of the plaintiff's right to recover, so as to compel the plaintiff to prove all prior proceedings, but, under said act of 1870, the assessment or assessments, or original record thereof, are prima facie evidence of the plaintiff's right to recover.

Himmelmann v. Carpentier, 47 Cal. 42.

294. The records of the board of supervisors of San Francisco, concerning the publication of notices of the award of contracts for street improvements, can not be contradicted by parol evidence.

Dorland v. McGlynn, 47 Cal. 47.

Judgment.

295. A personal judgment can not be rendered against the owner of a lot in San Francisco for a street assessment. The lot may be charged with a lien for the assessment.

Gaffney v. Gough, 36 Cal. 104.
Couill v. Hastings, Id. 292.

Affirming Taylor v. Palmer, 31 Cal. 241.

296. A contractor who improves a street in a city, under a contract with the city authorities, for which improvement an assessment is made on lots fronting on the street, is not entitled to a personal judgment against the lot-owner for the amount assessed against the lot.

Randolph v. Bayue, 44 Cal. 366.

297. Upon the question whether a judgment is merely voidable or absolutely void, there is no distinction between judgments for taxes and judgments for other causes of action.

Mayo v. Ah Loy, 32 Cal. 477.

298. Although property on I street can not be lawfully taxed for improvements on J street, yet if it is done, and suit is brought and service of process obtained and judgment rendered as required by law, the judgment is not void, but only erroneous and liable to be reversed on appeal.

Id.

299. If the owner of the property assessed for street improvements in Sacramento is not made a party to a suit to collect the same, and the action is not brought against "all owners and claimants," and service is not made on the real estate, the judgment is void.

Id.

300. In an action to enforce a street assessment, judgment was entered against all the defendants except one, who had not been served with process, and who was alleged in the complaint to be interested: Held, that the judgment was erroneous: First, because the case had not been disposed of as to the defendant not served; and, second, because, in such a case as this, the statute gives no authority for a decree enforcing the lien, in the absence of any of the parties interested.

Diggins v. Reay, 54 Cal. 522.

301. In an action brought on a street assessment, in which it is admitted by the pleadings that several defendants are the owners of the lot, it is erroneous to order judgment for the amount of the assessment against only one of the defendants.

Clark v. Porter, 53 Cal. 409.

INTEREST.

302. A judgment rendered for street assessments in San Francisco draws interest from the time of its rendition.

Himmelmann v. Oliver, 34 Cal. 246.

303. Street assessments in San Francisco are not contracts within the meaning of the statute in relation to interest, nor by any statute is interest allowable on street warrants issued for street improvements in that city.

Haskell v. Bartlett, 34 Cal. 281.

304. Street assessments in San Francisco do not draw interest.

Himmelmann v. Oliver, 34 Cal. 246.
(Altered by statute.)

305. Interest may be allowed on a street assessment in San Francisco, if the assessment has been made subsequent to the passage of the act of March 26, 1868, notwithstanding the contract for the work was awarded prior to that date.

Dougherty v. Henarie, 47 Cal. 9.

ESTIMATE OF BENEFITS.

306. It is not erroneous for commissioners appointed to estimate the benefits that will result to property-holders by the widening of a street, to assess the same upon the hypothesis that all lots on the street will be benefited in the ratio of their values, provided there is evidence warranting such a conclusion.

Appeal of Piper, 32 Cal. 530.

307. If commissioners appointed to assess damages and estimate benefits to lot-owners for widening a street, apportion the amount of money to be raised into two or more parts, one part on the property-holders of the street to be widened, and another part on the owners of property fronting on the cross streets determined to be benefited, and no complaint is made as to the correctness of this apportionment, the owners of lots on the street to be improved can not complain of the manner in which the part apportioned to the cross streets is afterward apportioned among the property-holders on those streets, and vice versa.

Id.

308. The benefits resulting from the widening of a street accrue to the owner through his estate in the land, whether the estate be a fee or a leasehold, and not through the buildings thereon. The enhancement in value accrues to the land, not to the buildings.

Id.

309. A statute authorizing the assessment of a portion of the expenses for widening a street in a city upon lots benefited, situate on cross streets adjacent to the street to be widened, is constitutional.

Id.

310. A statute authorizing the board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco to determine what part of the city will be benefited by the widening of a street, and to assess the expense of the improvement upon the specific portion of the city thus determined to be peculiarly benefited, is constitutional.

Id.

311. The determination of the commissioners, in the matter of widening Kearny street in San Francisco, as to who is the owner of a lot, or a building thereon, and entitled to the money to be paid for damages estimated, is not conclusive; but where the right to the money is contested, the board of supervisors should pay the amount into the office of the county clerk, and leave the contest between the claimants to be settled by the courts in pursuance of the provisions of the statute. Appeal of Lefevre, 32 Cal. 565.

312. The commissioners appointed to estimate benefits and assess damages for widening a street in San Francisco under the act of April 4, 1864, may properly assess the expenses to be borne by a lot which is under lease, to the owner of the fee, where the benefits all accrue to such owner, without apportioning any part of the same to the lessee. Appeal of Reese, 32 Cal. 566.

EFFECT OF REPEAL.

313. The consolidation act of 1856, as amended in 1859, authorized the city authorities of San Francisco to enter into contracts with individuals for grading its streets, and provided that the charges under the contract should be borne by the owners of the adjacent lots. Section 59 authorized a contractor, upon the completion of his work, to sue each delinquent owner for the amount of his assessment. In March, 1861, a contract was entered into with plaintiff for grading a certain street, and the work under it was completed by him in April. May 18, 1861, an act was passed repealing section 59. In August, 1861, plaintiff commenced the present action against one of the delinquent owners to recover the amount assessed against him; Held, that plaintiff's right to maintain the action was not impaired by the repealing act; that the right to sue the property-owners was a part of the contract, and could not be taken away by legislation subsequent to his performance of the work.

Creighton v. Pragg, 21 Cal. 115.

314. That part of section 37 of the consolidation act of San Francisco, which speaks of a "space formed by the junction of two streets terminating at the same point," does not mean a space formed by the intersection of two streets; or the space formed where one street intersects and stops at another street which continues on—as where Battery intersects and stops at Market street; and for repairs to such space all the lots in the block adjoining the space can not be assessed, the latter part of section 37 not applying to such a case, and the provision therein for assessing all the lots where the streets are not parallel, and hence the blocks are of irregular shape, also being inapplicable.

Bassett v. Enright, 19 Cal. 635.

315. The plaintiff, in November, 1860, entered into a contract for the improvement of streets in San Francisco under the law of 1859, which provided that for payment an assessment should be levied upon the adjacent lots in proportion to their respective values. Before the completion of the work, the amendatory act of 1861 was passed, providing for an assessment in payment of such contracts according to the street frontage of each lot: Held, that the provisions of the law of 1859 respecting the mode of assessment was part of the contract, and that the assessment, though made after the amendatory act, must be in the mode prescribed by the old law.

Houston v. McKenna, 22 Cal. 550.

316. The law making the assessment, warrant, and diagram, with affidavit of demand and non-payment, prima facie evidence of the indebtedness and right to recover, in an action to enforce a lien for a street assessment in San Francisco, was not repealed by the act of April 4, 1870, on the same subject.

Dorland v. McGlynn, 47 Cal. 47.

CONSTRUCTION OF STATUTES.

317. The constitution does not prohibit the legislature, or municipal authorities acting under authority of law, from imposing assessments upon lots in a city fronting on a street to defray the expenses of improvements of the street in the nature of grading and planking.

Emery v. S. F. Gas Co., 28 Cal. 345.

318. It rests in the discretion of the legislature to say upon what principle the assessment on lots fronting on a street, to pay for improvements on the street, shall be apportioned among the lots. Id.

319. The provisions of the statute concerning assessments of taxes on lots in San Francisco for street improvements, must be strictly followed in order to charge the lot or the owner. This rule is universal, and applies to all statutes upon the subject of taxation, whether for local improvements or public revenue.

Taylor v. Donner, 31 Cal. 480.

320. The liability of owners of property in San Francisco for assessments made by the city authorities for repairing the streets depends on the statute, and only inures after the steps required by the statute have been taken. Blanchard v. Beideman, 18 Cal. 261.

321. Under the act of 1859 the board of supervisors of San Francisco have power to provide for the grading of all located streets, whether new or old, and as well of those lying east of Larkin street as to the west of it.

Houston v. McKenna, 22 Cal. 550.

322. An assessment levied by a municipal government upon lots adjacent to a street to pay for improvements made on the street, if held to be a tax, can not be maintained, because it lacks the constitutional requirement of equality and uniformity.

Creighton v. Manson, 27 Cal. 613.

323. If, under the power to take private property for public uses upon making a just compensation therefor, the legislature posasses the power to levy an assessment upon lots in a city adjacent to a street to pay for improvements made on the street, the assessment can not exceed the value of the benefit conferred on the lot or its owner by the improvement, and can be enforced only by proceedings to subject the lot to a sale in discharge of the lien. Id.

324. An assessment upon the different lots fronting on a street in a city in proportion to the number of feet frontage of each, for the purpose of raising money to pay the expenses of grading the street, is an exercise of the sovereign right of taxation, and not of the power to appropriate private property to public use under the right of eminent domain.

Emery v. S. F. Gas Co., 28 Cal. 345.

325. The act of 1862, making the owner of a lot fronting on a public street in San Francisco personally liable to a contractor for an assessment on the lot for improvements on the street in front of the lot, and giving the contractor, also a lien on the lot for the same, is not unconstitutional.

Walsh v. Mathews, 29 Cal. 123.

326. The lot-owner is not held liable on the theory that there is a contract between him and the street contractor. The assessment is levied and collected by virtue of the sovereign power of taxation, and its validity depends upon the same general principles applicable to taxes proper levied for ordinary governmental purposes.

Emery v. Bradford, 20 Cal. 75.

327. In actions to recover street assessments for street improvements a strict compliance with the provisions of law authorizing them must be shown to sustain a recovery. Haskell v. Bartlett, 34 Cal. 281.

328. The circumstances that the contract under which Patrick Creighton did certain street work in San Francisco expressly provided that the city should in no event be liable for any portion of the expenses thereof: Held, not to affect or in any manner invalidate the special act subsequently passed by the legislature (stats. 1869-70, p. 300), requiring the city to pay him.

Creighton v. San Francisco, 42 Cal. 446.

329. The amendatory act of February 1, 1870, ratifying and confirming all the orders and resolutions of the board of supervisors in reference to the "Second street cut" in San Francisco, and the proceedings of the superintendent of streets, and the contract, and all the acts and doings of the contractor under it (stats. 1869-70, p. 41), cured an omission of the supervisors to publish notice as required by the original act authorizing the improvement. (Stats. 1867-8, p. 595.)

S. F. v. Certain Real Estate, 42 Cal. 513.

330. In reference to proceedings of statutory creation for the improvement of certain streets in San Francisco: Held, that it was competent for the legislature, by subsequent enactment, to cure any defects or omissions in the proceedings of the board of supervisors or superintendent of streets. Id.

331. The only obligation imposed upon the city and county of San Francisco, by section 21 of the street law of 1862 (stats. 1862, p. 391), if there be any, is to keep open and improved that portion of the street constructed and "accepted" in accordance therewith; and there is no obligation on the part of the city and county to pay assessments upon property for benefits derived from the opening and improvement of other portions of the same street. Id.

332. The act of February 1, 1870, in reference to the "Second street cut" in San Francisco (stats. 1869-70, p. 41), in providing that the judgment of the county court, either confirming or setting aside the report of the commissioners, should be "final and conclusive," obviously contemplated that all objections to the report founded upon the errors, misconduct, irregularities or omissions of the commissioners, should be heard and determined by the county court, and that it should not thereafter be open to attack in a collateral action. Id.

333. If an act commands a municipal body to proceed and grade a certain street, prescribing the way and manner of doing the same, and the grade to be adopted, and leaving nothing to the discretion of the municipal body, except certain incidents to the main work, courts will not construe the act as not mandatory because these incidents are left to the discretion of the body.

People v. Supervisors, 36 Cal. 595.

334. The acts of 1868 and 1870, to modify the grades of streets in San Francisco, in declaring that the judgment of the county court on the second report of the commissioners shall be "final and conclusive," means that there shall be no appeal from the judgment, and that it shall not be reviewed by the county court, except by motion for a new trial.

Appeal of Houghton, 42 Cal. 35.

335. The board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco has jurisdiction to order a street to be graded in any part of the city, without a petition first presented for that purpose, except when it is proposed to partially improve or grade a street west of Larkin street, without reference to its official width or grade.

Dyer v. North, 44 Cal. 157.

336. The legislature did not intend by the act of January 31, 1870, relative to the opening of streets in Oakland, to authorize the city council to proceed to open, extend, straighten, or widen any street, except in cases where the council were satisfied that the benefits to lands affected thereby, and to be assessed therefor, would exceed the damages to private property necessarily occasioned, and the expenses of the proceeding and work. Jacobus v. Oakland, 42 Cal. 21.

337. The board of supervisors of San Francisco can not by resolution transfer its appropriate functions to its clerk.

Meuser v. Risdon, 36 Cal. 239.

338. The power conferred on a board of supervisors to lay out, open, and grade streets in a city, carries with it, by necessary implication, the power to establish the grade of such streets.

Himmelmann v. Hoadley, 44 Cal. 213.

339. An order of a board of supervisors, establishing the location, width, and grade of streets, if passed without authority, is rendered valid by being subsequently confirmed by the legislature. Id.

340. Where the proceedings are free from fraud, and have been regularly conducted, the change of grade is absolutely fixed by the act of the board of supervisors in adopting the report of the commissioners.

In re Beale street, 39 Cal. 495.

341. What is termed the "swinging of lots," a measure adopted in pursuance of a resolution of a public meeting in San Francisco, can not change the location of premises actually granted, or impair the right of the grantee therein. The taking of a part of a lot from an individual for the purpose of a public street, though it may, perhaps, give him a claim on the public for compensation, does not confer upon him the right to encroach to the same extent on the land of his neighbor. Reynolds v. West, 1 Cal. 322.

342. So far as the lot-owner is concerned, the city of San Francisco can not by its act ratify proceedings taken to grade a street, and impose an assessment on the lot for the same, so as to make the same valid, when they were invalid in the first instance. The power of ratification, if it exists, is in the legislature. Meuser v. Risdon, 36 Cal. 239.

343. The evident policy of the general law upon the subject of street improvements in San Francisco, as passed in 1862 and amended in 1863 (stats. 1862, p. 391; 1863, p. 525), is to secure and protect the persons who are made to pay the cost of the improvement from official mismanagement and wanton or reckless exercise of power, by advising them of what is proposed to be done, by enabling them to do the work themselves, if they so elect, and especially by securing the performance of the work by responsible persons, and upon the lowest terms. This policy can not be defeated by the board of supervisors, by setting aside the measures which have been provided for its enforcement.

Nicolson P. Co. v. Painter, 35 Cal. 660.

344. The act approved March 19, 1874 (stats. 1873-4, p. 487), validating street assessments in San Francisco, if it has the effect to make assessments valid, operated on them only when it took effect, and, therefore, did not validate defective assessments in cases where actions were pending when the act was approved.

People v. McCain, 51 Cal. 360.

345. An act validating a void assessment for the improvement of a street, if constitutional, makes the assessment valid only from the date of its passage, so that pending suits brought to enforce the tax are not affected by the act.

People v. O'Neil, 51 Cal. 91.

AUTHENTICATION OF RECORDS OF STREET SUPERINTENDENT.

346. An assessment made by the superintendent of streets of San Francisco, to cover the sum due for the improvement of a street, is an official act, and must be attested by his official signature.

Dougherty v. Hitchcock, 35 Cal. 512.

347. An assessment not thus officially attested, though attached to the diagram and the superintendent's warrant, which were in due form and properly attested, does not constitute a valid assessment, and is not admissible in evidence, either by itself or in connection with the warrant and diagram. Id.

348. When the assessment, diagram, and warrant, and sworn return of demand of payment for a street improvement in San Francisco are recorded in the office of the superintendent of streets, a certificate of their recording should be attached to the same, signed by the superintendent. Without such certificate, the record is valueless. Whether such certificate should be affixed to the separate record of the assessment, diagram, and warrant, not decided.

Himmelmann v. Danos, 35 Cal. 441.

349. If the superintendent "originally" fails to authenticate his record by his official signature, it is his duty afterwards to make a valid assessment.

Shepard v. McNeil, 38 Cal. 73.

350. The proper mode for authenticating the record of the assessment, diagram, and warrant, in cases of a tax on lots for improving or grading a street in San Francisco, is to append thereto the official certificate of the officer whose duty it is to make the record. The assessment need not have a separate certificate.

Himmelmann v. Hoadley, 44 Cal. 213.

351. Such certificate need not specify the pages upon which the assessment, diagram, and warrant are copied; but if it does it will be limited to the pages specified, unless the record itself shows that the reference to the pages is a clerical error. Id.

352. When such record is copied upon six pages, ending with page 79, and the certificate states that "the foregoing on pages No. 79 is a true and correct record of the assessment, diagram, and warrant," it is apparent that the omission of the five preceding pages was a mere clerical error. Id.

353. The certificate authenticating the record of the assessment, diagram, and warrant, in case of tax on a street for improving the same in San Francisco, may be signed by a deputy of the street superintendent, in the name of his principal, and such deputy need not affix the word "deputy" to his signature if the certificate purports in the body of it to be the official signature of the principal. ISSUANCE OF SUMMONS.

Waived by Appearance.

1. A voluntary appearance by a defendant gives jurisdiction of his person without the issuance of any summons. This was equally the case under the practice act as it stood in 1855.

Hayes v. Shattuck, 21 Cal. 51.

2. The only object of a summons is to bring a party into court, and if that object be attained by the appearance and pleading of a party, there can be no injury to him.

Smith v. Curtis, 7 Cal. 587.

3. The only purpose of a summons is to bring the defendant into court, and if he appears and answers, he waives any defect in the summons.

Randall v. Falkner, 41 Cal. 242.

4. The party not served with process, in an action against defendants jointly indebted (under the thirty-second section of the practice act), is not a proper party defendant in action upon the judgment against the party on whom service of process was made. Tay v. Hawley, 39 Cal. 93.

5. The validity of the thirty-second section of the practice act, so far as it authorizes a judgment or an execution against any of the property of the party not served, commented on, and questioned. Id.

6. A notice signed by attorneys, and filed with the clerk after a complaint has been filed, stating that "we have been retained by, and hereby appear for, the above-named defendant, in the above-entitled action," is a sufficient appearance of the defendant, and is a waiver of summons, and judgment by default may be entered, if pleadings are not filed in the proper time.

Dyer v. North, 44 Cal. 157.

May Issue within One Year.

7. If the court is authorized to direct a summons to issue after the expiration of the year, the exercise of the power rests in the legal discretion of the court, and its action will not be set aside on appeal, unless it clearly appears that the discretion was not soundly exercised.

Dupuy v. Shear, 29 Cal. 238.

8. Since the amendment of 1860 to the twenty-third section of the practice act, the clerk is not authorized to issue a summons in an action, without an order from the court, after the expiration of one year from the filing of the complaint. This principle applies as well to causes in which the complaint was filed before, as to those in which the complaint was filed after the amendment took effect. Id.

9. When a plaintiff commences an action by filing a complaint and issuing summons, but makes no service on the defendant until nine years have elapsed, an order of the court, made on defendant's motion, striking out the complaint for want of prosecution, is not such an abuse of discretion as to justify the appellate court in reversing the order. Id.

10. A summons is not issued within one year after filing the complaint, within the meaning of the twenty-third section of the practice act, unless, within one year after filing the complaint, both a summons and a certified copy of the complaint, properly prepared and certified, are placed at the disposal of the party for service.

Reynolds v. Page, 35 Cal. 206.

11. Unless the summons and a certified copy of the complaint, duly attested and in a condition to serve, are placed at the disposal of plaintiff for service, within one year from the filing of the complaint, the action should be dismissed. Id.

12. The clerk of the district court is authorized, on demand of the plaintiff, and without an order of court, to issue an alias summons after the expiration of the year during which the original must be issued.

Dunker v. Lutz, 48 Cal. 464.

13. Section 406 of the code of civil procedure, requiring the summons to be served within one year after filing the complaint, is mandatory.

Linden M. Co. v. Sheplar, 53 Cal. 245.

REQUISITES OF.

14. If the summons be radically defective, it will not support a judgment by default.

People v. Woodlief, 2 Cal. 241.

People v. Green, 52 Id. 577.

15. Where the summons was headed with the words, "district court," but was issued out of the county court, under the county court seal, and tested by the judge of said court, it was held good as the writ of the county court. Crane v. Brannan, 3 Cal. 192.

16. A statement in a summons, that "the said action is brought to recover judgment against the defendants for the sum of five thousand three hundred and seventy-one dollars and twelve cents, and interest at three per cent. per month from November 14, 1863, and the further sum of eleven dollars and twenty cents, and the costs of this action," is sufficient to answer the twenty-fourth section of the practice act, as a copy of the complaint is served with the summons.

King v. Blood, 41 Cal. 314.

17. The provisions in the twenty-fourth section of the practice act as to what the summons shall state, are not merely directory, but are mandatory.

Lyman v. Milton, 44 Cal. 630.

18. A summons must state the names of all the parties to the action. Where there are several parties defendant, it is not sufficient to give the name of one in the summons, followed by the words "et al." Id.

19. The question of the right to amend a summons by inserting the names of the defendants after motion to dismiss, spoken of. Id.

20. The court may allow a summons to be amended by inserting the notice of the cause of action, etc., required by the act of 1851.

Pollock v. Hunt, 2 Cal. 193.

21. A judgment rendered by default will be reversed if the summons was radically defective. The summons must state the cause or general nature of the action.

People v. Green, 52 Cal. 577.

22. In actions for fraud, the summons must apprise the defendant that on failure to answer, judgment will be taken against him for the fraud. A mere notice in the summons that a money judgment will be taken, will not support a judgment for fraud. Porter v. Hermann, 8 Cal. 619.

23. In ejectment, if the summons contains no description of the demanded premises, except to refer to the complaint for such description, and two or more of the defendants reside in the same county, and the summons is served on all defendants in that county, but a copy of the complaint on one only, the summons is sufficient to sustain a judgment by default against those not served with a copy of the complaint.

Calderwood v. Brooks, 28 Cal. 151.

24. In an action for the recovery of a district school tax, the summons must contain a notice that "unless the defendant appears and answers, the plaintiff will apply to the courts for the relief demanded." The clerk is not authorized to enter a default in such an action. He is limited in this respect to actions in contracts for the recovery of money or damages. In all other cases application for judgment must be made to the court.

People v. Weil, 53 Cal. 253.

TIME WITHIN WHICH TO ANSWER.

Grewell v. Henderson, 5 Cal. 465.

26. Where the summons was returnable in thirty instead of forty days, and did not state that judgment by default would be taken unless the defendant appeared and answered, nor specify any amount for which judgment would be taken: Held, that the summons would not support a judgment by default.

People v. Woodlief, 2 Cal. 241.

27. Where a summons was issued and served in the morning, by which the defendants were cited to appear and answer the complaint in the court of first instance, at ten o'clock, and judgment was rendered against them at nine o'clock in the morning, of the same day: Held, that the judgment was irregular, and should be reversed, notwithstanding the court offered them permission to come in at a subsequent day and make their defense.

Parker v. Shephard, 1 Cal. 131.

28. A summons issued out of the superior court of the city of San Francisco was not defective if it omitted to notify the defendant to appear within twenty days, if served out of the county, but in the district in which the action was brought.

McCauley v. Fulton, 44 Cal. 356.

29. The second subdivision of the twenty-fifth section of the practice act, requiring the defendant to appear within twenty days after the service of a summons, had no application to the superior court of the city of San Francisco, because its jurisdiction was confined to the county of San Francisco.

Id.

SERVICE OF.

29a. That court had power to send a summons for service out of the city of San Francisco.

Chipman v. Bowman, 14 Cal. 157.

What Constitutes Service of Summons.

30. If a copy of summons and a certified copy of a complaint are personally delivered to a defendant, and issued from a court of general jurisdiction, the court thereby acquires jurisdiction of the person of the defendant. An irregularity in the mode of delivery is merely a ground of application to the court to set aside the summons.

Peck v. Strauss, 33 Cal. 678.

31. Where there are several defendants, and all are served with summons in one county, the presumption is that all resided in the county where served, and a service of a copy of the complaint on one is deemed a service on all.

King v. Blood, 41 Cal. 314.

32. The "district" mentioned in the second subdivision of the twenty-fifth section of the practice act, which speaks of the service as summons in the district in which the action is brought, is the district or territory over which the court exercises jurisdiction.

McCauley v. Fulton, 44 Cal. 356.

33. A summons can not be served by delivering a copy to the attorney in fact of the defendant.

Drake v. Duvenick, 45 Cal. 455.

Hancock v. Pruess, 40 Cal. 572.

35. When the summons is served after having been once returned, and the court thereupon assumes jurisdiction of the defendants, and renders judgment against them, it will be presumed in a collateral attack on the judgment that the court made the requisite order, permitting the summons to be withdrawn for further service.

Id.

36. A redelivery of the summons without an order of the court is an irregularity, of which the opposite party may avail himself by direct attack; but such irregularity will not render the service of the summons void.

Id.

37. A defendant may move to set aside the return of service of a summons, and if it is denied, may answer without waiving the benefit of an exception to the order denying his motion.

Kent v. West, 50 Cal. 185.

38. Before the amendments to the code of civil procedure, which went into effect July 1, 1874, the summons, in an action of unlawful detainer, was required to be served within the time directed by the order of the judge indorsed on the summons. Id.

39. Where the action was brought against R. W. Spencer, John Doe, and Richard Roe, and Spencer was served with a copy of the summons only: Held, that the service was good, and that he could not remain silent and then claim that the service was void; but should have searched the files of the clerk's office for the complaint.

Sacramento S. B. v. Spencer, 53 Cal. 737.

40. Where a party was insane and no guardian had been appointed for him, the practice act of 1850 required that he should be served personally. Id.

On Corporations.

42. A sheriff's return on the summons against a corporation that he served the same on the president and secretary of the company, is prima facie evidence that the persons named in the return were such officers. Rowe v. Table Mt. Co., 10 Cal. 441.

43. In a suit against a corporation, the summons must be served on one of the officers or agents named in the practice act.

Aiken v. Quartz Rock Co., 6 Cal. 186.

44. Service on a party in possession of the property, who does not appear to be one of the officers named, will not entitle the plaintiff to a judgment by default. Id.

45. Where, in an action against an incorporated company, the return of the sheriff showed that he had served the summons in the action "upon James Street, one of the proprietors of the company:" Held, that it was not sufficient evidence of service to give the court jurisdiction, it not appearing that Street was president, or head of the corporation, or secretary, cashier, or managing agent thereof.

O'Brien v. S. F. & T. C. Co., 10 Cal. 343.

46. In an action against a corporation, where the summons was served upon Bristol, who had been duly elected its president and presided at several meetings of its board of trustees, and who had never resigned, or been removed, or his office declared vacant, or a permanent president chosen in his place, though he had left the country and no longer took any part in the management of the corporation affairs, and at the meeting of the board, after his so leaving the country, another person was elected president pro tem. for that meeting, and was regarded by the stockholders as the president: Held, that Bristol was still president de jure, and the service upon the corporation valid.

Eel River N. Co. v. Struver, 41 Cal. 616.

On Partners.

47. The return of a sheriff on a summons that he had served it on one Pendleton, one of the partners and associates of the company, is prima facie evidence that Pendleton was such partner and associate.

Wilson v. Spring Hill Co., 10 Cal. 445.

48. Where the summons was issued against Adams & Co., and served on C. B. Macy, and nothing appeared to connect Macy with Adams & Co.: Held, that judgment by default could not be sustained.

Adams v. Town, 3 Cal. 247.

On Minors.

49. The requirement of the statute being positive that in actions against a minor under the age of fourteen years, personal service of summons must be made; in cases where he resides out of this state, and his residence is known to plaintiff, such residence should be stated in the affidavit for publication.

Gray v. Palmer, 9 Cal. 616.

50. Service of the summons upon infants, although under the age of fourteen years, should be made by depositing a summons and certified copy of the complaint in the post-office, directed to the infant the same as to other defendants. Id.

51. Under the practice act of 1851, in an action against an infant, if he was over fourteen years of age, the summons was served by delivering to him personally a copy of the same, and a certified copy of the complaint.

Brown v. Lawson, 51 Cal. 615.

Personal Service, How Made.

52. Under the practice act, personal service of writs and process is made by delivering a copy to the party upon whom service is required. Independent of the statutes, the mode would be by showing the original under seal of the court, and delivering a copy.

Edmondson v. Mason, 16 Cal. 386.

Service in Suits against Counties.

53. In counties where there is a board of supervisors, having an acting chairman or president of such board, the original process and papers shall be served on such chairman or president, in the same manner as upon private persons; when there is no such chairman or president, they shall in like manner be served on the county judge of the county.

Laws of 1854, p. 194.

By Publication.

54. Section 30 of the practice act, being in derogation of the common law, must be strictly construed and pursued.

Ricketson v. Richardson, 26 Cal. 149.

Forbes v. Hyde, 31 Id. 342.

People v. Huber, 20 Id. 81.

No presumption in favor of jurisdiction will be indulged.

McMinn v. Whelan, 27 Cal. 309.

55. The word "person" in its legal significance, is a generic term, and was intended to include artificial as well as natural.

Douglass v. P. M. S. Co., 4 Cal. 304.

56. In proceeding against an absent defendant upon mere constructive service, the conditions of the statute must be strictly pursued, or the judgment can not be supported upon appeal.

Cohn v. Kimber, 47 Cal. 144.

Affidavit.

57. Where the attorney of record makes an affidavit that diligent search has been made for the defendant, and that he conceals himself to avoid service of process, it is sufficient for an order for the service of summons to be made by publication.

Anderson v. Parker, 6 Cal. 201.

58. An affidavit for an order of the publication of the summons, upon the ground of the absence of the defendant, which states that the defendant could not, after due diligence, be found in the county where the action was pending; that affiant had inquired of Fogg, who is an intimate friend of defendant, as to his whereabouts; that Fogg was unable to inform him, and that plaintiff did not know where defendant could be found within the state, is insufficient to authorize the publication. A publication made upon such an affidavit will not give the court jurisdiction of the person of the defendant.

Swain v. Chase, 12 Cal. 283.

Ricketson v. Richardson, 26 Cal. 149.

60. It is not sufficient to state generally in such affidavit that, after due diligence, the defendant can not be found within the state, or that the plaintiff has a good cause of action against him, or that he is a necessary party; but the acts constituting due diligence, or the facts showing that he is a necessary party, should be stated. Id.

61. Before jurisdiction of a defendant can be acquired by publication of summons, it must appear by affidavit, either that the defendant resides out of the state, or has departed from the state, or can not, after due diligence, be found within the state, or that he conceals himself to avoid the service of summons, and in addition thereto, it must also appear by affidavit, that a cause of action exists against the defendant, or that he is a necessary or proper party.

Brady v. Seaman, 30 Cal. 610.

62. An affidavit to obtain an order for the publication of summons on the ground that the defendant can not, after due diligence, be found within the state, which does not state whether the residence of the defendant is known, and does not show that the affiant does not know where the defendant may be found, is insufficient to authorize the publication of summons. Id.

63. An affidavit in such case must state facts which show that due diligence to find the defendant has been used, and it must also appear therefrom that the diligence has not been rewarded with discovery. Id.

64. If the affidavit upon which an order for publication of summons is made is insufficient, the court acquires no jurisdiction of the defendant, and the judgment is void. Id.

65. When the affidavit for publication of summons presents some evidence tending to prove each jurisdictional fact, but of a character clearly too inconclusive to justify an order of publication, the order is erroneous, and the judgment will be reversed on appeal, but is not void. If there is a total want of evidence upon which to base the order, the judgment is void. In the former case the judgment can not be attacked collaterally, but only on appeal.

Forbes v. Hyde, 31 Cal. 342.

66. The existence of a cause of action against the defendant is a jurisdictional fact which must be made to appear before an order for publication of summons can be made, and if it does not appear by the affidavit, the order is void. Id.

67. Facts should be set out in an affidavit for an order to publish summons, and not a general expression of opinion or belief that an ultimate jurisdictional fact exists without the probative facts upon which such opinion or belief is founded. Id.

68. An affidavit to obtain an order for publication of summons, which states that the deponent "has a good cause of action in this suit against the said defendant, and that he is a proper party defendant thereto, as he verily believes," does not state any fact tending to show a cause of action, and an order and publication based on it are void. Id.

Hahn v. Kelly, 34 Cal. 391.

Order.

69. An order for the service of summons by publication must state the facts proved by the affidavit upon which it is based. It is not sufficient for the order to state, generally, that the defendant resides out of the state, or can not after due diligence be found within the state, or that a cause of action exists against the defendant.

Ricketson v. Richardson, 26 Cal. 149.

People v. Huber, 20 Cal. 81.

71. An order to publish a summons made in advance of the issuance of the summons is a nullity. Id.

72. The judge has no power to order a summons to issue, but only to order a summons already issued to be served in a special manner. Id.

McMinn v. Whelan, 27 Cal. 304.

Forbes v. Hyde, 31 Id. 342.

73. The affidavit is only prima facie evidence of the facts stated.

Ware v. Robinson, 9 Cal. 111.

74. In a suit to enforce a lien for taxes, if the complaint is not verified, service of summons can not be made by publication and posting, without making an affidavit and procuring an order of publication, as in other cases. Martin v. Parsons, 50 Cal. 498.

75. On granting the order for the publication of summons, the court acts judicially, and can know nothing about the facts upon which the order is to be granted, except from the affidavit.

Ricketson v. Richardson, 26 Cal. 149.

76. The question of the sufficiency of an affidavit and order for publication of summons may be raised by motion made in the suit or by an appeal supported by a statement. Sharp v. Daugney, 33 Cal. 505.

Publication of Summons.

77. A publication of summons weekly against a non-resident defendant, commencing on the tenth day of January, and ending on the ninth day of April, is a publication of three full calendar months, and the first day of the forty within which the defendant is required to answer is the tenth of April.

S. & L. Soc. v. Thompson, 32 Cal. 347.

78. If the last day of the publication of a summons is in the same week in which the three months expire, the publication is sufficient to give the court jurisdiction, although this day is less than three months from the first day of publication. Id.

79. If some of the publications of a summons, including the last, are made on Sunday, in the regular issues of the paper, it does not vitiate the service. Id.

80. If service on a defendant is attempted to be procured by publication, the summons must be published as it was when the order of publication was made.

McMinn v. Whelan, 27 Cal. 300.

81. Where the summons as published, on being compared with the original, discloses certain discrepancies of a purely literal character, it is held sufficient that, in sense and meaning, the original summons and the published version of it are identical.

Sharp v. Daugney, 33 Cal. 505.

PROOF OF SERVICE.

82. Service of summons may be proved by parol evidence. Hahn v. Kelly, 34 Cal. 391.

83. The proof of the former mode of service, if made by an officer, is by his affidavit or certificate, setting forth the mode, time, and place of such service; if made by a citizen, then by his affidavit setting forth said facts, and in addition the facts constituting his said qualifications. Proof of the latter mode of service is by the affidavit of the printer, his foreman, or principal clerk, setting forth the fact, where and how long the publication of summons has been made, and where a deposit in the post-office has been ordered, then an affidavit showing such deposit. Id.

84. Where S. and B. admitted "due service" of the summons in an action against them and others, the court thereby acquired jurisdiction of them, and as to them the judgment was valid.

Sharp v. Brunnings, 35 Cal. 528.

85. The return of service by the sheriff, on the party in possession, where no appearance is made, is prima facie evidence that the person served was the person in possession within the meaning of the statute.

People v. Fox, 39 Cal. 621.

86. When the return on a summons states that a copy of the summons was personally served on the defendant in the action, giving the time and place, this return, although informal, is yet sufficient to give the court jurisdiction of the person, so that the judgment is not void for want of jurisdiction, when collaterally attacked.

Drake v. Duvenick, 45 Cal. 453.

87. Such return does not show that a copy of the summons was not delivered to the defendant personally, and it has at least some legal tendency to prove that it was so delivered. Id.

88. If in such case there is more than one defendant, the fact that the return does not state that a copy of the complaint was served with the summons does not render the judgment void in a collateral attack. Id.

89. Where the affidavit of the publication of a summons, made by one who therein styles himself "the proprietor" of the newspaper in which the publication was made, instead of "the printer," as required by the practice act: Held, that the terms "printer" and "proprietor" are, in the sense of the statute, synonymous.

Quivey v. Porter, 37 Cal. 458.

90. In making service of a summons, and in the return of such service, the provisions of the statute must be, and must be shown to have been, substantially observed and followed by the officer, otherwise the proceedings can not be supported upon a direct appeal taken. People v. Bernal, 43 Cal. 385.

91. Mere irregularity in the service of a summons does not render a judgment void for want of jurisdiction.

Drake v. Duvenick, 45 Cal. 455.

Return by a Deputy.

92. Courts can not know an under officer, and the act and return on a summons of a deputy sheriff is a nullity, unless done in the name and by the authority of his principal.

Joyce v. Joyce, 5 Cal. 449.

93. A summons was served by a deputy sheriff and returned with the following signature to the return: Elijah T. Cole, D. S. Judgment was rendered by default: Held, that the judgment was null and void; the return should have been in the name of the sheriff by the deputy.

Rowley v. Howard, 23 Cal. 401.

94. Courts should presume that the sheriff served all process within his jurisdiction, where no place of service is stated.

Crane v. Brannan, 3 Cal. 192.

95. Where the return of a sheriff states that he served defendants with a certified copy of the complaint, it will be presumed that the copy was certified by the clerk, and not by some one else.

Curtis v. Herrick, 14 Cal. 117.

Place of Service.

96. The only object of the designation of the place where process is served is to determine the period within which the answer must be filed, or when default may be taken.

Whitwell v. Barbier, 7 Cal. 62.

97. Where the evidence of the place of service is insufficient to authorize a judgment, advantage of it should be taken, either by appeal or on motion to vacate the judgment.

Pico v. Suñol, 6 Cal. 294.

98. The statute does not require an admission of service of process to designate the place where the service was made. The object of such designation, when required, is to determine the period within which the answer must be filed, or when default may be taken.

Alderson v. Bell, 9 Cal. 315.

99. If the affidavit of service of summons states the county in which service was made and defendant makes default, it will be presumed that he was a resident of the county where service was made.

Calderwood v. Brooks, 28 Cal. 151.

Return by any Other Person.

100. The affidavit of service required by this section must show that the person serving it was a white male citizen, over twenty-one years of age, competent to testify in the cause, and that a certified copy of the complaint accompanied the summons.

McMillan v. Reynolds, 11 Cal. 372.

101. The affidavit of service of summons must show affirmatively compliance with all the requirements of the law.

Id.

102. Where judgment of foreclosure was obtained on such service, and the premises sold under the judgment to a party who was at the time of such purchase cognizant of the fact of such defective service, and also that the defendant was a married woman, and where the defendant has a valid defense to such action, the judgment will be set aside.

Id.

103. An affidavit which avers that affiant on the day named "served the summons in this action upon the defendant, Mary B. McMillan, at her residence in the city of San Francisco, by delivering and leaving with her a copy thereof, attached to a copy of the amended complaint filed in this action," is insufficient.

Id.

104. An affidavit of service of summons which states the facts constituting affiant a competent witness, is sufficient without stating that he is competent.

Dimick v. Campbell, 31 Cal. 238.

105. If a summons is served by a person other than a sheriff, and in his affidavit of service he states that he is twenty-one years of age, but fails to state that he was twenty-one years of age at the date of service, it is a mere irregularity, and a judgment by default rendered in the case can not be attacked collaterally.

Peck v. Strauss, 33 Cal. 678.

106. The service of a summons by a person not a sheriff, as provided by the practice act, is a service "according to the course of the common law."

Id.

Return Conclusive.

107. A sheriff's return is not traversable, nor can it be attacked collaterally, even if he has been guilty of fraud or collusion.

Egery v. Buchanan, 5 Cal. 56.

108. The affidavit of deposit of summons in a post-office need not state that the deposit was made by a white male citizen, or that the affiant is such citizen. It is sufficient if the deposit and affidavit are made by a human being.

Sharp v. Daugney, 33 Cal. 505.

109. The affidavit of deposit of summons in a post-office need not state that there is a communication by mail between the place of deposit and the place to which the packet was addressed, nor that the post-office was a United States post-office. Id.

110. The failure to deposit in the post-office a copy of the complaint and summons, directed to a minor, is not cured by the appearance of the mother in her own behalf.

Gray v. Palmer, 9 Cal. 616.

111. In a collateral attack on a judgment, the return of a sheriff that he served a copy of the summons, will be held equivalent to a return that he served a copy certified by the clerk.

Brown v. Lawson, 51 Cal. 615.

Written Admission of Defendant.

112. Courts will take judicial notice of the signatures of their officers, as such; but there is no rule which extends such notice to the signatures of parties to a cause. When, therefore, the proof of service of process consists of the written admissions of defendants, such admissions, to be available in the action, should be accompanied with some evidence of the genuineness of the signatures of the parties. In the absence of such evidence, the court can not notice them.

Alderson v. Bell, 9 Cal. 315.

113. An acknowledgment of service of summons is only sufficient when reduced to writing and subscribed by the party. A verbal acknowledgment is not sufficient.

Montgomery v. Tutt, 11 Cal. 307.

Affidavit of Printer.

114. When service of summons is had by publication, proof of the publication can only be made by the affidavit of the printer, his foreman, or principal clerk; and the affidavit should state that the person taking the same holds one of these positions. An affidavit commencing in this way: "A. B., principal clerk, etc., being sworn, deposes," etc., is insufficient, and would not give the court jurisdiction of the person of the defendant.

Steinback v. Leese, 27 Cal. 295.

115. Where an affidavit of publication of a summons was made by a publisher and proprietor, and not by the printer, foreman, or principal clerk, it was held sufficient, as being within the spirit of the statute.

Sharp v. Daugney, 33 Cal. 505.

116. Where there is but one clerk in the office of a public newspaper, his affidavit of the publication of summons, or notice, in said paper, is sufficient, and it is unnecessary for the affidavit to describe him as principal clerk.

Gray v. Palmer, 9 Cal. 616.

117. If the affidavit of the printer states that the summons was published one month, and yet the court in its judgment states that it was published three, or that service had been had upon the defendant, it will be presumed that other proof than that contained in the judgment roll was made. This recital imports absolute verity.

Hahn v. Kelly, 34 Cal. 391.

Generally.

118. Where service is attempted in a mode different from the course of the common law, the statute must be strictly pursued to give jurisdiction.

Jordan v. Giblin, 12 Cal. 100.

119. When some of the defendants are not served with process, the plaintiff may proceed against those served.

Ingraham v. Gildemeester, 2 Cal. 88.

Service, When Complete.

120. The practice act provides, in relation to service on non-residents by publication, that "the service of the summons shall be deemed complete at the expiration of the time prescribed by the order of publication." Held, that the publication only affects the service of the summons, and the defendant is entitled to forty days after the period of publication to file his answer.

Grewell v. Henderson, 5 Cal. 465.

NEW SUMMONS.

121. When an order is made for the service of summons by publication, and a summons is issued, and a supplemental complaint is afterwards filed, and a summons issued thereon, the original action becomes merged in the action as supplemented, and the court will not acquire jurisdiction of the persons of absent defendants by publication of the original summons, but the summons issued on the supplemental complaint must be served by publication.

McMinn v. Whelan, 27 Cal. 300.

Forbes v. Hyde, 31 Id. 342.

APPOINTMENT OF ATTORNEY.

122. The provision of the practice act authorizing judgment, personal and final, against a defendant who concealed himself for whom the court has appointed an attorney, with privilege to the defendant to come in and deny in six months, is not in violation of the constitution of the United States, or that of this state.

Ware v. Robinson, 9 Cal. 107.

123. The court may appoint an attorney for an alleged concealed defendant, and a judgment against him will stand after six months have elapsed, unless he filed his bill to set aside the judgment on the ground of fraud, that he was not concealed. Id.

124. An affidavit which avers a cause of action against the defendant; that defendant can not after due diligence be found in the state; that summons had been issued, but sheriff can not find him; that defendant's residence is in the county where the summons issued, and that defendant still has a family residing in said county, is insufficient to authorize the court to appoint an attorney to represent such absent defendant.

SUNDAY.

1. In the absence of any custom to the contrary, Sundays are computed in the calculation of lay days at the port of discharge; but where the contract specifies working lay days, Sundays and holidays are excluded in the computation.

Brooks v. Minturn, 1 Cal. 481.

2. The decision in the People ex rel. Hepburn v. Whitman was predicated upon an error in the printed copy of the constitution, the word "Sunday" being there used in the singular.

Price v. Whitman, 8 Cal. 412.

3. The ten days given by the constitution must be computed by excluding the day on which the bill is presented to the governor.

Id.

4. Considered as a municipal regulation, the legislature has no right to forbid or enjoin the lawful pursuit of a lawful occupation on one day of the week any more than it can forbid it altogether.

Ex parte Newman, 9 Cal. 502.

5. A writ placed in the sheriff's hands on Sunday can not be officially received by him on that day. It can only be considered officially in his hands when Sunday has expired. Whitney v. Butterfield, 13 Cal. 335.

6. The act of the legislature entitled "an act for the observance of the Sabbath" (stats. 1861, p. 655), prohibiting all persons, with certain exceptions, from keeping open their places of business on Sunday for the transaction of business, is constitutional.

Ex parte Andrews, 18 Cal. 678.

7. Such act violates neither the first section of article I of the constitution of this state, which declares "all men are by nature free and independent, and have certain inalienable rights, among which are those of enjoying and defending life and liberty; acquiring, possessing and protecting property, and pursuing safety and happiness;" nor the fourth section of that article, which declares that "the free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession and worship, without discrimination or preference, shall forever be allowed in this state." etc. Id.

8. The legislature under our system has power to repress whatever is hurtful to the general good, and is generally the exclusive judge of what is or is not hurtful, the only limitations being those prescribed in the constitution. Subject only to such limitations, the legislature has power to pass laws regulating the relations, contracts, intercourse and business of society at large, and also of its particular members in respect to each other. Id.

9. The clause in the constitution guaranteeing the right of "acquiring property" does not deprive the legislature of the power of prescribing the mode of acquisition, or of regulating the conduct and relations of the members of society in respect to property rights. Id.

10. The legislature has not only the power to regulate, but the power to suppress particular branches of business deemed by it immoral and prejudicial to the general good, as gambling, lotteries, etc. The duty of government comprehends the moral as well as physical welfare of the state. Id.

11. Section 4 of article I of our constitution, as to the free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession and worship, prohibits all legislation which invidiously discriminates in favor of or against any religious system; but does not prohibit legislation upon subjects connected with religion, nor does it make void legislation, the effect of which is to promote religion, or even advance the interests of a sect or class of religionists. Id.

12. The act of 1861, "for the observance of the sabbath," is purely a civil regulation, and spends its whole force upon matters of civil economy, and was not designed to subserve any religious purpose. Id.

13. Where a party was charged with keeping open a bar for the sale of liquors on Sunday, in violation of the act of 1861, and was convicted and committed to custody, and applied to the supreme court for a writ of habeas corpus, claiming his discharge on the ground that he kept the bar as part of the business of a hotel, and therefore had not violated the law: Hell, that petitioner can not avail himself of this defense on this application, but must adopt some other mode, the complaint against him not showing that the bar was kept as part of the hotel business. Ex parte Bird, 19 Cal. 130.

14. Contracts made in this state on Sunday are not void because made on Sunday.

Moore v. Murdock, 26 Cal. 514.

1. ELECTION AND TERM OF OFFICE.
2. JURISDICTION AND POWERS.

65. RECORDS, ETC.

ELECTION AND TERM OF OFFICE.

1. One who has held the office of supervisor is, after the expiration of his term, and the election and qualification of his successor, no longer an officer, either de jure or de facto, but if he attempts to act as such, is a mere naked usurper.

Trinity v. McCammon, 25 Cal. 117.

JURISDICTION AND POWERS.

2. From the necessity of the case, supervisors exercise judicial, legislative, and executive powers, in matters relating to the police and fiscal regulations of counties.

People v. El Dorado, 8 Cal. 58.

3. The board of supervisors of a county is a special tribunal with mixed powers, administrative, legislative, and judicial, and jurisdiction over roads, ferries, and bridges, is given to it by statute. Its judgments or orders can not be attacked collaterally, any more than the judgments of courts of record. Waugh v. Chauncey, 13 Cal. 11.

4. It is doubtful whether an appeal lies from the exercise of this discretion. But if it does it must be made direct to some superior tribunal. Id.

5. It is true, as a matter of law, that a board of supervisors in laying out a public road exercises judicial functions.

Damrell v. San Joaquin, 40 Cal. 154.

6. A board of supervisors of a county, in allowing or disallowing a claim, exercise judicial functions.

Tilden v. Sacramento, 41 Cal. 68.

7. A board of supervisors is a body with limited jurisdiction, and its jurisdiction must appear in the record of its proceedings.

Finch v. Tehama, 29 Cal. 453.

8. It was the intention of the legislature, by the twenty-fifth section of the act creating a board of supervisors throughout this state, to transfer from the courts of sessions to the boards of supervisors the general and special powers and duties of a civil character, which had, before the passage of that act, been vested in such court.

People v. Bircham, 12 Cal. 50.

9. It was not the design, in this manner, to repeal any law, general or special, before existing; but, as, under the decision of Burgoyne v. The Supervisors, 5 Cal. 9, a question of the constitutionality of those laws which conferred duties and powers, not of a criminal cognizance, was made, the legislature meant to remove the difficulty by transferring all these functions to the boards of supervisors. Id.

10. Boards of supervisors are a quasi judicial body so far as concerns the examination and settlement of accounts and claims against a county; and the allowance and settlement by such boards are an adjudication of the claims, and conclusive.

El Dorado v. Elstner, 18 Cal. 144.

11. The clause in the act creating boards of supervisors in this state providing that the said boards "shall have authority at their last session before the general election in each year, to change the boundaries of the (supervisor) districts in their said respective counties," is merely directory, and does not prohibit such change at any other session. Tuohy v. Chase, 30 Cal. 524.

12. The board of supervisors of a county possess no power to allow the county auditor compensation for the issuance and cancellation of warrants drawn on the county treasurer.

People v. El Dorado Co., 11 Cal. 171.

13. Such a claim is not authorized by law, and the power of the board to allow accounts against the county is confined to those "legally chargeable." Id.

14. The board of supervisors are not empowered to create a debt or liability on the part of the county, for any purpose except as provided by law.

Foster v. Coleman, 10 Cal. 278.

15. When the account of a deputy assessor for one thousand six hundred and fifty dollars was audited and allowed by the board, and ordered to be paid, the order being in the following words: "Ordered, the sum of four thousand one hundred and twenty-five dollars be paid out of the fund for current expenses, to equal sixteen hundred and fifty dollars, in cash, at the rate of forty cents per dollar—October 29, 1856," and in pursuance of such order the county auditor drew his warrant for four thousand one hundred and twenty-five dollars upon the treasurer, and delivered it to the deputy assessor, who presented it to the treasurer, and by him it was indorsed and registered in its order of presentation, among the legal warrants against the county: Held, that the order was made without authority, and was void, and the fact that the market or cash value of county warrants was only forty per cent of the nominal amount, and the object of the action of the board was to give that which was, at the time, an equivalent to cash, did not justify the action of the board. Id.

16. The power to declare an office vacant is vested, under the statute, where the duty to approve of the bond of the officer is lodged. That duty is imposed upon the county judge, and not the supervisors; and where the supervisors of Marin county declared the office of constable vacant, because the constable failed to comply with their order to file a new bond: Held, that they exceeded their jurisdiction.

People v. Marin Co., 10 Cal. 344.

17. The provision of the statute organizing boards of supervisors, which empowers them to "require new bonds of any county or township officer, with additional securities, whenever they deem the same necessary," does not leave the exercise of the power to their arbitrary discretion. By the terms "whenever they deem the same necessary," is meant whenever their judgment pronounces, after an examination of the facts of the case, that there is necessity for further security. Id.

18. In determining upon the sufficiency of the bond of an officer, and whether the officer, by his failure to comply with the requisition of the supervisors to file a new bond, has vacated his office, the supervisors exercise powers of a judicial character. Id.

19. An order of the supervisors, requiring a new bond of an officer, should specify the ground upon which the order is made; and where the supervisors of Marin county made an order as follows: "Ordered, by the board of supervisors, that John De Fries, constable of San Rafael township, file another bond, with two or more sufficient sureties, within fifteen days:" Held, that the order was fatally defective. Id.

20. Boards of supervisors have, under the statute, a general power to grant a ferry franchise, and to determine where, under what circumstances, and to whom it shall be granted. Henshaw v. Butte Co., 19 Cal. 150.

21. Boards of supervisors have jurisdiction conferred upon them by statute to determine whether the public convenience requires a bridge or ferry within one mile of any other regularly licensed bridge or ferry; and it is a question, whether their determination upon this point is not final and conclusive. If, however, their determination on such matter is not final, it must be reviewed by certiorari, and can not be attacked in a collateral action.

Fall v. Paine, 23 Cal. 302.

22. A board of supervisors has no power to set apart a portion of the revenue of the county as a fund for current expenses.

Laforge v. Magee, 6 Cal. 285.

23. Where the board of supervisors of San Joaquin, under the act of 1860 (stats. 1860, p. 317), authorizing them to levy a special tax for the construction and repair of seven public highways leading from the city of Stockton, the fourth of which was, "a road running from the limits of Stockton, via Hamilton's ranch, known as the Sonora road," levied and collected the tax, and then, July 10, 1860, passed an order locating the route of this fourth road, along which plaintiffs lived, and afterwards assessed the damages to the owners of land, etc.; but, before they had obtained the right of way for this road, passed another order in March, 1861, annulling the first order and changing the location of the road, which rendered the lands of plaintiffs of less value: Held, that the first order laying out the road was unexecuted; that no rights of plaintiffs had vested, and that the board had power to make the second order; that the first order was not in the nature of a power exercised and exhausted, but was at most a proposed mode of executing a power, which could be changed at any time before rights had vested under it.

Burkett v. San Joaquin Co., 18 Cal. 702.

24. Held, further, that the remedy adopted by plaintiffs, a bill in equity to have declared void the second order of the board, and for injunction restraining the road commissioners from paying toward the second road any of the money collected on the tax, is objectionable. Id.

25. The board of supervisors of a county can not settle with the county treasurer at a special meeting of such board, unless they have first given public notice of such meeting, and specified in such notice that such business will be transacted.

El Dorado v. Reed, 11 Cal. 131.

26. In order to give the amplest opportunity to the district attorney, or citizens who desire to do so, to contest the allowance of improper demands against the public treasury, the business of the supervisors is required to be transacted at the regular meetings required by law; or if at special meetings, public notice must be given of the business to be so transacted; and unless such notice be given, the acts of the supervisors are a nullity. Id.

27. Boards of supervisors possess the power, as incidental to that of buying, selling, and leasing of property, and the management, care, and preservation thereof, as conferred by statute (stats. 1855, sec. 9, p. 51), to take all legal measures necessary to that end, by suit or otherwise, and therein are vested with large discretionary powers. Hornblower v. Duden, 35 Cal. 664.

28. If, in the exercise of their judgment and discretion, the board of supervisors conceive that the interests of the county are involved in a certain question, and thereupon take legal measures, by suit or otherwise, to advance or protect those interests, the expense thus incurred becomes a legal charge against the county, notwithstanding the courts might ultimately hold that the board had adopted the wrong remedy, or were entitled to no remedy whatever. Id.

29. The board of supervisors of a county have no authority to allow an unaudited claim against a county, except it be done within one year after the claim shall accrue and become due.

Carroll v. Liebthaler, 37 Cal. 193.

30. A county owning stock in a railroad company is directly interested, like any other stockholder, in the conduct and management of its affairs, and, as a consequence, in the selection of its officers. The county would have a right, through her board of supervisors, to contest the election of such officers, if deemed to have been illegal, and to that end to adopt any remedy she might be advised was legal, and the expense thus incurred would become a legal charge against the county. Courts can exercise no control over the judgment and discretion possessed by boards of supervisors in such cases.

Hornblower v. Duden, 35 Cal. 664.

31. If a board of supervisors sell the stock owned by the county in a railroad corporation, in pursuance of a law authorizing such board to do so, its individual members are not entitled to any extra pay for the services thus rendered.

Andrews v. Pratt, 44 Cal. 309.

32. Boards of supervisors are the guardians of the property interests of their respective counties, and in that relation occupy a position of trust, and are bound to the same measure of good faith toward the county which is required of an ordinary trustee towards his cuique que trust, or an agent toward his principal. Id.

33. A supervisor is not entitled to any remuneration for services rendered the county as a supervisor, except his per diem and mileage, as fixed by law. Id.

34. The board, in which the corporate authority of a city is vested, is intrusted with its property in a fiduciary capacity, and its members can not bargain with reference to it, with a corporation in which they hold stock.

San Diego v. S. D. & L. A. R. Co., 44 Cal. 106.

35. Boards of supervisors have power to employ other counsel than the district attorney to assist in or to conduct the prosecution or defense of any suit to which the county is a party, which power extends equally to suits to which she is a party upon the record, and to those in the prosecution or defense of which she has, or is supposed to have, some interest. The judgment and discretion of the board in the exercise of this power are not open to review by the courts.

Hornblower v. Duden, 35 Cal. 664.

Tilden v. Sacramento Co., 41 Cal. 68.

37. When an act is passed authorizing the building of a toll bridge across a river, and the collection of such tolls as the board of supervisors of the county shall fix, with a proviso that the legislature may modify or change the rates, the power of the board of supervisors in the premises is not exhausted when they once fix the tolls, but the board may change the same from time to time, subject so the supervisory control of the legislature.

Stanislaus B. Co. v. Horsley, 46 Cal. 108.

38. No order made by the board of supervisors is valid or binding unless it is authorized by law. Linden v. Case, 46 Cal. 171.

39. No claim against a county can be allowed unless it be legally chargeable to the county; and if claims not legally chargeable to the county are allowed, neither the allowance nor the warrants drawn therefor create any legal liabilities. Id.

40. If illegal claims are allowed by a board of supervisors against the county, it is the duty of the auditor to refuse to draw warrants therefor; and when the warrants are drawn, it is the duty of the treasurer to refuse to pay them. Id.

41. The board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco are the auditing officers of unliquidated demands against the city and county, and it is their duty to allow such claims as are just in full, or in some less but exact amount. They can not set aside an amount out of which a less sum may be paid by any committee or officer.

S. V. W. W. v. Ashbury, 52 Cal. 126.

42. The board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco has no authority, under the act of March 16, 1874, to accept from the government of the United States a vessel for a training ship for boys, if the act of congress granting the vessel contains provisions inconsistent with said act of March 16. Glass v. Ashbury, 49 Cal. 571.

43. The board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco may, at one vote, allow several claims against the city and county without the passage of an ordinance, even if the aggregate of the demands exceeds five hundred dollars, provided each demand is for a less sum than five hundred dollars.

Sweeney v. Maynard, 52 Cal. 468.

44. The board of supervisors of the county has no power to contract for any of the county printing, without the ten days' public notice that such contract will be let to the lowest bidder which is required by section 4047 of the political code.

Maxwell v. Stanislaus, 53 Cal. 389.

45. A board of supervisors has authority to erect a county jail, without a law authorizing the levy of a special tax therefor.

Babcock v. Goodrich, 47 Cal. 488.

46. The erection of a county jail is among the expenses of the current year, and may be paid for out of the money raised by the general tax which the board of supervisors are authorized to levy. Id.

47. If a board of supervisors enter into a contract for the erection of a county jail, the work and labor to be paid for in installments, on the certificate of the architect that a certain sum has been expended, an account giving the sum total of an installment, without "all the items of the claim," certified to by the architect, is a sufficient compliance with section 4072 of the political code, to authorize the board of supervisors to allow the same. Id.

48. It is the estimate of the board of supervisors, at the time an account is presented for allowance, of what the revenue of the year will be, which must control their action in allowing or rejecting it. Id.

49. The board of supervisors, in passing upon a claim against the county, act as a quasi judicial body, and their allowance and settlement of the claim is an adjudication, which is conclusive.

Colusa Co. v. De Jarnett, 55 Cal. 373.

ORDINANCES.

50. It can not be assumed judicially that a city ordinance requiring the payment of fifty dollars every ninety days for the privilege of retailing spirituous liquors in quantities less than one quart, is a virtual prohibition of the sale of such liquors.

Ex parte Hurl, 49 Cal. 557.

51. A city ordinance requiring the payment of a license every ninety days for the privilege of retailing spirituous liquors does not violate any provision of the constitution. Id.

52. The ordinance of a town which authorizes the marshal to seize sheep found running at large in the streets, does not justify the marshal in seizing sheep which are being herded by a competent person and are under his control.

Sheet v. Arnold, 52 Cal. 455.

53. If the board of supervisors consolidate the offices of recorder and auditor of the county, the ordinance making the consolidation must not only be passed and published, but must be published by order of the board. People v. Bailhache, 52 Cal. 310.

54. The legislative department of a city government can act only through the medium of an ordinance, but the ordinance may be in the form of a resolution, or be preceded by the words "be it ordained," etc.

Creighton v. Manson, 27 Cal. 613.

55. The publication of an ordinance alone is sufficient to give it validity without a publication of the law authorizing it. All persons are charged with notice of a law on which the ordinance is founded.

People v. San Francisco, 27 Cal. 655.

56. The order in question does no more than lay down a mere rule for the future guidance of all men, irrespective of calling. It neither charges nor convicts the petitioner of anything, and is not the exercise of judicial power.

Ex parte Shrader, 33 Cal. 279.

57. The enabling statute under which the order of the board of supervisors was made is not in contravention of any constitutional provision, and the order is within the power conferred by the statute, and is valid. Id.

LIABILITY OF.

58. Boards of supervisors can not be sued in their official character, in ordinary common law actions, for claims against the public, county, or village they represent, without express statutory provision.

Hastings v. San Francisco, 18 Cal. 49.

59. The verification of claims or accounts against counties, contemplated by the "act to limit the time for presentation of claims against counties and for receiving payment for the same" (stats. 1857, sec. 1, p. 167), is a verification by oath annexed to the account.

McCormick v. Tuolumne Co., 37 Cal. 257.

60. If the board of supervisors allow a claim against a county more than one year after it falls due, its action is void, and the auditor should refuse to draw his warrant for the same.

Carroll v. Siebenthaler, 37 Cal. 193.

61. If an action could be maintained in any case on a money judgment against a county, it certainly can not be without first presenting such judgment to the board of supervisors for allowance.

Alden v. Alameda, 43 Cal. 270.

62. The statute relating to boards of supervisors, and providing for the disposition of claims against counties (stats. 1855, p. 51, sec. 24), contemplates that when a judgment is obtained against a county it shall have the force and effect of an audited demand, in so far that it is no longer open to contestation, and makes it the duty of the supervisors to allow it as an audited claim, if presented within the proper time.

Id.

63. When a money judgment is recovered against a county no execution can issue on it, and the only remedy is to present it to the board of supervisors for allowance as an audited claim within the time prescribed by law (stats. 1855, p. 51), and if the board refuse to perform its duty by allowing it as such, it may be compelled to do so by mandamus.

Id.

64. The language of the statute of March 20, 1855, providing that no person shall sue a county in any case, or for any demand, without first presenting the claim to the board of supervisors (stats. 1855, p. 51, sec. 24), is sufficiently comprehensive to include a cause of action or demand founded on a judgment, which is itself but an adjudicated claim against the county.

Id.

RECORDS, ETC.

People v. Eureka Lake, 48 Cal. 143.

66. The chairman and clerk of the corporate board, exercising powers municipal and quasi legislative, sign the record of its proceedings, not as certifying to their own official action, but as witnesses that the record is the record made up by the clerk, under the direction of the board.

Id.

67. The general rule, that every public document which is required by law to be executed by a public officer must be verified by his official signature does not extend to the proof of the records of a corporate board which exercises powers municipal and quasi legislative.

Id.

68. The effect of the statute requiring the clerk and chairman of the board of supervisors to sign the record of its proceedings is merely to make their signatures evidence identifying the minutes.

Id.

69. A tax is not void because the record of the board of supervisors in levying it is not signed by the chairman and clerk of the board.

Id.

70. The record of the proceedings of the board of supervisors is under the control of the board, and mandamus will not lie to the clerk to compel him to correct the records. Wigginton v. Markley, 52 Cal. 411.

71. A member of a board of supervisors can not be interested in or receive pay for work done on any contract growing out of or connected with public works or improvements.

SURETIES.

1. IN GENERAL.
19. LIABILITIES OF.
53. JUDGMENT AGAINST.
59. RELEASE OF.
72. CONTRIBUTION.

IN GENERAL.

1. A surety has a right to stand on the precise terms of his contract. He can be held to no other or different contract.

People v. Buster, 11 Cal. 215.

2. The true meaning of the cases holding that a surety may stand upon the precise terms of his contract is that no strained construction is to be given to his obligation, and that you can not go beyond the fair import of the terms he employs in order to fasten upon him a liability; but a rational interpretation must be given to the language of his contract so as to reach the meaning of the terms used.

Pepole v. Breyfogle, 17 Cal. 504.

3. The sureties may show in defense either that the bond was not made, or that the decree was not made, or that the same has been obeyed, or that the same was obtained by fraud or collusion.

Irwin v. Backus, 25 Cal. 214.

4. As a general rule, sureties upon official bonds are not concluded by a decree or judgment against their principal, unless they have had their day in court, or an opportunity to be heard in their defense; but administration bonds form an exception to this general rule. Id.

5. To enable the assignee of a judgment to sue on the appeal bond filed in the cause, he must have an assignment of the bond.

Moses v. Thorne, 6 Cal. 87.

6. In the case of sureties on the official bond of a county treasurer, they all contract together, and with reference to the common responsibility. In case of a breach or loss, each surety has his recourse for contribution on his fellows. The discharge of one of the obligors affects the contract as to all, and amounts to a release of all as to all future acts of such official.

People v. Buster, 11 Cal. 215.

7. The respondents were ball in a recognizance conditioned for the appearance of M., to answer at court, upon an indictment found against him, on the nineteenth of April, 1852. M. appeared at the proper term, which was the June term following, and on the seventeenth of June moved to quash the indictment, for cause assigned, which was ordered by the court. Another indictment on the same charge was found by the grand jury then in session, at the same term, on the eighteenth of June, upon which M., being called, made default. Afterwards suit was brought upon the recognizance, against the bail, and judgment obtained thereon: Held, that the bail were entitled to relief against the said judgment.

People v. La Farge, 3 Cal. 130.

8. To suit on a recognizance for the appearance of a party charged with crime, the sureties can not set up as a defense, the fact that the amounts in which they justified were insufficient under the statute. The justification is no part of their contract.

People v. Shirley, 18 Cal. 121.

9. Sureties on the sheriff's official bond in this state stipulate for his official, not his personal dealings, and are entitled to stand on the precise terms of their contract.

Schloss v. White, 16 Cal. 65.

10. When an administrator, in the course of proceedings on the estate, gives two bonds, one when letters are issued, and the other when real estate is about to be sold, and the condition of each of the two bonds is the same, and the burden of the sureties in each is the same, the sureties on the two bonds, in an action on them, may be made joint defendants in the same action.

Powell v. Powell, 48 Cal. 234.

11. If two parties execute a bond as sureties for a third, conditioned that he will fulfill a contract he has made with a fourth, to erect a building within a given time, and a written agreement is afterwards drawn up to be executed by the four, extending the time to fulfill the contract, and such agreement is signed by three only, it is not binding on either.

Barber v. Burrows, 51 Cal. 473.

12. If a surety has a counter bond or security from the principal debtor, the creditor will be entitled to the benefit of it, and may in equity subject such security to the satisfaction of his debt, so far as it can be done without trenching upon the rights of the surety himself.

Van Orden v. Durham, 35 Cal. 136.

13. Where D., as surety for H., executed a mortgage on his lands to secure the payment of notes executed by H. alone, the mortgage containing no covenant on the part of D. to pay said notes, but on the contrary expressly providing that D. should not incur any personal cost or liability, and afterwards took a mortgage or conveyance of other property from H., the principal, to indemnify himself against any loss he might sustain by reason of his mortgage to secure said notes of H.: Held, first, that the holders of the notes might subject the premises mortgaged by D. to the payment of the notes; or, second, that they might abandon the mortgage and subject the said property of the principal in the hands of D. to the payment of the notes; or, third, that they might have the property mortgaged to secure the notes sold, the proceeds applied to their satisfaction, and if any balance remained, subject the surplus of any property of H., the principal, in the hands of D., that might remain after fully compensating D. for any loss or damage resulting to him by reason of the appropriation of the property mortgaged by him to the satisfaction of the notes of H.; but, fourth, that the holders of the notes are not entitled to appropriate both the property mortgaged to secure the notes, and that conveyed or mortgaged by the principal, H. to the surety D., for the indemnity of the latter. Id.

14. The limit of the liability of D., in the case stated, is his own property mortgaged, together with any surplus remaining in his hands from the securities received by him for his own indemnity, after fully indemnifying himself out of the latter for the damages resulting from the mortgage of his own property to secure the notes of H. Id.

15. D. should not be personally charged with costs in this action to foreclose the mortgage, and subject the securities in his hands to the payment of the notes, unless he either made an unsuccessful defense against the foreclosure of his own mortgage, or unless some surplus of the securities beyond the property mortgaged is found in his hands subject to be applied to the payment of the notes; nor should the mortgaged lands be charged with the costs of any unsuccessful attempt to obtain more than the rights of the note-holders justified under D.'s mortgage. Id.

16. One may be a surety only as between himself and his co-promisor, and yet, as to the creditor, both his apparent and actual character be that of principal. So held, in an action upon a promissory note, where it appeared that one S. applied to the plaintiffs for a loan, and that they agreed to let him have the money if he would give a note signed by himself and the defendants, as joint and several makers; and the note was so executed; but all the parties knew that the loan was made for the sole benefit of S., and that, as between himself and the defendant, the latter was merely a surety.

Harlan v. Ely, 55 Cal. 340.

17. The sureties on an appeal bond can not be sued until the judgment against their principal is in a condition to be enforced by an execution.

Parnell v. Hancock, 48 Cal. 452.

18. So long as there is an order of court in force, staying execution on the judgment, against a party who had appealed from a lower court, the sureties on his appeal bond can not be sued. Id.

LIABILITIES OF.

19. A mere neglect to sue the principal will not exonerate a surety.

Humphreys v. Crane, 5 Cal. 173.

20. The sureties on a bond, given by the party in the original suit, to perform any decree that might be rendered therein, stand in no better position. They are not parties to said suit, but are bound absolutely by the decree, subject to the single exception—that, if the decree be procured by collusion between plaintiff, their principal, and the defendant, they are not bound.

Riddle v. Baker, 13 Cal. 295.

21. In an action against the sureties on an administrator's bond for a breach of the bond by the principal, the proceedings taken in the probate court, in passing on an account rendered by the administrator, and a decree rendered therein directing the administrator to pay over a sum found remaining in his hands, are admissible in evidence against the sureties, although the sureties were not parties to the same.

Irwin v. Backus, 25 Cal. 214.

22. Such decree is equally conclusive upon the administrator and his sureties; and upon the refusal of the administrator to obey the same, the liability of the sureties attaches, and they can not go behind the decree to inquire into the merits of the matter therein passed on. Id.

23. Where an appeal is dismissed on motion of respondent, based on written consent of the appellant, the dismissal operates as an affirmation of the judgment, and charges the sureties on the undertaking on appeal.

Chase v. Beraud, 29 Cal. 138.

24. Where an appeal is taken by a party, and as a condition to give it effect, a bond or undertaking, with or by sureties, is annexed—the undertaking being executed for the benefit of the appellant—the law presumes it was executed at his request, and probably no proof of that fact is requisite in a suit by the surety against the appellant, for money paid on account of the suretyship. At all events, very slight proof of such request would be required.

Bostic v. Love, 16 Cal. 60.

25. An undertaking on appeal, conditioned for the payment of what the judgment creditor has no legal right to receive, is not, as to such condition, binding upon the sureties.

Whitney v. Allen, 21 Cal. 233.

26. Where an appeal is taken to the supreme court from a judgment, by filing notice of appeal and undertaking, and the appeal is afterwards dismissed by the supreme court for failure of the appellant to send up a transcript, the sureties are liable on the undertaking on appeal.

Ellis v. Hull, 23 Cal. 160.

27. When in a criminal proceeding a justice of the peace exacts, and the defendants give a security in the form of a bond on appeal which the statute does not require, no liability results from its execution.

People v. Cabannes, 20 Cal. 525.

28. A justice of the peace, on conviction of certain parties of the offense of fraudulent and malicious mischief, rendered a judgment imposing a fine, and in default of payment, imprisonment in the county jail. For the purpose of perfecting an appeal, defendants gave a bond reciting a money judgment (of the same amount as the fine) and binding the sureties for its payment, and setting forth substantially the conditions required in an undertaking on appeal to the county court in civil cases: Held, in an action against the sureties on the bond, after affirmation of the justice's judgment, that the instrument was not authorized by the statute, and that no action could be maintained upon it. Id.

29. The sureties of a sheriff are not liable for the penalty imposed upon sheriffs by the political code (sec. 4179) for a neglect to levy upon property. The sureties are liable only for actual damages sustained.

Glascocock v. Ashman, 52 Cal. 493.

30. If the maker of a promissory note, as collateral security for its payment, assigns personal property to the payee, and, as additional security, third persons sign the note as sureties, the liability of the sureties becomes fixed at the time the collateral security is exhausted.

Dussol v. Bruguere, 50 Cal. 456.

31. The doctrine of contribution applies equally between those who are original co-contractors, that is, those who are jointly bound on their own account (not being copartners), as it does between those who are co-sureties, that is, jointly bound to answer for the debt or default of another.

Chipman v. Morrill, 20 Cal. 130.

32. Where several parties, owing distinct portions of the same debt, execute a joint note for the same, each is, as to his own proportion, principal; and as to the proportion of each of the other makers, a co-surety.

Id.

33. Thus, where C., M. and W. purchased property together, C. taking one undivided half, and M. and W. each taking one undivided fourth, and for the purchase money executed their joint note: Held, that C. was, as to his half of the debt, a principal and a co-surety with M. for the fourth due from W.; and with W. for the fourth due from M.

Id.

34. A surety paying a debt, for which several persons are liable in distinct proportions as principals, can not maintain a joint action against the principals for the amount thus paid, but his remedy is by a several action against each upon the implied assumpsit of each to reimburse what was thus paid for him.

Id.

35. C., in the case above stated, having paid the whole of a judgment, recovered upon the note: Held, that it is not a case for contribution between parties who have sustained a common loss upon a common liability, but that M. and W. are each severally liable upon an implied contract to repay C. one fourth of the judgment.

Id.

36. The sureties on an official bond are liable under the statute, notwithstanding it was approved by the wrong officer or board.

People v. Evans, 29 Cal. 429.

37. If after part of the sureties on an official bond sign the same, the penal sum is changed, and as changed it is approved and filed for record, the sureties who sign before the change are not liable.

People v. Kneeland, 31 Cal. 288.

38. If after an official bond has been executed by a part of the sureties the penal sum is changed, and as changed it is executed by other sureties, the sureties signing after the change are not liable in an action brought on the bond as it was before the change.

Id.

39. The sureties, upon the official bond of an officer, are only responsible for the official acts, and not for private debts.

Hill v. Kemble, 9 Cal. 71.

40. The sureties of a party who covenants, in writing, to purchase meat of another party, for a fixed time at a fixed price, and pay him during the time a fixed rent for a slaughter-house, and to pay him liquidated damages for failure to fulfill the contract, are liable with the principal upon all the covenants of the principal contained in the contract. The clause with regard to damages has no reference to the rent of the building, and meat sold and delivered.

Lightner v. Menzell, 35 Cal. 452.

41. It is no defense to an action on a forfeited recognizance, that after it was given the bail was raised, and a new order of arrest issued without notice to the sureties, and that the officers were so negligent in their proceedings that the accused heard of them, and absconded before he could be rearrested.

People v. Eaton, 41 Cal. 657.

42. The sureties, in an undertaking in replevin, are not liable to the defendant for the value of the property, unless he recovers a judgment for the return of the property. A judgment in favor of the defendant which does not award him a return of the property, does not impose any liability on the sureties.

Mitcham v. Stanton, 49 Cal. 302.

43. The sureties on the bond of an administratrix are not responsible for her acts or default in the application of the funds of an estate, after they have, by order of the probate court, been turned over to her as a trustee, to be held and managed by her in trust, in pursuance of the will of the deceased.

Barker v. Stanford, 53 Cal. 451.

44. The liability of a surety on an attachment bond is on his contract. He is not liable as a trespasser, for a seizure of property attached by the sheriff, even if the bond was void.

McDonald v. Fett, 49 Cal. 354.

45. Where the defendants were sureties in a recognizance for the appearance of one H., who was charged with the crime of receiving two mules, alleged to have been stolen, and in a suit on such recognizance against the sureties, the court found that an indictment was found by the grand jury, at a subsequent term to the date of the recognizance, entitled "an indictment against H.

for receiving stolen goods." Hehl, that it does not follow, from this general description of the indictment, that it was for the same crime mentioned in the recognizance.

People v. Hunter, 10 Cal. 502.

46. A judgment entered on the forfeiture of a recognizance is the property of the state, and the legislature may release the same in such form and on such conditions as it thinks proper to prescribe.

People v. Bircham, 12 Cal. 50.

47. An action will not lie on a recognizance given in a criminal case unless the recognizance is made a matter of record in the court where it is returnable.

Mendocino Co. v. Lamar, 30 Cal. 627.

48. The district attorney can bring suit against bail at any time after the adjournment of the term, at which the recognizance was declared forfeited.

People v. Carpenter, 7 Cal. 402.

49. Sureties to a bail bond can not avail themselves, in defense to an action thereon, of an insufficiency of the justification of the undertaking. Id.

50. In suit in the district court, on a bond given in the court of sessions for the appearance there of a party indicted for misdemeanor, the court of sessions having declared the bond forfeited for non-appearance, the sureties can not defend on the ground that the judgment of forfeiture was erroneous. That judgment can not be thus reversed.

People v. Wolf, 16 Cal. 385.

51. If, pending an appeal from a judgment for plaintiff in ejectment, the plaintiff sells or leases a part of the premises recovered, the sureties on an undertaking to stay a writ of restitution pending the appeal are not released from their liability on the same.

De Castro v. Clarke, 29 Cal. 11.

52. Where a contractor agrees with the owner to erect for him a building and furnish the materials and deliver the same discharged of all liens, and by the terms of the contract the owner is to pay seventy-five per cent. of the contract price each month as the work progresses, and the other twenty-five per cent. when the work is completed, and a third person becomes surety for the contractor; if the owner, during the progress of the work, pays the contractor more than the seventy-five per cent. the surety is discharged from his liability.

Bragg v. Shain, 49 Cal. 131.

JUDGMENT AGAINST.

53. Where the surety undertakes that his principal shall pay any judgment to be rendered, etc., the judgment against the principal is conclusive against the surety.

Pico v. Webster, 14 Cal. 202.

54. But, in the case of official bonds, the sureties undertake in general terms that the principal will perform his official duties; and a judgment against the officer in a suit to which they were not parties is not evidence against them. Id.

55. That the sureties had notice of the suit against the principal amounts to nothing, unless it was notice according to the statute, or unless they appear voluntarily as parties to the record. Id.

56. A judgment in an action against the sureties on an official bond, for a defalcation of the principal, should first fix the amount of the defalcation, and then proceed with a separate judgment against each of the sureties for the full amount for which he made himself liable in the bond, and costs, and then close with a proviso, that each judgment shall be satisfied by the collection or payment of amount of the defalcation, and costs.

People v. Rooney, 29 Cal. 642.

57. If a sheriff is indemnified for an act done by virtue of his office, and an action is brought against him to recover damages for the act, and judgment is recovered against him, the sheriff can not afterwards have judgment against the sureties on the indemnifying bond, upon a notice of five days, unless he gave the sureties written notice of the action brought against him.

Dennis v. Packard, 28 Cal. 101.

58. Where a judgment was recovered against a surety upon an undertaking on appeal and the surety settled the judgment by paying a portion thereof, such payment did not operate as an assignment of the judgment against the defendant in the action in which the appeal was taken, so as to authorize the surety to recover the whole amount of such judgment.

McDermott v. Mitchell, 53 Cal. 616.

RELEASE OF.

59. Neglect to sue a contractor for his first breach of contract does not operate so as to release his sureties for subsequent breaches. Sacramento v. Kirk, 7 Cal. 419.

60. Plaintiff was surety on a contract for the payment of money, upon which judgment was obtained against all the parties, and execution was subsequently issued and levied upon property of the principal sufficient to satisfy the same. After the levy, the sheriff, under the directions of the plaintiff in execution, took the principal's note for the amount of the judgment, and released the levy. Subsequently a second execution was issued upon the judgment, and an attempt made to levy it on the property of plaintiff: Hehl, that the release of the levy of the first execution, and the taking of the principal's note, discharged the surety. Morley v. Dickinson, 12 Cal. 561.

61. The contract, until rescinded by the return of the note, was sufficient to postpone any right to enforce the execution, although the note may have been given in fraud. Id.

62. The mere passiveness of a board of supervisors in not bringing a defaulting county assessor to settlement does not discharge him or his sureties.

People v. Jenkins, 17 Cal. 500.

63. If, in an action against the executors of an estate, brought by the legatees to recover a judgment for money found to be in the hands of the executors, and adjudged to be paid to the legatees by the probate court, a judgment is entered by consent of the parties under a stipulation in writing, and made a part of the judgment, payable in installments thereafter, the sureties, not consenting to the arrangement, are released from their liability on the executor's bond.

Fordyce v. Ellis, 20 Cal. 96.

64. If the principals in a bond given to a sheriff to release goods from attachment, tender to the plaintiff in the attachment suit, the full amount of his debt and costs, and the plaintiff refuses to receive the tender, the sureties are discharged from their obligation on the bond; and for the purpose of discharging the sureties, it is not necessary that such tender be paid into court, or kept good. Curia v. Packard, 29 Cal. 194.

65. A release of some of the sureties on a treasurer's official bond by proceedings in insolvency, and a failure of the county judge to summon the treasurer to show cause why he should not execute an additional bond, does not release the remaining sureties from future liability on the bond.

Sacramento Co. v. Bird, 31 Cal. 66.

66. The sureties on the official bond of a county treasurer can be discharged from further obligation on the same, only upon proceedings had before the board or officer which, at the time of the discharge, has power to approve of the official bond of such officer.

People v. Evans, 29 Cal. 429.

67. If the defendant obtains an order for the release of property attached in the action, by delivering to the court or judge an undertaking, executed by sureties, conditioned to pay the plaintiff any judgment he may recover in the action, and the property is thereupon released; whenever the liability of the sureties is fixed by the rendition of a judgment in favor of the plaintiffs, the sureties have a right to tender the plaintiff the full amount of the judgment, and if he refuses to receive the same the sureties are discharged from their obligation on the undertaking.

Hayes v. Josephi, 26 Cal. 535.

68. A. and B. executed a joint promissory note to C.; B. was surety for A. B. brought an action against C. after the maturity of the note, to compel him at once to proceed and collect the amount due on the note from A., the principal, and obtained a decree requiring C. to commence legal proceedings against A. for the collection of the note, upon B.'s tendering to him a sufficient amount to pay reasonable costs and expenses, or be forever debarred from collecting the same from B. B. deposited with the clerk and sheriff a sufficient amount to pay their costs, and tendered to C. the services of an attorney employed by B. C. refused to commence the action, and A. subsequently became insolvent: Held, that this was not a compliance with the conditions of the decree by B., the surety, and that he was not released from his liability on the note.

Dane v. Corduan, 24 Cal. 157.

69. If a written contract for the extension of time within which to complete a building is intended to be signed by the owner, the contractor, and the persons who became sureties for the contractor for the fulfillment of his agreement, and is signed only by the owner, contractor, and one of the sureties, it is not obligatory, and does not release the sureties from liability for damages resulting from the failure of the contractor to fulfill his agreement.

Barber v. Burrows, 51 Cal. 404.

70. In an action against the sureties on an official bond, if the defendants allege in their answer that they signed with the express understanding that the bond should be signed by certain other persons, naming them, without stating that this understanding was with the obligee, it will be presumed that the understanding was with the principal in the bond.

Tidball v. Halley, 48 Cal. 610.

71. If the sureties on an official bond sign with an express understanding with the principal in the bond that certain other persons shall sign as sureties, and that unless such other persons sign, it shall not be delivered, a delivery of the bond to the obligee, without the signature of such other persons, does not render it invalid as to the sureties who do sign. Id.

CONTRIBUTION.

72. A surety who has satisfied the principal obligation is entitled to contribution from his co-sureties.

Taylor v. Reynolds, 53 Cal. 686.

73. The liability of the co-surety to contribution is primary, and not conditional upon the inability of the surety to recover from his principal. Id.

74. Neither notice of the satisfaction of the principal obligation, nor demand for contribution, is required before the commencement of the action for contribution. Id.

75. When an administrator gives two bonds, one when letters are issued, and the other when real estate is about to be sold, and each bond contains the same condition, and the sureties assume a common burden, they are liable to contribution inter se.

Powell v. Powell, 48 Cal. 234.

76. When several are sureties, and all but one pay the whole sum for which all became liable, those who pay may maintain a joint action for contribution against the one who failed to pay his proportion, provided they jointly paid the money.

Dussol v. Bruguere, 50 Cal. 456.

77. If one of several sureties dies, his executor may be joined with a part of the sureties in an action against another for a contribution. Id.

78. If one of two sureties dies, and his executor pays all the money for which both became liable, without having the claim allowed in the probate court, he, as executor, can recover the demand for a contribution from the other surety. Id.

SURVEY.

1. A private survey is no legal evidence of the facts it purports to contain, since, if it were, any man might recover the land of another by including it in his own boundaries.

Rose v. Davis, 11 Cal. 133.

2. When a private survey is admitted as a diagram, but not as evidence, the court should clearly explain to the jury the precise purpose and effect of its admission. Id.

3. The survey, or map of the United States surveyor, of a grant, is inadmissible as evidence to establish boundaries, without proof of the orders or authority under which he acted. Id.

4. If the owner of a tract of land conveys a mile square of the same to one party, with a description in the deed so uncertain that the boundaries can not be determined with precision, and soon after sells to another party the same quantity bounded on the north by the first tract, an agreement fixing the lines of the first tract sold, made after the second sale by the common grantor and the first grantee, is not binding upon the second grantee unless he knew of, and acquiesced in the location of the lines.

Sneed v. Woodward, 30 Cal. 430.

5. If the owner of land conveys a mile square of the same to one party, with such description that the lines can not be located with precision, and soon after sells the same quantity to another person, bounded on the north by the first tract sold, and afterwards makes a survey and location of the lines of the first tract sold, in connection and by agreement with the first purchaser, to which survey and location the second purchaser is not a party, and in which he does not acquiesce, and the common grantor afterwards sells to other persons tracts of land adjoining the two first tracts, and surveys and deeds them in accordance with the first survey and location, these last surveys and the deeds given to the purchasers are not evidence against the purchaser of the second tract sold, or his grantees, to show that the first tract sold was located in accordance with the calls of the deed to such first purchaser. Id.

6. A witness who is not a county surveyor may be admitted to testify to a survey which he has made, although he is not called to rebut or explain a survey made by a county surveyor. Doherty v. Thayer, 31 Cal. 140.

7. An official map of a town plat which, by reference to monuments established, or by some other mode, refers to a survey, is presumed to correctly represent the survey as actually made; but if there is a discrepancy between the map and the survey in the field, the survey must prevail, if the position of the points and lines established by the survey can be proved.

O'Farrell v. Harney, 51 Cal. 125.

8. Adjoining land proprietors are not estopped by a survey made by them of a disputed boundary line, if the survey is made to ascertain where the true line is as fixed by a conveyance, and the surveyor is not an arbiter to establish a line.

Spring v. Hewston, 52 Cal. 442.

9. A survey for the purpose of establishing a boundary line, made between a sole owner of the land on one side, and one of several owners of the land on the other side, does not estop the owners who did not join in it. Id.

10. In ascertaining the initial point of the survey of a tract of land from the field notes, when there is no monument to indicate it, the monuments, courses, and distances of the other points and lines of the survey are better and surer guides than the mere distance of the initial point from the south-east corner of a government township. Alviso v. Valletero, 52 Cal. 500.

11. As determined by the practice of the land department of the United States and of the state, lands are surveyed when the lines are run in the field and monuments or marks established by the proper surveyor. Oakley v. Stuart, 52 Cal. 521.

12. A county surveyor is prohibited, by considerations of public policy, from becoming the purchaser from the state of public lands which his official duties require him to survey.

Hastings v. McGoogin, 27 Cal. 84.

2. Prior possession by an inclosure, and a claim made before the register and receiver, to purchase land, a portion of the so called Suscol rancho, within one year from March 3, 1863, by one who was a bona fide purchaser from Vallejo, entitles him to recover in ejectment as against one who enters after March 3, 1863, and claims the same land under the general pre-emption laws of the United States. IN GENERAL.

1. The words "taxation" and "taxed," in section 13 of article IX of the constitution, relate to such general taxes upon all property as are levied to defray the ordinary expenses of the state, county, town, and municipal governments, and not to assessments levied on the lots fronting on a street in a city to pay the expenses of their improvements.

Emery v. S. F. Gas Co., 28 Cal. 345.

2. A tax is a charge upon persons or property to raise money for public purposes. It is not founded upon contract, and does not establish the relation of debtor and creditor between the tax-payer and state.

Perry v. Washburn, 20 Cal. 318.

3. Taxes are charges, imposed by or under the authority of the legislature, upon persons or property subject to its jurisdiction.

People v. McCreery, 34 Cal. 432.

4. A tax is a personal debt, or in the nature of a personal debt due from the property-holder, and not a mere charge upon the property, created by and depending upon the regularity of the proceedings given by statute.

People v. Seymour, 16 Cal. 332.

5. The powers of taxation and appropriation are limited by the eighth article of the constitution, and can not be extended to debts contracted in violation thereof.

Nougues v. Douglass, 7 Cal. 65.

6. Limitations by congress upon the right of a state to tax its citizens are to be strictly construed.

People v. Shearer, 30 Cal. 645.

7. Taxes are due and payable in the county where the property is first assessed; and if the property, after it has been assessed, be removed into another county, and there assessed, the first assessment is unaffected thereby, and payment of the latter assessment is not a discharge of the former. People v. Holladay, 25 Cal. 300.

8. If the tax upon the franchise has been illegally imposed, or a valid legal objection appears upon the face of the proceedings, the plaintiff has a perfect remedy at law, and a court of equity has no power to interpose.

De Witt v. Hays, 2 Cal. 463.

Robinson v. Gaar, 6 Id. 273.

9. The purchaser of property in San Francisco, at a sale for the taxes of 1858, is not entitled to an injunction restraining the sale of the same property for the unpaid taxes of 1857.

Cowell v. Washburn, 22 Cal. 519.

10. Taxes are not debts, within the meaning of that clause of the act which provides that the notes shall be "a legal tender in payment of all debts, public and private." Congress, by these terms, only intended such obligations for the payment of money as are founded upon contract.

Perry v. Washburn, 20 Cal. 318.

11. The constitution of this state does not prohibit the legislature to tax occupations, nor to authorize municipal corporations to tax them for purposes of revenue.

San Jose v. S. J. & S. C. R. Co., 53 Cal. 475.

12. When power is conferred on a municipal corporation to "license and regulate" occupations, the whole charter and the general legislation of the state pertinent to the subject must be consulted, in order to determine whether the power to "license and regulate" includes the power to tax occupations for revenue purposes. Id.

13. A license fee, or charge for the transaction of any business, is a tax within the meaning of the term "tax" as employed in section 6 of article VI of the constitution, and in section 833 of the code of civil procedure.

Santa Barbara v. Stearns, 51 Cal. 499.

14. The fact that a statute designates as a "tax" that which in its elements is an "assessment" does not make it a "tax." The question whether it is a "tax" or "assessment" must be decided by the nature of the imposition.

Doyle v. Austin, 47 Cal. 353.

LEGISLATIVE POWER.

15. The power of taxation was given to the legislature without limit, for all purposes allowed by the constitution.

Nougues v. Douglass, 7 Cal. 65.

16. The state has the power to require the payment by foreigners of a license fee for the privilege of working the gold mines of the state.

People v. Naglee, 1 Cal. 232.

17. The taxing power is an incident of sovereignty, the exercise of which belongs exclusively to every state, and attaches alike upon everything which comes within its jurisdiction.

People v. Coleman, 4 Cal. 47.

18. The legislature has a right to authorize a local tax for the purpose of internal improvements; it may authorize the local authorities to impose the tax; this authority may be given upon petition or without it, or by, or without, a submission of the proposition to the people, and it is not essential that the improvement should be within, or confined to the locality taxed, and a subscription for stock, to be paid for by taxation, is a valid contract to pay it.

Pattison v. Yuba Co., 13 Cal. 175.

19. The interest of the occupant of a mining claim is property, and, under the constitution, it is in the power of the legislature to tax such property.

State v. Moore, 12 Cal. 56.

20. The constitution provides that all property shall be taxed; but the quo modo is a matter of legislative control, and the statute must be steadily followed.

De Witt v. Hays, 2 Cal. 463.

21. The power of apportionment, with the power of taxation, is exclusively in the legislature. The constitution contains no inhibition to the tax, and prescribes no rule of apportionment.

Burnett v. Sacramento, 12 Cal. 76.

22. The fact that the legislature has once exercised its powers in limiting the extent of taxation in municipal corporations, under the thirty-seventh section of article IV of the constitution, does not prevent the legislature from again exercising its power by enlarging the authority to tax.

Blanding v. Burr, 13 Cal. 343.

23. The only limitation upon the taxing power of the legislature is the provision for equality and uniformity found in the thirteenth section of article IV of the constitution. Id.

24. The legislature can impose a general tax upon all the property of the state, or a local tax upon the property of particular political subdivisions, as counties, cities, and towns. The cases in which its powers shall be exercised, and the extent to which the taxation in a particular instance shall be carried, are matters exclusively within its own judgment, subject to the qualifications of equality and uniformity in the assessment. And, except as especially restricted, its power of appropriation of the moneys raised is co-extensive with its power of taxation. It may appropriate them to claims which have no legal obligation, and are founded only in justice. The power of appropriation which the legislature can exercise over the revenues of the state for any purpose which it may regard as calculated to promote the public good, it can exercise over the revenues of a county, city, or town, for any purpose connected with their present or past condition, except as such revenues may, by the law creating them, be devoted to special purposes. In creating the law imposing the tax, it can prescribe the objects to which the money raised shall be applied. It is only for the convenient administration of the government that the state is divided into counties, cities, and towns. Id.

25. The legislature possesses the entire control and management of the affairs of the state. It can levy such taxes as it may deem expedient, subject only to the constitutional requirements of equality and uniformity, and devote the proceeds of the taxation to such specific objects as it may think proper. But, after having made an appropriation, in view of a contemplated contract to be based thereon, and such contract is made, and funds to meet the appropriation are received into the treasury, it can not deprive the party with whom the contract is entered into of such funds, by repealing the appropriation. In other words, the control of the legislature over particular funds, when received, may be subject to the obligations of a contract made with reference to them. By such contract, the legislature does not derogate from its power, or that of any subsequent legislature. It only acts finally upon a particular subject, which is thus placed beyond the reach of future action. It is true, the legislature may not direct any taxation, may repeal all laws relating to the collection of revenue, and thus prevent the receipt of any funds upon which the appropriation can operate; but this possibility does not affect the right of the parties when such funds are actually received. McCauley v. Brooks, 16 Cal. 11.

26. The only restriction imposed upon legislative discretion in the matter of taxation by our constitution is that it shall be equal and uniform, and in proportion to the property taxed. This is not a restriction of the absolute power to impose taxation, but affects the mode of its exercise only. In every case where the legislative act imposing taxes conforms to and is not in conflict with constitutional restrictions, it is binding and obligatory, and beyond the control of the judicial department of the state government.

Beals v. Amador Co., 35 Cal. 624.

27. The principle upon which taxation is to be imposed by the state government is pointed out by the constitution; but the extent to which it may be carried is left unlimited, except by legislative discretion.

S. & V. R. R. Co. v. Stockton, 41 Cal. 148.

28. The legislature may, in strict conformity with its constitutional powers and duties, recognize a moral obligation as the sole basis for the imposition of taxes.

Beals v. Amador Co., 35 Cal. 624.

29. Where, by a prior statute for the ascertainment of a debt due from one county to another, and to provide for its payment by a tax which was thereby imposed, without allowing or making provision for the payment of interest thereon, under which enactment the debt was fully paid, it is competent for the legislature, by subsequent enactment, to provide for the payment of interest on such debt by the imposition of a further tax for that purpose. Id.

30. Where, in such case, said debt has been assigned to, and was exclusively owned by, a private individual, before said past enactment, the tax thereby imposed was no less, for that reason, for a public benefit. Id.

31. Although the legislature can not by law transfer the duties of the office of tax collector from a person elected as such, to one who was not so elected, yet it may provide for the election of a person as tax collector who may enter upon the discharge of his duties before the expiration of the term of a tax collector elected under the law as it previously existed.

Mills v. Sargent, 36 Cal. 379.

32. The collection of poll taxes or of license taxes, or of any taxes other than taxes upon property, may be transferred from one to another class of officers at the will of the legislature, although those duties may have pertained to one of those officers when the incumbents were elected.

Mitchell v. Crosby, 46 Cal. 97.

33. By the constitution of California, the legislative department of the government is vested with the power of taxation, and the authority to determine the objects for which the taxing power shall be exercised, and to appropriate the moneys thus raised to such objects; and there is no restriction upon this power as to the objects to which, or the time for which appropriations may be made, except that "no appropriations for a standing army shall be for a longer time than two years."

People v. Pacheco, 27 Cal. 175.

34. The legislature can not, by law, fix the assessed value of property.

People v. Hastings, 29 Cal. 449.

35. The power of "taxation" is a power which the legislature takes, from the law of its creation, to impose taxes upon the property of the citizens for the support of the government. Taylor v. Palmer, 31 Cal. 240.

36. The power of taxation is a necessary incident to sovereignty, and under our system of government it pertains to the legislative department. A tax must have its origin in a law enacted for that purpose.

People v. McCreery, 34 Cal. 432.

37. The power of the legislature over the whole subject of taxation, including the property to be charged, the amount of the tax, the mode of levying, assessing and collecting it, etc., is as ample as over any other matter that is a proper subject of legislative action. The provisions of section 13, article XI of the constitution, are limitations, and not grants of power; but as limitations, are, according to their terms, mandatory upon the legislature. Id.

38. Under the provisions of section 13, article XI of the constitution, to wit: "Taxation shall be equal and uniform throughout the state;" and "All property in this state shall be taxed in proportion to its value, to be ascertained as directed by law:" Held, first, that by the words "all property in this state," is meant all private property, or all property other than that belonging to the United States, or this state, or that which is public property; second, that the words "taxation shall be equal and uniform throughout the state," relate to taxation of property, and that the legislature has no power to exempt any private property in this state from taxation; and, third, that the rate of taxation on property, for state purposes, shall be uniform throughout the state. People v. Coleman, 4 Cal. 46; and High v. Shoemaker, 22 Id. 363, so far as in conflict herewith, are overruled. Id.

39. Where the general revenue law subjects all solvent debts to taxation, any other law which singles out a class of such debts and exempts them from taxation is repugnant to the clause of the constitution which provides that taxation shall be equal and uniform throughout the state.

People v. McCreery, 34 Cal. 433.

People v. Gerke, 35 Id. 667.

People v. Black Diamond Co., 37 Id. 54.

People v. Whartenby, 38 Id. 461.

Approved in People v. Eddy, 43 Cal. 331.

40. It was not intended by the framers of the constitution that the legislature should have the power to exempt any kind of property from taxation.

People v. Eddy, 43 Cal. 333.

41. So much of the general revenue act as exempts possessory claims and improvements upon the public lands from taxation is unconstitutional and void.

People v. McCreery, 34 Cal. 433.

People v. Gerke, 37 Id. 677.

Affirmed in People v. Black Diamond Coal M. Co., 37 Cal. 54.

42. A state revenue law is not unconstitutional because there is a want of uniformity between the particular laws prevailing in the several counties, with regard to the enforcement of the payment of delinquent taxes. People v. C. P. R. Co., 43 Cal. 399.

43. A clause in an act imposing a tax, which allows the board of supervisors to remit the tax upon such property as they may deem just, does not render the whole act unconstitutional. People v. Whyler, 41 Cal. 351.

44. Is the statute allowing the assessor to deduct from solvent debts due the taxpayer the amount of his indebtedness constitutional? Quære? Lick v. Austin, 43 Cal. 500.

45. The legislature can not authorize the board of supervisors of a county to remit a tax, or part of a tax, within a specified district. An order of the board attempting to do so is null and void, because in conflict with the provision of the constitution which requires taxation to be equal and uniform, and which requires all property to be taxed.

Wilson v. Sutter, 47 Cal. 91.

46. An act authorizing a board of supervisors of a county to remit the taxes, or a part of the taxes, upon any portion of the property within a district, is unconstitutional, even if the tax is imposed for local purposes to be expended within the district. Id.

REVENUE ACTS.

47. There is nothing in the act of 1856, which simply alters the mode of levying taxes, the result not being changed, which, in substance, conflicts with the act of 1851 in those provisions which offered a security to the creditors for their debts. It is just as clear that the law does not contemplate the imposition of double taxation in any one year for the purpose of raising the money provided for by the act of 1851; and, therefore, the terms of the act of 1856, in this respect, supersede those provisions in the act of 1851 which declare the duty of the assessor to add to the list the several sums of money which are intended to be raised by the act of 1851. People v. Bond, 10 Cal. 563.

48. The omission in the revenue act of 1857, to tax all the lands in the state, did not render the act void for unconstitutionality. High v. Shoemaker, 22 Cal. 363.

49. The oath to be made, under the revenue act of 1857, to the "list" or "statement" of taxable property, need not be in writing. Nor need the tax-payer furnish in writing such "list" or "statement." It is sufficient if he give the assessor the necessary information to make out the "list."

People v. Quinn, 18 Cal. 122.

50. The revenue act of 1857 does not authorize sales for taxes assessed prior to its passage, but only for the fiscal year or years following its passage.

Burr v. Hunt, 18 Cal. 303.

51. The sixth article of the revenue act of 1854, which declares "all goods, wares and merchandise, provisions, or any other property whatsoever, brought or received within this state, from any other state, or from any foreign country, to be sold in this state, owned by any person or persons not domiciled in this state," to be consigned goods within its intent and meaning, and provides that all persons selling such goods shall be subject to a tax for the use of the state, at the rate of fifty cents on each one hundred dollars of the amount of sales made by them, is not repealed by the revenue act of 1857. Crosby v. Patch, 18 Cal. 438.

52. The limitation of the general language of the sixty-fourth section of the revenue act of 1860, shown to have been the sense of the legislature in previous acts.

Ah Hee v. Crippen, 19 Cal. 491.

53. The act of 1859 does not repeal these sections of the revenue act of 1857 by implication, as the rule is usually applied, but upon the principle that when the legislature makes a revision of particular statutes, and frames a general statute upon the subject-matter, and from the framework of the act it is apparent that the legislature designed a complete scheme for this matter, this is a legislative declaration that whatever is embraced in the new law shall prevail, and whatever is excluded is ignored.

State v. Conkling, 19 Cal. 501.

54. The sixty-fourth section of the revenue act of 1860, which declares that no person who is not a citizen of the United States, or who has not previously declared his intention to become such (Californian Indians excepted), shall be allowed "to take gold from the mines of this state, or hold a mining claim therein," without a license as provided in the act, does not refer to mines contained in lands which are the property of individuals, but simply to mines in the public lands of the state or the United States.

Ah Hee v. Crippen, 19 Cal. 491.

55. Under the revenue act of 1861 it is the duty of the tax collector to execute and deliver to a person, paying his taxes in the coin therein designated, a receipt for the same, and the performance of this duty may be enforced by mandamus.

Perry v. Washington, 20 Cal. 318.

56. The act entitled "an act to provide revenue for the support of the government of this state, from a tax upon foreign and inland bills, passengers, insurance companies, and other matters," passed May 14, 1862, has no reference to the execution of the inspection laws of this state, and is not in the nature of a police regulation, but is a measure designed for revenue purposes only.

People v. Raymond, 34 Cal. 402.

57. The word "debts," as used in the revenue laws of this state, includes not only debts due and payable on or before the first Monday of December of the year for which an assessment is made, but debts to become due and payable at any time thereafter.

People v. Arguello, 37 Cal. 524.

58. The general revenue system provided in the political code, which went into effect in 1872, applies to the city and county of San Francisco.

S. & L. Soc. v. Austin, 46 Cal. 415.

59. By section 3891 of the political code it is made the duty of the auditor to deliver the poll tax blanks to the assessor.

Mitchell v. Crosby, 46 Cal. 97.

60. Where, by a statute, it was required that a certain sum should be annually divided by the board of supervisors among the collectors of taxes of a county, for their salaries, and the only rule of division prescribed was that "the due proportion" of each collector should be paid to him: Held, that by "the due proportion" was intended such portion of the sum as the board of supervisors should determine, in view of the services required of each collector.

Faughnan v. Tuolumne Co., 35 Cal. 133.

Oakland v. Whipple, 44 Cal. 303.

62. It was the intention of the legislature in adopting the codes to establish one rev-venue system, which should be applicable alike to all the counties.

Mitchell v. Crosby, 46 Cal. 97.

63. When the code mentions assessors, it means district assessors as well as county assessors, so long as the present district assessors remain in office. Id.

LEGALIZING ACTS.

People v. Goldtree, 44 Cal. 323.

65. The legislature has the power of taxation without restriction as to mode or limitation as to time; and if, from accident or oversight, or remissness on the part of the tax-payer, the time for payment has passed, or the mere mode of charging him has not been followed by the officers, the legislature may still compel him to pay.

People v. Seymour, 16 Cal. 332.

65a. The legislature may prescribe a mode of correcting an informal assessment. Id.

66. The act of May 17, 1861, was only designed to legalize assessments in some respects formally defective, though substantially good, and was not intended to make good an assessment which was totally invalid for not stating either the kind or quantity of property assessed, or not describing it, when real estate.

People v. Holladay, 25 Cal. 300.

67. The legislature possesses full power to legalize defective and invalid assessments of delinquent taxes, and to provide for their collection. Id.

68. When an assessment is so defective as to be totally void, the legislature can not cure it by legislative enactment having a retrospective operation, so as to create an obligation where none existed before. Id.

69. The first section of the act of May 17, 1861, entitled "an act to legalize and provide for the collection of delinquent taxes in the counties of this state," legalizes every assessment for taxes made the three years preceding March 1, 1861, however defectively and imperfectly it may have been made in any respect. Id.

70. The act of April 4, 1864, legalizing the assessments of property made in 1862 and 1863, does not cure the defect of a want of valuation by the assessor of property assessed during those years.

People v. S. F. S. U., 31 Cal. 132.

71. The act of 1866, passed for the purpose of legalizing defective assessments, did not legalize complaints, in actions then pending, which were defective by reason of not describing the land assessed.

People v. Mariposa Co., 31 Cal. 196.

72. Courts have no power to go behind assessments legalized and confirmed by an act of the legislature, to inquire into alleged errors and irregularities in the assessment.

People v. Todd, 23 Cal. 181.

73. The act of March 19, 1878, "to legalize the assessment of taxes in San Francisco," etc., is not unconstitutional.

San Francisco v. S. V. W. W., 54 Cal. 571.

People v. McCreery, 34 Cal. 432.

LEVY OF TAXES.

75. The legislature has power to levy a tax upon all the property in the state, either before or after the value of the property is ascertained. People v. Latham, 52 Cal. 598.

De Fremery v. Austin, 53 Cal. 380.

77. The assessment of taxes is not a judicial act; it partakes of no element of a judicial character. It is a legislative act; it requires the exercise of legislative power, which, for certain governmental purposes in the county, may be devolved upon a board of supervisors, but can not be delegated to any branch of the judicial department.

Hardenburgh v. Kidd, 10 Cal. 402.

78. If a tax is illegal and void, a sale under it is a nullity, and a deed of property sold for such a tax conveys no title.

Low v. Lewis, 46 Cal. 549.

79. An act amendatory of the consolidation act, passed in 1866 (stats. 1865-6, p. 436), provides that "on or before the first Monday of May, annually, the board of supervisors of said city and county shall levy the amount of taxes for state, city, and county purposes, required by law to be levied upon all property not exempt from taxation." The order levying said taxes for said year, under which said assessment of defendant's property was made, was passed by said board on the first Monday of May, and only received the approval of the mayor on the following day. Under the consolidation act said approval was necessary to give force to said order. The said revenue acts require the annual levy of taxes to be made on or before said first Monday of May: Held, first, that said order was invalid, and said taxes were not legal so far as they depended on the action of said board; second, that said state taxes for their levy did not depend on the action of said board, but rested upon the several statutes providing for their levy, but that the levy of said city and county taxes did depend on said order, and were illegal.

People v. McCreery, 34 Cal. 432.

80. Prior to February, 1866, by divers general and special legislative acts, the board of supervisors of Tehama county were authorized and required to levy upon the taxable property of the county, in addition to the state tax, divers rates of taxes "for county expenditures," "for interest fund," "wagon road fund," "contingent fund," "school fund," and "for road fund." On the twenty-sixth of February, 1866, the legislature passed a special act, which did not in terms repeal any former act, but directed said board "to levy at the same time that other state and county taxes are levied, eighty cents upon each one hundred dollars' worth of the taxable property of said county, which tax * * * shall constitute the entire tax in said county for county purposes." Held, that, except said act providing for the levy of a tax "for county purposes," which was by implication repealed, said former legislative acts were unaffected by the passage of said special act of February 26, 1866.

People v. Gerke, 37 Cal. 223.

81. The "interest tax fund" mentioned in the act of March 18, 1868, "to provide for the government of the county of San Diego," was intended to take the place of the "interest tax," required to be levied by the act of May 4, 1855, "to fund the debt of said county and provide for the payment of the same," and was also intended to pay the interest on the old bonds of the county in case the holders should not choose to accept the terms of payment offered by the said act of 1868.

People v. Morse, 43 Cal. 534.

82. A charge imposed by law upon the assessed value of all property, real and personal, in a district, is a tax, and not an assessment, although the purpose be to make a local improvement on a road.

Williams v. Corcoran, 46 Cal. 553.

LIEN.

83. The levy of a tax created a judgment and lien on the property, having the force and effect of an execution, and could be enforced in the same manner.

Yuba v. Adams Co., 7 Cal. 35.

84. Under the revenue law of 1854, the lien of the state for state and county taxes attached on the first day of March of each year, and continued until the tax was paid. Neither a failure by the officer to include a delinquent tax of one year with the tax of the subsequent year, nor a sale of the property for taxes of the succeeding year, divested the lien for the prior tax.

Cowell v. Washburn, 22 Cal. 519.

85. The lien of a tax extends back to the assessment, and the assessment creates a lien which is not extinguished until the tax is paid. Reeve v. Kennedy, 43 Cal. 643.

86. The assessment of taxes and the lien which it creates, are matters of public record, of which all persons are bound to take notice, and the purchaser of land is bound at his peril to see that taxes have been paid.

Id.

87. In the fiscal year 1868-9, no liability for assessment and taxation could accrue upon a bond and mortgage which was not in existence on the first Monday in March preceding, that being the time fixed by the statute when the lien for taxes attached.

People v. Kohl, 40 Cal. 127.

TAXABLE PROPERTY.

Real Property.

88. The fact that the title of land is in dispute between the claimants and the United States, and that the claimants under a Mexican grant are not in possession, affords no ground for exempting the land from taxation. Robinson v. Gaar, 6 Cal. 273.

89. Where a claim to a tract of land, under a Mexican grant, somewhere within a certain larger tract, was ascertained, and the land segregated by a survey, under a decree of confirmation by the United States supreme court: Held, that the land became immediately taxable, and that an assessment thereof will be presumed to have been made after the survey, where the time allowed by law for the assessment extended to a day four days after the survey.

Palmer v. Boling, 8 Cal. 334.

90. The term "property in lands" is not confined to title in fee, but is sufficiently comprehensive to include any usufructuary interest, whether it be a leasehold or a mere right of possession. Several persons may have, in the same land, a property which is subject to taxation; and it is not perceived that the fact that the property of the government is exempt from taxation affects the right to tax the interest which private individuals have acquired in the same property. Exemption from taxation is a privilege of the government, not an incident to the property.

State v. Moore, 12 Cal. 56.

91. When land of the United States has been paid for, and a certificate of purchase has been given to the purchaser, it is liable to taxation, although the patent may not have issued. People v. Shearer, 30 Cal. 645.

92. The possession by the citizen of, and his possessory interest in, the public lands for mining, agricultural or other purposes, constitutes a species of property recognized by law, and is subject to taxation by the state. Id.

93. Improvements on the public lands of the United States, whether owned by a pre-emptioner or one occupying public lands without license, are liable to assessment and taxation if made so by the revenue laws of a state. People v. Shearer, 30 Cal. 645.

94. Under the revenue act of 1861 a person's "claim to and possession of" lands, or his "claim to" or his "possession of" such lands, may be assessed for taxation. People v. Frisbie, 31 Cal. 146.

95. The "claim to and possession of" land is property liable to taxation, even if the land belongs to the United States. People v. Cohen, 31 Cal. 210.

96. A tax on a "claim to and possession of" land is not a tax on the land itself. Id.

97. A "claim to" and "possession of" land is "property" liable to taxation within the meaning of the thirteenth section of the eleventh article of the constitution. People v. Frisbie, 31 Cal. 146.

98. A grant of three square leagues of land made by the Mexican government, to be selected within exterior boundaries containing a much larger tract, after two prior grants have been located within the same boundaries, is real estate liable to taxation, although not yet surveyed, provided there is land enough within the exterior boundaries to satisfy the grant or any part thereof. People v. Crockett, 33 Cal. 150.

99. The term "claim to . . . any land," as used in section 5 of the revenue act of 1861, means not only an assertion of title to, but an actual possession of, the land claimed. Id.

100. Possession, with a claim of ownership, is a subject of taxation, and imposes on the occupant the duty of paying the tax levied on the property. Reiley v. Lancaster, 39 Cal. 354.

101. A possession of and claim to public land of the United States is property, and as such is taxable to the claimant, without violating the act of congress by which this state was admitted into the union. People v. Black Diamond Co., 37 Cal. 54.

102. If a party be in possession, "having the possession, charge, or custody thereof," claiming the land, he has an interest subject to taxation as real estate. Barrett v. Amerein, 36 Cal. 327.

103. The provisions of the constitution and revenue laws, upon the subject of taxing property, are to be understood as referring to private property and persons only, and not as including public property and the state, or any subordinate part of the state government, such as counties, towns, and municipal corporations.

People v. Doe G., 36 Cal. 220.

104. The state has in no manner provided for taxing itself or its own property, nor has the state authorized suits to be instituted by itself against itself or its property for the collection of any tax. Id.

105. A tax suit in rem was brought in the name of the people against a tract of land situated in the city of Sacramento. In due course a judgment as demanded was rendered therein, and the property sold, and the proceeds of sale applied to the satisfaction of the judgment. M., who, as purchaser, had in due course received a sheriff's deed, applied for a writ of assistance to be let into possession, when, it being shown at the hearing that a part of said tract was, at the time the tax was levied and said suit was commenced, the property of said city, and constituted a part of the city cemetery, the application, as to such part, was denied: Held, that said application was properly denied, and that said suit, so far as it related to said city and its said property, was coram non judice. Id.

106. The property of the United States, or of this state, or of a municipal corporation, is not subject to taxation for revenue purposes. Doyle v. Austin, 47 Cal. 353.

107. The state of California has authority to impose taxation for state purposes upon that portion of the Central Pacific railroad, and the telegraph line in connection therewith, lying within its limits. People v. C. P. R. Co., 43 Cal. 399.

108. A railroad corporation, organized under the laws of a state, can not claim an exemption of its property, lying within the limits of a state, from state taxation, because the corporation thus created has been subsequently adopted by the federal government, and is employed in the service of the general government, in the carriage of mail, munitions of war, etc. Id.

109. Growing crops are private property, and subject to taxation, the provision of said statute exempting them notwithstanding. People v. Gerke, 35 Cal. 677.

110. The property of a municipal corporation is not liable to taxation for municipal purposes. Low v. Lewis, 46 Cal. 549.

110a. A municipal corporation can not tax its own property. Id.

111. If a city, being the owner of water, and the reservoirs and pipes connected therewith for supplying its inhabitants with pure water, for a consideration paid by a party, concedes to him the use and possession of the water and works for a term of years, with the right to sell the water, and enjoy for his own use the rents and profits, with also the right to lay additional pipes, the city, at the expiration of the term, to pay the party the value of improvements made by him, such party has an interest in the water works which is the subject of taxation.

Los Angeles v. L. A. W. Co., 49 Cal. 638.

112. A party in possession of a lot to which another has acquired the title by a deed for a sale for taxes is under no obligation to pay a tax levied after the tax deed is given. Maina v. Elliott, 51 Cal. 8.

113. When the act of congress making a grant of public land to a railroad company to aid in its construction provides that the president shall appoint commissioners, who shall report when a section of the road is completed, and that the company shall pay the costs and charges of the commissioners, and that patents for the land shall not issue until such commissioners have reported favorably on a section and their costs and charges have been paid, the land is not subject to state taxation until such commissioners have been appointed and have reported, and their costs and charges have been paid by the company. C. P. R. Co. v. Howard, 51 Cal. 227.

114. Such lands are not subject to state taxation until the company has complied with the conditions on which they were granted, and is entitled to a patent therefor. Id.

115. Under the provisions of the act of congress admitting California into the union, no parcel of the public lands can be taxed by the state, until a patent for it has been issued to a private person, or until such private person has become vested with a perfect equity, leaving only the dry legal title in the United States. Id.

116. If a grant by congress to a railroad company of public land to aid in its construction contains conditions, by which the grant is liable to be defeated, the land can not be taxed while the conditions are in force and are not fulfilled. Id.

Personal Property.

117. Under the second section of the revenue act of 1857, taxing all property within the state, except certain descriptions of property, among which are mining claims, a flume, constructed by a mining company along the bank of a river leading to the claims of the company in the bed of the river is not exempt. Hart v. Plum, 14 Cal. 148.

118. The fact that such flume is an auxiliary to the working of the claim does not exempt it. It is not so affixed to the claim as to be a part of it. Id.

119. The case of the People v. Moore, 12 Cal. 56, simply holds that the value of a mining claim itself can not be taxed; but this does not exempt everything near the claim necessary to give it value. Id.

120. Under the seventy-fourth and seventy-fifth sections of the revenue act of 1861, pp. 442, 443, Wells, Fargo & Co., as common carriers of gold dust, are compelled to pay the license tax fixed by those sections on each of their branch establishments in the different counties of the state, as well as upon the principal house in San Francisco. People v. Wells, 19 Cal. 293.

121. Bonds of the state of California are personal property within the meaning of the term "personal property" as used in the revenue act, and are subject to taxation. People v. Home Ins. Co., 29 Cal. 533.

122. The bonds of this state owned by a foreign insurance company doing business in this state, and deposited with a banker, in pursuance of the act "to tax and regulate foreign insurance companies doing business in this state," and under the control of an agent of the company, are subject to taxation in this state. Id.

123. The bonds of this state which are owned by a foreign insurance company, but kept in this state, in accordance with the act of the legislature, requiring such companies to deposit bonds here as security for their liabilities, are a portion of the capital of the company, and are property in this state within the meaning of the revenue act. Id.

124. The percentage on premiums which foreign insurance companies doing business in this state pay to the state under the act to regulate foreign insurance companies doing business in this state, is not a substitute for taxation. Id.

125. Money belonging to litigants, but placed in the hands of a county treasurer by order of the court, subject to the order of the court, is liable to taxation, and may be assessed to the treasurer by name, and when the assessment is levied it becomes a lien on the money in the treasurer's hands. People v. Lardner, 30 Cal. 242.

126. An assessment upon "the capital" of a corporation, eo nomine, held to be valid. San Francisco v. S. V., 54 Cal. 571.

TAXATION OF CREDITS AND DOUBLE TAXATION.

127. A. & Co., having on general deposit with B. & Co., of Marysville, seventy-five thousand dollars, a tax for county purposes was levied thereon, and payment demanded, both of B. & Co. and A. & Co.: Held, that the tax was legal. Yuba Co. v. Adams, 7 Cal. 33.

128. A mortgage, as such, is not liable to be assessed for taxes, but the assessment should be made of the debt which the mortgage was given to secure, and the debt, where the creditor resides in the state, has no situs for the purpose of taxation apart from the residence of the owner.

People v. Eastman, 25 Cal. 601.

129. The lender of money is not subject to double taxation by reason of the statutory provision requiring payment of taxes on money loaned by him and on solvent debts due him over his own indebtedness; whether said statutory provision results in imposing double taxation upon the borrower of money, when security by way of mortgage or otherwise is given, does not arise in this court.

People v. McCreery, 34 Cal. 432.

130. The owner of land who had been assessed with the same, and had paid the taxes thereon, and who, during the same year, had sold the land and taken a note and mortgage, payable at a future day, for the purchase money thereof, was not liable to reassessment with the amount of such mortgage for the same fiscal year.

People v. Kohl, 40 Cal. 127.

131. Choses in action are property subject to taxation, even when secured by mortgage.

Lick v. Austin, 43 Cal. 590.

132. The levying a tax upon money at interest, as well as upon the property mortgaged to secure it, does not present a case of double taxation as against the mortgagee.

People v. Whartenby, 38 Cal. 461.

133. The state is not bound by the stipulation between the mortgagor and the mortgagee that the former shall pay all the taxes levied on the mortgaged debt.

Id.

134. By the provisions of the revenue act it is the "money at interest" which is subject to be taxed, and not the mortgage, as such. Money at interest is to be taxed in the county in which the creditor resides.

Id.

135. When money is deposited in a savings bank to be loaned out for the benefit of the depositor, if it is taxed to the depositor, and the bank has loaned the money and is taxed upon the note and mortgage, it is double taxation.

S. & L. Soc. v. Austin, 46 Cal. 415.

136. The courts have no authority to declare that solvent debts are not taxable, because to tax them might amount to double taxation. The mode and manner of assessing solvent debts is a matter of legislative discretion.

Id.

137. If a debt for money lent, which is secured by mortgage, is taxed, and the mortgaged property is also taxed, it is double taxation, and a violation of the constitution.

Id.

138. In a case of double taxation, to entitle a party to relief in the courts, it must appear that the tax has once been paid or tendered.

Id.

139. Because the same subject-matter has been twice taxed, it by no means follows that both taxes are void, and that it must escape taxation.

Id.

140. It was the purpose of the first session of the acts of April 1 and April 4, 1870 (stats. 1869-70, pp. 584, 710), to exempt from taxation solvent debts secured by mortgage upon real estate, and not merely to regulate the duties of assessors.

People v. Eddy, 43 Cal. 331.

141. It is within the power, and is the duty of the legislature to prescribe the mode in which all property shall be assessed; but the legislature can not, under the pretense of regulating the duties of assessors, exempt property from taxation which the constitution requires to be taxed.

Id.

142. If land subject to a mortgage is taxed, and the debt secured by the mortgage is also taxed, and the tax on the debt is paid by the mortgagee, the mortgagor can not complain of double taxation.

Lick v. Austin, 43 Cal. 590.

143. Order No. 800 of the board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco, prescribing the payment of taxes and assessments as a condition upon which persons in possession of outside lands in said city should be entitled to the benefit of the act of congress of March 8, 1866, did not contemplate the payment of taxes and assessments twice on the same land.

Randall v. Austin, 46 Cal. 54.

144. It was the intention of said order, that such taxes and assessments should be paid by the person, or his predecessor in interest, who was in possession March 8, 1866, or had been wrongfully deprived of the possession, and was entitled to recover it. The act of March 14, 1870, prescribing the method of proceeding for the possessors to obtain from said city a conveyance of said land entitled to record, which requires contesting claimants each of them to pay to the tax collector the taxes and assessments on the land, was intended to enforce a mere deposit of the taxes and assessments, and the unsuccessful party to the litigation has a right to withdraw his deposit.

Id.

145. Solvent debts are "property" within the meaning of that word as used in the constitution, and are liable to taxation.

Id.

146. Solvent debts are liable to taxation.

People v. Ashbury, 46 Cal. 523.

147. The revenue act does not make a corporation liable for taxes assessed on its capital stock, when such capital is represented by shares of stock which are not the property of the corporation.

People v. National G. B., 51 Cal. 508.

148. Credits are not property in the sense in which the word property is used in section 13 of article XI of the constitution, and can not be assessed for taxes, or taxed as property, even if secured by mortgage.

People v. Hibernia Bank, 51 Cal. 243.

149. Solvent debts, promissory notes and mortgages are not liable to taxation. Bank of Mendocino v. Chalfant, 51 Cal. 369.

150. Neither promissory notes, solvent debts, nor mortgages are subjects of taxation; and if assessed along with other property and the tax collector can separate the legal from the illegal portion of the tax, and the legal portion is tendered him and he refuses to receive it, and the whole tax is then paid under protest and to prevent a sale of the property, the illegal portion may be recovered back. Id.

Where Taxable.

151. A steamboat, whose owners reside in New York and by whom it was sent to San Francisco and used in navigation within the state, is liable to assessment and taxation. Minturn v. Hays, 2 Cal. 590.

152. That the same property is taxed in New York is no ground why it should not be taxed in California, when it is within the limits of the latter state. Id.

153. The language used in the eighth section of the act of 1851, "that every person shall be listed in the county where he resides," does not exempt the property of non-residents of the state from taxation. Id.

154. Under the revenue law of 1800, choses in action and property of an intangible character, such as debts and the like, are properly assessable in the county where the owner resides at the time of the assessment. People v. Park, 23 Cal. 138.

155. A judgment for a debt for foreclosing a mortgage given to secure it, is only subject to taxation in the county where the owner of the judgment resides, and then the money due on the judgment alone is taxable. People v. Eastman, 25 Cal. 601.

156. Personal property is to be assessed and taxed in the county in which it is situated, except money and gold dust, which may, at the option of the owner, be taxed in the county in which he resides.

People v. Niles, 35 Cal. 282.

157. To authorize the taxing of personal property in any other county than that in which the owner resides, it must appear that such property is kept or maintained in such county, and is not there casually or in transitu, or temporarily, in the ordinary course of business or commerce. Id.

158. Personal property, transiently within a county, can not be there taxed, but should be taxed in the county in which the owner resides.

Oakland v. Whipple, 39 Cal. 112.

159. A vessel sailing from the port in which the owner resides is not liable to taxation in another county because it is temporarily in such other county for the purpose of being freighted.

People v. Niles, 35 Cal. 282.

PROPERTY EXEMPT.

160. Money invested in the purchase and opening of mining claims is not within the provisions of that portion of the revenue act which provides for the levy of a tax on "all capital loaned, invested, or employed in any trade, commerce, or business whatsoever."

State v. Moore, 12 Cal. 56.

161. Lands, within this state, belonging to the United States, are, both by the provisions of the state revenue law and by the terms of the act of congress admitting California into the union, exempt from state taxation. People v. Morrison, 22 Cal. 73.

162. In order to hold improvements upon public lands liable for a state tax, the assessment must be upon the improvements eo nomine, and not upon the land itself. Id.

163. The bonds of the United States, issued in pursuance of the acts of congress, are not subject to taxation.

People v. Home Ins. Co., 29 Cal. 533.

164. The public domain of the United States is exempt from taxation. What is meant by the term "public domain," as here used, discussed.

People v. Shearer, 30 Cal. 645.

165. Land, as such, in the occupancy of a pre-emptor, whose right to purchase as such pre-emptor has been determined in his favor, is not subject to taxation until the pre-emptor has paid for the same. Id.

166. The property of all asylums and charitable institutions which are supported in whole or in part by the state, is exempt from taxation.

S. F. L. P. & R. S. v. Story, 32 Cal. 63.

167. The legislature has omitted to provide for any tax on this species of property; the naked right to collect wharfage can not be assessed eo nomine or made liable.

De Witt v. Hayes, 2 Cal. 463.

168. The constitutional provision, "that taxation shall be equal and uniform throughout the state," is not violated by a revenue act exempting from taxation church and school lands, and lands of the United States.

High v. Shoemaker, 22 Cal. 363.

169. The provisions of the second section of the general revenue act of 1857, as amended in 1859 (stats. 1859, p. 343), and the act fixing the rate of taxation for state purposes, passed April 2, 1866 (stats. 1865-6,

p. 786), so far as they provide for the exemption of any private property within this state from taxation, are unconstitutional and void. Said acts are to be read and construed as if such void provisions had never been incorporated in them.

People v. McCreery, 34 Cal. 432.

170. Notwithstanding said provisions exempting private property from taxation are void, yet the residue of said acts are complete in themselves, and furnish a valid and plain rule of action, which must be enforced as the authentic expression of the legislative will.

Id.

171. An act taxing the property of a district for a local improvement, which exempts personal property from its operation, is unconstitutional, because not levied on all the property in the district.

People v. Whyler, 41 Cal. 351.

172. The principle upon which the business of a corporation, created by the federal government as an agent in the execution of its powers, is exempt from state taxation, does not apply to the real property of the corporation lying within the limits of a state.

People v. C. P. R. Co., 43 Cal. 399.

173. If such contract provides that the party of the second part shall bear all expenses on account of the water works, except state, city, and county taxes, it does not exempt the property from taxation on behalf of the city.

Los Angeles v. L. A. W. Co., 49 Cal. 638.

174. The legislature has no power to exempt any property from taxation. The crediting of taxes heretofore paid upon property under an invalid levy does not amount to an exemption from taxation of the property upon which said taxes were paid.

People v. Latham, 52 Cal. 598.

ASSESSMENT.

175. A tax, in order to be valid, must rest upon an assessment made in the mode prescribed by law, by an assessor elected by the qualified electors of the district, county, or town in which the property is taxed for state, county, or town purposes.

People v. Hastings, 29 Cal. 449.

176. A tax, to be valid, must rest upon an assessment made by an assessor elected by the qualified voters of the district, county, or town in which the property is taxed for state, county, or town purposes.

Reily v. Lancaster, 39 Cal. 354.

177. An assessment made by an assessor elected by the qualified electors of the city and county of Sacramento is not a sufficient basis for the levy of a tax in the city of Sacramento for city purposes.

Id.

178. The listing and valuation of real estate, for the purpose of taxation, is an essential prerequisite to the validity of all subsequent proceedings. The assessment must be made by the assessor.

Ferris v. Coover, 10 Cal. 589.

179. If no valuation was placed by the assessor upon the property, none can be placed upon it by the board of equalization. The board may alter the valuation, in order to equalize it, but can not place the valuation in the first instance.

Id.

180. When the assessor has completed his assessment roll, and delivered it to the clerk of the board of supervisors, his functions cease.

People v. S. F. S. U., 31 Cal. 132.

181. If the assessor in his assessment roll does not fix the valuation of property by marks in the column of valuation, showing whether the figures indicate dollars, cents, or eagles, the auditor, when he carries out the tax in the duplicate, can not supply the defect.

Id.

182. A valuation by the assessor is essential to the validity of a property tax, and neither the legislature nor the auditor can make the valuation if the assessment is defective in this particular.

Id.

183. An assessment for taxes must be made against the owner, when known. The individual, not the property, pays the tax. The property shows the amount of the tax with which to charge the owner, and is security for payment.

Kelsey v. Abbott, 13 Cal. 609.

184. The assessment must be as certain, as to the person taxed, as it is to the amount of the tax, and to the property.

Id.

185. The making of a certified copy by an assessor of an assessment roll made by another assessor a previous year, is not an assessment of property.

People v. Hastings, 29 Cal. 449.

186. The object of the eighth article of the act of 1854, p. 102, if in force, is to procure a true statement of taxable property. But these provisions are directory. If the value of the property be rightly fixed by the assessor, the assessment is valid, though that value was arrived at in a way different from that pointed out by the statute.

Hart v. Plum, 14 Cal. 148.

187. If an assessor can not find the persons to be taxed he may, nevertheless, assess their property.

Id.

188. The provision that the assessment must be made on or before the first Monday of May is directory. And, generally, when a time is fixed by statute within which a public officer is to perform an official act regarding the rights and duties of others, it will be considered directory, unless the nature of the act to be performed, or the language of the legislature shows that designation of the time was intended as a limitation of the power of the officer.

Id.

189. In this case the assessment could be made after May, by virtue of the second proviso in the eleventh section of the act. Id.

190. The flume, though not delivered to the company by plaintiff, the contractor, until after the assessment, was the property of the company at the time of the assessment, taxable to it, and not to the contractor. Id.

191. All personal property within a county on the first Monday of March is assessable in that county if not removed from that county before the assessment is actually made, and if assessed in that county before it is removed from it, the tax is payable in that county; but if removed from that county to another before actually assessed, the assessor of that county may make the assessment and transmit the same to the assessor of the county to which the property is removed. People v. Holladay, 25 Cal. 300.

192. The revenue act of 1861 does not authorize the board of equalization of a county to add to the assessment roll other property than that assessed by the assessor. The board may require the assessor to enter on the assessment roll other property which has not been assessed; but when entered by the assessor he and not the board must give it a proper valuation.

People v. Reynolds, 28 Cal. 107.

193. It is the duty of assessors under said act to assess all property in their respective districts, counties, etc., subject to taxation, which comprehends all property except that which may be denominated, generally, public property.

People v. McCreery, 34 Cal. 432.

194. The omission of an assessor to assess certain parcels of property subject thereto, whether arising from a misapprehension of the law, as by giving effect to void provisions of a statute, or a mistake of fact, will not invalidate his general assessment list. Id.

195. The legislature is not prohibited by the constitution from creating more than one revenue district in a county, and providing for the election of assessors and collectors of revenue in each district.

People v. C. P. R. Co., 43 Cal. 399.

196. An illegal assessment of real property imposes no obligation on the owner to pay the tax for which it was levied, nor does it create a lien thereon on the property assessed.

People v. Pearis, 37 Cal. 259.

197. An act of the legislature authorized a tax for road purposes upon property along a road in a portion of Santa Clara county, and provided that it might be assessed by the county assessor, and it was so assessed: Held, that the assessment was void, because not made by an assessor elected by the electors of the district.

Williams v. Corcoran, 46 Cal. 553.

198. If an assessment or "debts" be too high, it is not therefore void, upon the ground that if legal taxes are blended in the same assessment with illegal, the whole is invalid; but it is merely an overvaluation, which the board of equalization will correct upon proper application.

People v. Arguello, 37 Cal. 524.

199. In order to impart any validity to the acts of an assessor, the provisions of the statute must be strictly followed, and all its conditions fully complied with by him.

Moss v. Shear, 25 Cal. 38.

200. The assessor is required to transmit to the assessor of the proper county, where the property is situated, lists of property, both real and personal, owned in such county, and the assessor receiving such lists is required to assess the property therein contained, unless he has already done so.

People v. Niles, 35 Cal. 286.

201. The acts of the officer making the assessment for taxes must be presumed to be in conformity with law, until the contrary is shown.

Palmer v. Boling, 8 Cal. 384.

202. An assessment of property for a tax to a name which is neither the true name of the owner, nor one by which he has been known, is void.

People v. Whipple, 47 Cal. 591.

203. Where property owned by S. B. Whipple, who had always been known by that name and no other, was assessed to B. M. Whipple: Held, that the assessment was void because there was no designation of the property-owner. Id.

204. Such statement of property furnished to an assessor is binding on the corporation, and justifies the assessor in adopting it as a correct statement of the property belonging to the company.

People v. S. & C. R. Co., 49 Cal. 414.

205. An assessor is not required to keep a book containing the original list and assessment of each man's property, and if he does keep such book, entries in it are not a record of his official action, and may be changed by him. Id.

206. The provision requiring that "all property in this state shall be taxed in proportion to its value, to be ascertained as directed by law," does not require the value to be found after the rate of taxation is fixed.

People v. Latham, 52 Cal. 598.

207. Under sections 3628, 3635, 3636, and 3650, political code, it is the duty of the assessor to ascertain the name of the owner of each piece or parcel of property, and to assess it to him; or, failing to ascertain the name of the owner, to assess it to "unknown owners." An assessment to "D. B. M. and all owners and claimants, known or unknown" is void.

Grotefend v. Ultz, 53 Cal. 606.

208. The assessment for the fiscal year 1872-3 was void.

Grimm v. O'Connell, 54 Cal. 522.

209. An assessment to "C. G., and all owners or claimants, known or unknown," is void. Id.

Of Land.

210. An assessment of land to "A. B., and all claimants, known and unknown," is valid and effectual as against the property, even if A. B. was neither the owner of, nor in the possession of the property at the time of the assessment.

O'Grady v. Barnhisel, 23 Cal. 287.

211. Under the revenue act of 1854, if lands were assessed to unknown owners, the assessor must have stated in his list that the land was so assessed, because it was unoccupied and the owner was unknown, or the assessment created no charge upon the land, and no legal obligation was imposed on any one to pay the taxes.

Moss v. Shea, 25 Cal. 38.

212. If the assessor, in assessing a city lot owned and occupied by the owner as a single lot, arbitrarily divides the same, and assesses one part to the owner and another part to unknown owners, the assessment to the unknown owners is illegal, and a tax deed under a sale of the same for non-payment of the tax is void.

Bidleman v. Brooks, 28 Cal. 72.

213. Under the revenue law of 1860, lands owned by several persons as tenants in common may be assessed to them jointly.

People v. McEwen, 23 Cal. 54.

214. An assessment of land for taxes to "Murphy and Dooley, and to all owners and claimants known or unknown, and to all owners and claimants of any interest, present or future, therein, or any lien upon the same," is good under the revenue act of 1854, as amended by the acts of 1857 and 1859.

Brunn v. Murphy, 29 Cal. 328.

215. The San Pablo rancho was assessed as an entirety to a large number of owners; some of the owners individually paid taxes upon thirteen thousand five hundred and ninety-eight acres, leaving four thousand three hundred and thirty-eight acres, owned by numerous persons, upon which the taxes were unpaid. Judgment was rendered against certain persons who were assessed, for delinquent taxes, ordering the sale of a certain number of acres undivided, without designating the interests of the judgment debtors in the land: Hell, to be erroneous.

People v. Shimmings, 42 Cal. 123.

216. Where land is assessed as an entirety to numerous persons, without designating the interest of any one of them, it is an assessment to them as copartners, joint tenants, or tenants in common, and not as owners in severalty. Id.

217. If such an assessment be legal, it would be the duty of the court, in giving judgment for delinquent taxes upon the land, to ascertain by its judgment what particular undivided interests in the land were delinquent, and to exonerate from the lien for the delinquent tax the interests of those who had already paid their proportion of the general burden. Id.

218. It is the better practice to assess each particular person who claims an interest in a tract of land according to his interest or claim of title, and not to assess the whole tract in solido to all those who claim an interest in it. Id.

219. When a person holds an interest in a tract of land in severalty, he is entitled to be assessed for his particular tract only. Id.

220. Under the revenue act of 1857, several city lots can not be assessed in gross for taxes, and then sold together for the aggregate amount of the tax. A tax deed based on such sale is void. The intention of the act is that each lot shall be separately assessed and valued, so as to bear its own portion of the public burdens.

Terrill v. Groves, 18 Cal. 140.

221. Blocks of land in a city may be assessed for taxation by blocks, when they are assessed to the owner, even if they have been subdivided into lots.

People v. Culverwell, 44 Cal. 620.

222. An assessor may assess and place a valuation on a block in a city, as a whole, when one man owns it, without placing a separate valuation on the several lots into which it is divided.

People v. Morse, 43 Cal. 534.

223. In assessing land for taxation, the assessor can not deduct from its value the amount due on mortgages by which it is incumbered, and call the remainder its assessed value. Lick v. Austin, 43 Cal. 590.

224. An assessment of land as "balance of land on Rancho Arroyo de San Antonio, ten thousand and ninety acres, at four dollars per acre, forty thousand three hundred and sixty dollars," is sufficient, it appearing on the roll that the part of the ranch not assessed was comprehended within the plat of a town, certain lots in which were assessed on the same list to the same owner.

Patten v. Green, 13 Cal. 325.

225. An assessment stating: "House and lot north side of Commercial street, formerly owned by Belle Creole, also brick store north side of Commercial street and second from the corner of Pine and Commercial, including lot and all the appurtenances, seven thousand dollars," there being at the top of the page containing this description the words, "Nevada county, Nevada township, Nevada City," is fatally defective in omitting "to give the metes and bounds, or describing the premises by lots or fractions of lots," according to the fourth section of the revenue act of 1857.

Kelsey v. Abbott, 13 Cal. 600.

226. Under the revenue act of 1857 the assessment of lands outside of a city or incorporated town need not describe the land by metes and bounds.

High v. Shoemaker, 22 Cal. 363.

227. Land outside of a city or incorporated town must be described by metes and bounds, the number of acres, as nearly as possible, and the locality and township must be given.

Lachman v. Clark, 14 Cal. 131.

228. Since the passage of the act of 1861, an assessor is only required to assess improvements on real estate and personal property, in general terms, and under a gross valuation, and a specific description of such property is unnecessary.

People v. Rains, 23 Cal. 127.

229. The object of a description of property in an assessment roll is to clearly identify the property assessed. An assessment roll which describes minutely each particular piece of improvement on land assessed, with the value of each, separately stated, in a column of item figures, so arranged that there can be no mistake as to the property intended to be assessed, and where, in addition, the aggregate value of the same is stated under the general head "value of improvements on lands," is clearly sufficient.

People v. Empire M. Co., 33 Cal. 171.

230. If the assessor, in assessing a tract of land which consists of a specific quantity granted by the Mexican government, to be selected within the exterior boundaries of a much larger tract, describes it as definitely as the nature of the case will admit of, the assessment is valid.

People v. Crockett, 33 Cal. 150.

231. A description of land in an assessment roll as follows: "Four hundred acres of land situated on the Volcano and Jackson road, in township No. 1 of the county of Amador and state of California, and commonly known as the 'New York rancho:'" Held, to be sufficient under the revenue act of 1857. High v. Shoemaker, 22 Cal. 363.

232. An assessment of property, as "a ranch, commonly known as 'Clark's ranch,' situated on the Auburn road, two miles south of Grass valley, in Nevada county, state of California," is insufficient, and a deed, on a sale under it, is void.

Lachman v. Clark, 14 Cal. 131.

233. An assessment of land is not void by reason of mistake in description, unless it contains such a falsity in the designation or description of the land assessed as might probably mislead the owner and prevent him from ascertaining that his land had been assessed. Bosworth v. Danzien, 25 Cal. 296.

234. When several parcels of land are assessed to the same persons, they must be separately valued, and the value of each parcel must be placed in the column under "value of land." It is not sufficient to place the valuation of each parcel in the column under "description of property," and the total valuation in the column under "value of land." People v. Hollister, 47 Cal. 408.

235. An assessment of land for taxes, not made to unknown owners, but to the owner by his surname, leaving a blank for his given name, is void, and a deed executed to a purchaser of land at a sale for the tax is void also.

Crawford v. Schmidt, 47 Cal. 617.

236. When the assessor assesses an entire tract of land to a person, and the person assessed had previously sold a part of the same by metes and bounds, and the assessment contains nothing to show what valuation the assessor placed on the part not sold, the assessment is fraudulent and void, and the tax can not be collected.

People v. Hancock, 48 Cal. 631.

237. An assessment for a tax, in which fifteen thousand and eighty acres of land are assessed by quantity and boundaries, excepting therefrom a portion thereof before sold, without a description of the excepted portion, is void. People v. Hyde, 48 Cal. 431.

238. An assessment of a large tract of land for taxes, under the act of 1861, which describes the whole tract by metes and bounds, and then excepts from the tract parcels of the same which had previously been conveyed, but does not describe the excepted portions by metes and bounds, nor in any manner, except by a reference to recorded deeds, is void on its face.

People v. Cane, 48 Cal. 427.

239. A description sufficiently certain to convey land, between man and man, and which, if contained in an agreement to convey, would authorize a court of equity to decree a specific execution, may not answer in a proceeding to enforce the collection of a tax. In the latter case the description must be certain of itself, and not such as to require evidence aliunde to render it certain: Held, accordingly, that an assessment, one of the calls of which was " * * * north by the lands of James Reagan and others," was void; and so held, also, with reference to an assessment, which described the land as "bounded * * * south by the lands of Felton and Patterson."

People v. Mahoney, 55 Cal. 286.

240. In an action to quiet title, in which the defendant claimed under a tax sale and deed, and the plaintiff under a deed from parties doing business under the name of "the Blue Range mining company," it appeared that the property was assessed to "the Blue Range mining company," by direction of the plaintiff's agent, and that the certificate of sale and tax deed each recited the assessment as made to "the Blue Range mining company, and to all owners and claimants, known and unknown." Held, first, that the assessment was void, because "the Blue Range mining company" was not the owner, and was not a person who could own; and, secondly, that the certificate and sale were void for the additional reason that they recited an assessment to the "Blue Range mining company, and to all owners and claimants, known and unknown."

Hearst v. Egglestone, 55 Cal. 365.

241. Under section 388, code of civil procedure, where two or more persons transact business under a common name, they may be sued by the common name; but this does not vary the terms of section 3623, political code, by which the assessor "must assess such property to the persons who own, claim, or have the control thereof." Id.

Of Personal Property.

242. Personal property may be assessed for taxes in bulk, without any statement of the character of the property.

People v. Sneath, 28 Cal. 612.

243. An assessment for taxes of the personal property of a former member of a firm made to the firm after its dissolution is void. Such assessment can not be legalized by legislative enactment. Id.

244. Personal property in this state belonging to non-resident may be assessed to such owner notwithstanding he is a non-resident.

People v. Home Ins. Co., 29 Cal. 533.

245. If personal property in this state belonging to a non-resident is in the possession of a trustee or agent, it may properly be assessed to the agent or trustee having it in possession. Id.

246. An error made by assessing personal property to the wrong owner or claimant, under the revenue act of 1857, and acts amendatory thereof, does not affect the validity of the assessment. Id.

247. Bonds of this state belonging to a foreign insurance company, but deposited in this state in accordance with law, when assessed for taxes, are sufficiently described by being designated "money and bonds" deposited as per statute. Id.

248. An assessment thus: "Personal property—mortgages (Marysville), one hundred thousand dollars," is not good as an assessment of personal property independent of the term "mortgages," on the ground that the act requires no description of personal property to be given, but its value only. The whole statement must be taken together, and that shows "mortgages" to be taxed, and they are not subject to taxation as such. Falkner v. Hunt, 16 Cal. 167.

249. An assessment thus: "Mortgages (Marysville), one hundred thousand dollars," is insufficient under the act. The assessment does not show for what the mortgages were given, nor on what property, nor whether the debts were solvent, nor the value of the property mortgaged; and the sole fact that a mortgage is held for a given amount does not make the mortgage subject to taxation as for so much money. Id.

250. Under this act, a lumping assessment of "personal property" is bad. Every item of taxable property need not be listed, but the different classes named in the act should be stated—as goods, money loaned, gold dust, solvent debts. Id.

See secs. 268–271.

ASSESSMENT ROLL.

251. An assessment roll in which the columns are arranged in a different order, or under different headings, from the form given in section 20 of the revenue act of 1861, may, nevertheless, be a substantial compliance with all the requirements of that section, and valid.

People v. Sierra B. M. Co., 30 Cal. 511.

252. An assessment roll, in which the name appears in the proper place and column is not invalid because the name extends beyond the line of that column, nor because there is a slight discrepancy in the name, the name given being sufficiently accurate to indicate the person intended. Id.

253. Said act of April 2, 1866, so far as it provides for amendments of assessment rolls, is ineffectual for any purpose, because if the roll, without amendment, contains substance sufficient to make it valid as an assessment of property, the curative effect of the statute is not needed, and if it does not, no legislative enactment can either make the assessment, or empower any other officer except the assessor to make it. Id.

254. The only mode in which defective assessments may be authorized by the legislature to be corrected, is to empower the assessor who made the assessment, to make the needed corrections, or authorize it to be done by others in his presence, and upon his testimony showing what was intended by the defective matter requiring correction. Id.

255. A description of property in an assessment roll which is so vague, indefinite, and uncertain, as to render it impossible to determine whether the whole or a part, or if a part, what part, of the land was intended to be assessed to the person named therein, is insufficient. People v. Flint, 39 Cal. 670.

256. An assessment of personal property and improvements on real estate, assessed to a person other than the owner of the real estate, which does not separately value and set down in separate columns the values of the different parcels and descriptions of property, is not in compliance with the revenue laws, and is, therefore invalid.

People v. Sierra B. M. Co., 39 Cal. 511.

256a. An assessment is void if there be no valuation. Garwood v. Hastings, 38 Cal. 217.

People v. Culverwell, 44 Cal. 620.

Dollar Mark.

258. An assessment of town lots for taxation, which does not give their cash valuation either in gross or detail, is radically defective. Figures placed opposite town lots in an assessment roll, without any statement whether they stand for cents, dollars, or eagles, do not fix any valuation to the same.

Hurlbutt v. Butenop, 27 Cal. 50.

259. An assessment of real estate in which, for the value of the same, certain figures are written, with nothing in connection therewith to designate that they represent the quantity or sum of anything whatever, is void, and a tax deed based on the assessment is also void.

Brady v. Seaman, 30 Cal. 610.

260. If, in the original assessment roll of property, figures are placed by the assessor in the column headed "valuation," without anything to indicate whether the figures represent eagles, dollars, or cents, the assessment is void, and the people can not recover a judgment for the tax.

People v. S. F. S. U., 31 Cal. 132.

261. Independent of a statute authorizing such evidence, parol testimony of the assessor can not be received to show what the figures in the column of valuation were intended to represent.

Id.

262. Where the description of the property assessed is placed under the head "improvements on land," and the aggregate value of the same is carried out in figures, preceded by the dollar mark, under the general head of "value of improvements on lands," the assessment is correctly made.

People v. Empire M. Co., 33 Cal. 171.

263. Where the figures representing the aggregate value of the property assessed are placed in the column headed by "value of improvements on lands," and preceded by the dollar mark, such an assessment is not void in consequence of the omission of the dollar mark preceding the figures in the column representing the separate values of the items, for if the aggregate figures represent dollars, so also the smaller sums, in figures, which go to make up those in the aggregate, must represent dollars.

Id.

264. Where, in an item column of figures, the dollar mark is prefixed to some, but not to all the items: Held, that all the figures standing in the same column and in the same relation to other similar items must be construed to be dollars, without a repetition of the mark before each.

Id.

265. The assessor of the city and county of San Francisco for the fiscal year 1865-6, assessed the property of the defendant for the purposes of state and municipal taxation, which assessment was entered in the proper assessment roll as follows: "Money" valuation "5,000," "money loaned" valuation "125,000," and over the column of valuation is the word "dollars." The only money loaned by defendant, and the only solvent debts due him during said fiscal year, consisted of the said one hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars, which was loaned by him to L., and secured to be paid by a deed of trust: Held, first, that said assessment was made under section 4 of the general revenue act of 1857, as amended by sections 1 and 2 of the act of March 6, 1863 (stats. 1864, p. 35); second, that said assessment to defendant was a sufficient compliance with said acts as to the classification and description of his property; and, third, if said assessments were deemed in said respects, or either of them, defective, such defect would be cured by the act of April 2, 1866. (Stats. 1865-6, p. 831.)

People v. McCreery, 34 Cal. 432.

266. Where, in an assessment roll, there was neither a dollar mark prefixed to the figures inserted in the column headed "Valuation of lands," nor at the head of such column, and nothing appeared elsewhere in the roll to explain the intended meaning of said figures: Held, that there was no assessed valuation of certain lands described for assessment in the roll, and such assessment was void. People v. Hastings, 34 Cal. 571.

267. In such case, the provisions of the curative act, passed April 2, 1866 (stats. 1865-6, p. 831), do not authorize the supplying of the defects in the duplicate assessment roll, so as to give it validity.

Id.

268. The assessment roll, when completed and certified by the assessor to the board of supervisors, is the only evidence of his acts and intentions.

People v. S. F. S. U., 31 Cal. 132.

269. The "tax list or assessment roll" which must be certified by the assessor and delivered to the clerk of the board of supervisors, is the only record of his final judgment, as to the value of property.

People v. S. & C. R. Co., 40 Cal. 414.

270. The statute requiring the assessor to return the assessment roll to the clerk, prior to the first Monday in August, is directory merely; and the failure of the assessor to return it before that time is a matter of which the tax-payer can not complain.

People v. Ed. & T. C. Co., 48 Cal. 143.

271. The assessor may certify to the assessment roll after it has been returned to the clerk, and after the first Monday in August, for he does not lose control of the assessment roll until it has been both certified and returned to the clerk. Id.

BOARD OF EQUALIZATION.

272. The presumption of law is that a board of equalization perform their duty and correct any inequality in the assessment of taxes.

Guy v. Washburn, 23 Cal. 111.

273. The board of equalization has no power to raise the valuation of land as fixed by the assessor without notice to the owner. The general notice of the sitting of the board by publication, does not amount to the notice required.

Patten v. Green, 13 Cal. 325.

274. If the board raised the tax without proper notice to the owner, their action is void, and the assessment remains in full force. Id.

275. The board for the equalization of taxes can not, under the revenue act of 1861, diminish or increase the assessed value of property as fixed by the assessor, unless complaint has first been made to them, and reasonable notice has been given to the party assessed or interested, of the day when they will act in the case.

People v. Reynolds, 28 Cal. 107.

276. The board for the equalization of taxes can not, under the revenue act of 1861, add to the valuation of property as fixed by the assessor, without evidence authorizing them to do so. Id.

277. If the assessor fixes the assessed value of the property of a person or firm, and the board of equalization afterwards, instead of adding to the valuation of the property so assessed, makes a new assessment, this new assessment is void, even if the party interested receives notice and appears, and evidence is taken. Id.

278. An order of the board of equalization adding to the assessed valuation of a person's property, should show upon its face that it is merely increasing the valuation of the particular property placed on the assessment roll by the assessor. Id.

279. A complaint of a district attorney filed with the board of equalization which "complains of the assessment set opposite each name on the assessment list, and prays the board to hear evidence in each and every case, and every name on said assessment list, as to the value of the property therein assessed, and to change the value as to them may seem just, and that the valuation may be reduced or raised as to them shall seem just and equitable," states no facts, and is nugatory and insufficient to give the board jurisdiction to increase the assessment. People v. Flint, 39 Cal. 670.

280. In order to give the board of equalization jurisdiction to increase the valuation of property beyond the amount at which it has been assessed, the filing of a complaint is necessary.

People v. Goldtree, 44 Cal. 323.

281. Where the board of equalization makes an order increasing an assessment without a complaint having been filed, and the party assessed appears and moves to set aside the order, such appearance does not confer jurisdiction by relation, and a refusal to set aside the order does not make it valid. Id.

282. The statute does not require the board of equalization to take down or preserve the evidence taken before them, nor does it make any provision for settling a statement of a trial before them, or a bill of exceptions taken during its progress; but doubtless some mode might be adopted to authenticate the evidence when required on appeal. C. P. R. Co. v. Placer, 32 Cal. 582.

283. Where the statute provides that the board of equalization "shall meet on the first Monday in June in each year for the correction of errors in the assessment of personal property, and shall continue in session from time to time until such errors brought to their notice shall be corrected; provided, however, they shall not sit after the third Monday in June;" and where such board met and held sessions on the first and third Mondays of June only, but between said sessions a committee of the board received applications for the correction of assessments, and took testimony, all of which was on said last session, submitted to and acted on by the board, and when the board closed its session it did not appear that any valuation of personal property was erroneous: Held, that this was a proper and legal mode of action on the part of said board.

People v. McCreery, 34 Cal. 432.

284. The board of equalization in passing on the question whether an assessment is too high or too low, acts in a judicial capacity, and its decision is an adjudication.

People v. Goldtree, 44 Cal. 323.

285. The board of supervisors, sitting as a board of equalization, has no power to cancel an assessment for taxes placed by the assessor upon the assessment roll.

People v. Supervisors, 44 Cal. 613.

People v. Ashbury, 44 Cal. 616.

287. While the auditor, in making a copy of the assessment book for the tax collector, can not review or correct the errors of the board of supervisors while acting within the sphere of their authority, still he must disregard any order of the board which it had no jurisdiction to make. Id.

288. A board of supervisors has no authority to cancel an assessment of property made by the assessor and placed by him on the assessment book, and if the board make such order it is a nullity. Id.

289. The auditor will be compelled, by writ of mandate, to deliver to the tax collector a correct duplicate of the assessment book, as made by the assessor, with such alterations only as have been made by the board of supervisors while acting within the sphere of their authority. Id.

290. When any of the taxes of one fiscal year are returned as delinquent, it is the duty of the auditor to enter the same on the assessment roll of the next fiscal year, and then to enter the same upon the duplicate assessment book, unless they have been canceled by the board of supervisors under the affidavit of the collector required by section 3800 of the political code, Id., 46 Cal. 523.

291. The board of supervisors have no power to cancel any taxes, or the assessment for any taxes, except such as are contained in the list by the auditor and taken by him from the delinquent list, and as to which the collector has made affidavit that "he has not been able to discover any property belonging to or in the possession of the person liable to pay the same [taxes] whereof to collect them." Id.

292. Without such affidavit of the collector, that a delinquent tax can not be collected, and without the concurrence of the board of supervisors with the collector in the opinion that it is not collectible, said board can not cancel a tax. Id.

293. A resolution or order of a board of supervisors canceling a delinquent tax, because it is not collectible, ought properly to specify each particular tax which is canceled. Id.

294. A resolution of a board of supervisors canceling a tax, without the affidavit of the collector indorsed on the delinquent list, that it is not collectible, is void, and the auditor should proceed with his duty in regard to such tax, in entire disregard of such resolution. Id.

295. A refusal of a board of equalization to reduce the assessed value of property, made on a complaint by the party assessed, does not preclude the board from afterwards raising the assessed value of the same property, upon complaint made that it has been assessed too low.

C. P. R. Co. v. Placer, 46 Cal. 663.

296. The action of a board of equalization, on an application to change the assessed valuation of property, is not res adjudicata. Id.

297. The court is not prepared to say that a board of equalization is limited to one application, either to reduce or raise the assessed value of property. Id.

298. The board of supervisors, sitting as a board for the equalization of taxes, does not exceed its jurisdiction by refusing to accede to an application to reduce the assessed valuation of property.

Pacific Mail v. Supervisors, 50 Cal. 282.

299. Such board has no power to strike out from an assessment, made by the assessor, property assessed by him. Id.

DELINQUENT LIST.

300. The delinquent list of tax-payers, in a city incorporated under the act of 1830, is not prima facie evidence of the correctness of the prior proceedings by which the tax was levied and assessed.

Los Angeles v. L. A. W. Co., 49 Cal. 638.

301. When a statute requires that the delinquent tax list, together with the time and place of sale of the property for the delinquent tax, shall be published in a paper in the city or county, or in a supplement to such paper, such list, time, and place, if published in a supplement, must be published in one the circulation of which is co-extensive with that of the paper, both in and out of the city and county.

Tully v. Bauer, 52 Cal. 487.

302. The statute does not expressly prescribe the time at which the auditor shall enter the delinquent taxes on the next assessment roll, but the implication is that it should be done before the duplicate assessment book is delivered to the collector.

People v. Ashbury, 46 Cal. 523.

303. The provisions of the revenue act of 1857, which require the tax collector to publish the delinquent tax list, giving the name of the owner (when known) of all real estate, and the improvements, together with a condensed description of the property, etc., are not conditions precedent to the vesting of the tax. The obligation to pay the tax does not exist by the force of these provisions. The tax is a debt due from the property-holder to the state, and these proceedings by publication, etc., are merely modes adopted by the legislature to collect them. If the property be omitted from the delinquent list, this does not discharge the property-holder, but the defect may be remedied by the legislature. Moore v. Patch, 12 Cal. 265.

COLLECTION OF TAXES.

304. The claimants are either the owners or they are not; if they are, they must pay the taxes on the land; if they are not, they have nothing to do with the matter, and can not enjoin the collection of taxes, having no authority to sue or defend for the United States. Robinson v. Gaar, 6 Cal. 273.

305. The taxes of 1855, after March, 1856, are not of the unfinished business of the out-going sheriff, for the reason that after the settlement of the sheriff with the county auditor in March, the delinquent taxes of that year are transferred to the tax list of the succeeding year, and it is made the duty of the then sheriff to proceed to collect such delinquent tax as other taxes. Fremont v. Boling, 11 Cal. 380.

306. Though a man can only be made to pay a tax according to law, that law may be made as well at one time as another, or by one series of acts as another, and as well after an informal assessment, or no assessment, as before. People v. Seymour, 16 Cal. 332.

307. The provisions of section 13 of the revenue act of 1857, that the tax collector shall add to the tax of a delinquent five per cent. and enforce the collection of the same, in connection with the tax, by sale of the property, is constitutional, and a sale made in pursuance thereof passes a valid title. High v. Shoemaker, 22 Cal. 363.

308. The five per cent. is not a substitute for the tax or a penalty for its non-payment, but one of the means prescribed for obtaining the tax itself by offering an inducement to pay it when due. Id.

309. The addition of five per cent. imposed by act of 1858, on the third Monday in October, upon the taxes of delinquents, may be recovered in the action, along with the unpaid taxes, as well as the cost of advertising. People v. Todd, 23 Cal. 181.

310. The tax law creates two remedies, one against the person and the other against the property, each having a distinct and separate existence; and a mistake in the name of the person to whom the property should have been assessed does not affect the validity of the tax against the property itself.

O'Grady v. Barnhisel, 23 Cal. 287.

311. The expense of filing certificate of sale in the recorder's office, is not a proper item of costs to be charged by the collector at the sale. Id.

311. A slight mistake made by the collector in computing the amount of taxes and costs, by which the property was sold for a small sum more than the amount actually due, does not invalidate the sale, particularly when it is not made to appear that the owner of the land suffered any injury by the mistake. Id.

By Action.

313. An action of debt for taxes will not lie when the predicate of the action is a mere assessment upon property. Much depends upon the language of the act creating the tax. If the act merely impose a tax upon property, and provide a particular process for enforcement, as a sale of the property, no suit can be brought against the person to collect the tax. If a personal liability be imposed for the tax, and the act is silent as to the mode of enforcement, then an action would lie for the enforcement of the obligation; for the rule is general, that debt lies at common law to enforce a statutory duty, or penalty, or forfeiture.

State v. Poulterer, 16 Cal. 514.

314. When a statute casts upon a party an obligation to pay money to particular persons, without providing a remedy for its recovery, an action of debt will lie. Id.

315. If a tax has been duly assessed, the owner of the property becomes personally liable for it, and the remedy is not confined to a seizure and sale of it, nor to the enforcement of a lien on it by action.

Oakland v. Whipple, 39 Cal. 112.

316. District courts have jurisdiction of actions for collection of delinquent taxes, when the tax amounts to more than three hundred dollars, and also regardless of amount, when it is sought to enforce the lien of the tax. People v. Olvera, 43 Cal. 492.

317. The constitution of the state allows the legislature to pass a law directing the district attorney of a county to bring actions in the name of the people to recover delinquent taxes, and such law does not interfere with the constitutional duties of the tax collector. People v. C. P. R., 43 Cal. 399.

Complaint.

318. In a suit for taxes on real estate, levied, as was alleged, in El Dorado county, the complaint failed to show that said property was within said county, or the revenue district thereof within which it was assessed, or that said revenue district was within said county: Held, that the complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. People v. Pearis, 37 Cal. 259.

319. A complaint in a tax suit which shows only that the property taxed was assessed as the estate of R., deceased, and that the defendants, at the time of the assessment, owned and possessed it, does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, because not showing that the property was assessed to any particular party whose duty it was to pay the taxes, or that it was made to unknown owners.

People v. De Carrillo, 35 Cal. 37.

320. The holding of such an election is a jurisdictional fact, and it is, therefore, necessary to aver it with precision, and in such manner as to admit of a direct issue upon the facts averred.

People v. Castro, 39 Cal. 65.

321. Where an act of the legislature provides that taxes which have been remitted by the board of supervisors shall be exempt from its provisions, it is not necessary to aver in the complaint that the taxes sued for have not been remitted; but that fact, if it exist, should be pleaded in bar of the action.

People v. Todd, 23 Cal. 181.

322. The fortieth section of the revenue act of 1861, which provides that a complaint in an action to recover a tax, need not follow the description of the property as found in the assessment, only permits a different description of the property in the complaint from that contained in the assessment, but does not obviate the necessity of showing on the trial a valid assessment of the same land described in the complaint.

People v. Cave, 48 Cal. 427.

Process.

323. In suits for the recovery of taxes, to obtain a valid judgment in rem against the real estate, it is necessary that the process should be served in the manner directed by the statute, viz., by posting a copy in some public place thereon.

Gillis v. Barnett, 38 Cal. 393.

324. If there be, however, sufficient service of process upon the owner, a personal judgment against him is valid under an execution upon which the land may be sold.

Id.

325. In an action to recover judgment for taxes, in which real estate is made a party, the summons on the real estate may be served by delivering a copy thereof to the person or persons in possession, or by posting a copy in some public place thereon, as provided in the revenue act of 1861, or by publishing the summons for eight weeks, as provided in the act of 1862.

Truman v. Robinson, 44 Cal. 623.

326. The provisions of the revenue acts of 1862 and 1864, as to service of summons on real estate in tax cases, do not repeal the provisions in the revenue act of 1861 upon the same subject, but are merely cumulative.

Id.

327. In an action to collect delinquent taxes, service by posting a copy of the summons on the real estate and improvements described therein, in compliance with section 41 of the revenue act of May 17, 1861, is sufficient to authorize a judgment against the land and improvements so served.

People v. Fox, 39 Cal. 621.

328. The statute under which such service was made is not superseded by the act of May 12, 1862.

Id.

329. When there is no appearance of the personal defendant, a judgment against him is erroneous, unless it is shown that he was personally served with the summons.

Id.

330. If the statute for the collection of a tax and the enforcement of its lien on real estate, provides that a summons may be served by delivering a copy to each defendant, but if the personal defendant can not be found, by posting a copy for twenty days at the court-house door, and that no personal judgment shall be rendered unless the person against whom it is rendered shall have been personally served, a personal judgment rendered on a service made by posting a copy at the court-house door is erroneous, and will be reversed if attacked by direct appeal.

People v. Bernal, 43 Cal. 385.

331. If in such case the statute requires the services of summons on the real estate to be made by delivering a copy to the person in possession thereof, and by posting a copy in some public place thereon, a return by the sheriff that he posted a copy on the premises, without stating that it was posted in a public place on the premises, will not support a judgment if attacked by direct appeal. In like manner, the judgment will be reversed, unless the return fails to show that a copy was delivered to a person in possession of the premises, or that there was no person in possession.

Id.

332. Under the act of April 4, 1864, which provides that in tax suits, upon default of the defendant, the court commissioner shall draft a decree, etc., the duties of the court commissioner do not commence until the summons is duly served, and if a case is referred to him, his first duty is to ascertain whether the summons has been served.

Martin v. Parsons, 50 Cal. 498.

Defenses.

333. Under the statute of 1863, which provides what a defendant may answer in a suit to recover a tax, an answer which avers that the tax was fraudulently levied for an amount in excess of that authorized by law is good.

People v. Nelson, 36 Cal. 375.

334. The general statute in relation to filing answers in cases for the collection of taxes applies to suits for the collection of taxes levied by school districts.

Id.

335. An answer to a sufficient complaint in a suit for taxes on real property, brought against the property and the alleged owner assessed therewith, which denies only that the personal defendant was, at the time of the assessment, the owner of the property or any part thereof, without further denying in him all claim, title, or interest therein, is not such a denial as, by the revenue act (section 42), is permitted to be made, and it raises no issue as to the liability, as sought in the action, of either defendant.

People v. Pearis, 37 Cal. 259.

People v. Castro, 39 Cal. 65.

337. The payment of a tax can not be resisted on the ground that the property on which it was levied was not assessed at its true value. One whose property is not assessed according to its true value must apply to the board of equalization.

People v. Whyler, 41 Cal. 351.

Evidence.

338. Though the assessment roll may be prima facie evidence of its contents, it is not conclusive in a proceeding directly based upon its correction: Held, accordingly, in an action to recover a district school tax, that it was error to exclude evidence offered by defendant to show that the assessment roll was simply copied from the assessment roll of the county, and that no assessment was in fact made.

People v. Lansing, 55 Cal. 393.

339. In any case, the duplicate assessment roll can only be corrected from data contained in the original roll, as made by the assessor; and when not so furnished, parol evidence is not admissible to supply its place.

People v. Hastings, 34 Cal. 571.

340. If it be shown that the land on which the tax was assessed did not belong to the defendant, but to other persons in the actual occupation thereof, holding the title under recorded deeds, the fact establishes a legal fraud, which vitiates the entire assessment.

People v. Castro, 39 Cal. 65.

341. A defective assessment roll may be introduced in the trial of a tax suit, to show that the taxes were not legally assessed, but can not avail in a collateral attack on the judgment.

Eitel v. Foote, 39 Cal. 439.

342. In an action brought under the act of 1861, to recover a delinquent tax, if there is a defense interposed, it is necessary for the district attorney to show by the delinquent list or the original or duplicate assessment roll that a tax had been assessed and levied. The fact that the second section of the act provides that the defendant shall not be allowed to set up or show any informality in the levy or assessment as a defense does not obviate the necessity for such proof.

People v. Waterman, 31 Cal. 412.

343. If, in an action to recover a tax brought against a railroad company, the company avers in its answer that its superintendent furnished the assessor with a written statement of the real estate belonging to the company, the company can not, on the trial, be heard to dispute the authority of its agent to give a list of its property, nor to deny that the property contained in the list belonged to the company.

People v. S. & C. R. Co., 49 Cal. 414.

Judgment and Decree.

344. In a tax suit, a recital in the decree "that all the owners and claimants of the property have been duly summoned to answer the complaint herein, and have made default in that behalf," there being nothing contradictory to it in the record, is conclusive, in a collateral proceeding, that the court acquired jurisdiction of the owner of the premises.

Eitel v. Foote, 39 Cal. 439.

345. A recital in a judgment rendered for a tax on real estate, that all owners and claimants of the property have been duly summoned to answer the complaint, and have made default, is proof of those facts.

Truman v. Robinson, 44 Cal. 623.

346. The validity of a judgment in a tax suit must be tested by the same rules, and is subject to attack in the same mode, and by the same means, as a judgment in an action of any other class.

Eitel v. Foote, 39 Cal. 439.

347. A judgment, regular on its face, enforcing a lien for a tax, and which the court had jurisdiction to render, will not be set aside in equity at the suit of the owner of the land taxed for irregularities in levying and assessing the tax of which the purchaser had no notice.

Stokes v. Geldes, 46 Cal. 17.

348. The same rule applies to the sheriff's certificate of sale made under a sale for the tax.

Id.

349. Although the statute does not require the assessed value of property to be alleged in the complaint in an action to recover taxes; yet, if it is alleged, and the record shows that a judgment was rendered for a greater sum than the total amount of county and state taxes authorized to be levied by law, the judgment will be reversed.

People v. Hastings, 26 Cal. 668.

350. Where an action is commenced against a person alleged to be the owner of real estate, and the real estate, to recover judgment for taxes assessed on the same, and the court finds as a fact that the person sued is not the owner of the real estate, and renders judgment in his favor, but against the real estate, and an appeal is taken by the person made defendant from the judgment in his favor, but not from the judgment against the real estate, he can not assign as error any proceedings which affect the real estate, and as the judgment does not injuriously affect him, it will be affirmed.

People v. Wilson, 26 Cal. 127.

351. In suit against two on a joint assessment for taxes judgment may be rendered against one only of the defendants, if the other be not liable.

People v. Frisbie, 18 Cal. 402.

Injunction.

352. In all cases involving simply the question of taxation the issue is strictly one at common law, and courts of equity can take no cognizance thereof; and in such case, to grant an injunction, is error.

Minturn v. Hays, 2 Cal. 590.

Peralta v. Adams, Id. 594.

353. The fact that the assessment for state and county taxes for 1855-6 in San Francisco county was not based on the valuation of the city assessor, as required by the act creating the board of supervisors, passed in 1851, is not a sufficient ground for an injunction upon the collection of taxes, as the party could have applied to the board of equalization if aggrieved.

Merrill v. Gorham, 6 Cal. 41.

354. An injunction will not lie to restrain the collection of taxes due on property unless it be shown that the injury resulting from the collection, to the owner, would be irreparable. An averment of this character must appear in the bill, and if denied, must be sustained at the hearing.

Ritter v. Patch, 12 Cal. 298.

355. A bill in equity will lie to restrain a sale of property for illegal taxes since a tax deed is made prima facie evidence of title.

Palmer v. Boling, 8 Cal. 388.

Fremont v. Boling, 11 Id. 387.

Overruling De Witt v. Hays, 2 Cal. 463, and Robinson v. Gaar, 6 Id. 275.

356. Where an assessment and sale for taxes would be void, and the matters making them void do not appear on the face of the tax collector's deed, but must be shown by intrinsic proof, and the deed upon its face would be prima facie valid, injunction lies to restrain the sale.

Id.

357. Assuming that the revenue act of May 15, 1854, was repealed by the revenue act of April 29, 1857, then injunction does not lie to restrain a sale in 1860, for taxes assessed under the act of 1854, for the year 1857, because the title of the property to be sold would not be clouded by proceedings under a repealed law of which every citizen is presumed to have knowledge.

Id.

358. A tax-payer can not enjoin the collection of the tax due the county on the ground that he has, in former years, paid into the county treasury taxes assessed on his property which were illegally assessed and collected. Fremont v. Early, 11 Cal. 361.

359. A party seeking to enjoin the collection of tax assessed upon his property, upon the ground that the law provides for the meeting of the board of equalization for the correction of the tax list, and that the board did not meet as required, must show in his bill that there was error to be corrected in his list.

Cowell v. Doub, 12 Cal. 273.

360. Nor can such party enjoin the collection of the tax upon the ground that notice was not given of the meeting of the board, as required by law, unless he shows that there was error in the assessed value of his property to his prejudice.

Id.

361. There is no irreconcilable conflict between the amendatory act of 1853 and the revenue acts of 1853 and 1854. The provision that the sheriff going out of office shall continue to collect the taxes coming to his hands before his term expired was intended to provide for the period intervening between October and March, the time of his settlement.

Fremont v. Boling, 11 Cal. 380.

362. In such case the party who is about to be injured by the sale of his property has a right to an injunction against the person offering to sell, to prevent the sale.

Id.

363. A court will not restrain a sale for taxes when it is apparent upon the face of the proceedings upon which the purchaser must rely to make out a prima facie case to enable him to recover under the sale, that the sale would be void.

Bucknall v. Story, 36 Cal. 67.

364. Courts of equity will not interfere by injunction to restrain the sale of property for delinquent taxes, unless it appears that the enforcement of the tax would lead to a multiplicity of suits, or produce irreparable injury, or where the property is real estate, and the sale casts a cloud upon the title of the complainant.

S. & L. Soc. v. Austin, 46 Cal. 415.

365. An injunction will not be granted to restrain the collection of a tax by a sale of the property of the tax-payer. Before a court of equity will lend its aid in such case it must be made to appear that, after a sale, a deed is about to be executed which will cast a cloud on the title.

Houghton v. Austin, 47 Cal. 646.

366. An injunction will not be granted to restrain the collection of a tax by a sale of the real estate of the tax-payer.

C. P. R. Co. v. Corcoran, 48 Cal. 65.

PAYMENT UNDER PROTEST.

See Meek v. McClure, 49 Cal. 623.

367. If the items of a person's property are assessed and valued separately, and some of the items are not liable to taxation, the tax collector can separate the legal from the illegal portion of the tax; he should receive the legal portion of the tax if tendered to him; and if he refuses to do so, and the whole tax is paid under protest, the person taxed can recover from the collector that portion which is illegal.

Bk. of Mendocino v. Chalfant, 51 Cal. 369.

368. A tax collector is bound to know the limits of the district for which he was elected, and if he enforces the payment of a tax on property outside of said limits, a general protest against the payment of the same is sufficient to enable the party paying to recover it back.

Mason v. Johnson, 51 Cal. 612.

369. Proof that a tax was paid under a written protest before it became delinquent, and before threats were made to sell property for its collection, is not proof that it was paid under duress.

Bk. of Woodland v. Webber, 52 Cal. 73.

370. It is not necessary for a person paying a tax under protest to state facts in the protest of which the tax collector has notice.

Smith v. Farrelly, 52 Cal. 77.

371. A tax paid under protest, after the delinquent list comes into the hands of the tax collector for collection, by sale of property, and after the publication of the delinquent list, is paid under duress. Id.

372. To enable one to recover back a tax illegally assessed, and paid under protest, it must appear that the tax was delinquent, and that the officer to whom it was paid was armed with authority, real or pretended, to seize property, and threatened to do so.

Bk. of Santa Rosa v. Chalfant, 52 Cal. 170.

373. Where taxes have been illegally assessed, and the tax collector is about to sell the property for the taxes thus assessed, the tax can be paid under protest, and the money recovered back by action.

Guy v. Washburn, 23 Cal. 111.

374. Taxes, not justly due, and paid under protest, may be recovered back by suit against the tax collector.

Falkner v. Hunt, 16 Cal. 167.

375. Assumpsit, when it will lie.

McCarthy v. Pope, 52 Cal. 561.

376. In case of a payment of the whole tax a protest is not sufficient unless it specifies such illegal item among the grounds of illegality of the tax.

De Fremery v. Austin, 50 Cal. 380.

TAX SALE AND DEED.

377. Property must at the time be liable for all the taxes for which it is sold; and where property was sold at one sale for both state and county taxes, added together in a single sum, and the county taxes were illegally levied, the entire sale was void. Hardenburgh v. Kidd, 10 Cal. 402.

378. All the provisions of the statutes for the assessment of taxes, and for the sale of property for their non-payment, must, in their substance, be strictly pursued in order that a title acquired at such a sale shall be valid. Russell v. Mann, 22 Cal. 131.

379. One of the prerequisites to the validity of a tax sale is the authority under which the taxes are assessed.

Norris v. Russell, 5 Cal. 249.

380. Proceedings on tax sales are strictissimi juris. Ferris v. Coover, 10 Cal. 632, affirmed.

Kelsey v. Abbott, 13 Cal. 609.

381. The principles applicable in other judicial sales are applicable to sales under judgments enforcing liens for taxes.

Jones v. Gillis, 45 Cal. 541.

382. When the assessment is not of an undivided interest in, but of an entire tract or parcel of land, the tax collector has no power or authority to sell an undivided interest therein for the non-payment of taxes. Roberts v. Chan Tin Pen, 23 Cal. 259.

383. The owner of the property assessed, and in default of his doing so, the tax collector, has a right to designate at or before the time of sale any portion less than the whole tract which will be sold; but when this designation is made, the parcel sold must be particularly located by metes and bounds in the general tract, so that the purchaser may know its exact boundaries and what part of the tract remains unsold. Id.

384. If the description of the tract sold at the time of the sale is general, as "fourteen feet" in a certain lot, the sale is void for uncertainty, and the defect can not be cured by inserting a proper description in the certificate of purchase or collector's deed. Id.

385. A party in possession of premises under sheriff's sale, and receiving rents and profits during the time for redemption, should, in equity, as between him and defendant in execution, pay the taxes assessed while he is so in possession. If the owner does not pay them, then the statute requires the party in possession to pay.

Kelsey v. Abbott, 13 Cal. 609.

386. If, in such case, such party fails to pay the tax, permits the premises to be sold, and buys them in, he can derive no benefit from the sale; except that, in equity, the amount paid would probably be considered an advance to the judgment debtor. And this, though the premises were bid in by one of two partners, while the possession, under the sheriff's sale, was by both partners. The duty to pay the tax was several, as well as joint. Id.

387. One who is under no legal or moral obligation to pay taxes is not precluded from purchasing at the tax sale, although in possession at the time the assessment was made or when the land was sold.

Moss v. Shear, 25 Cal. 38.

388. One whose duty it was to pay the taxes upon real property can not gain an advantage in respect to the title by allowing the same to be sold for taxes and buying it in himself, or buying it from a stranger who bought it at the sale.

Moss v. Shear, 25 Cal. 45.

Coppenger v. Rice, 33 Id. 408.

389. At a sale of land under execution of a judgment for taxes, it is competent for the sheriff to sell the same to the purchaser who will take the smallest quantity to pay the judgment and costs.

Gillis v. Barnett, 38 Cal. 393.

390. If a person is in possession of land, claiming the same as his own, it is his duty to pay the taxes, although he has no paper title, and is a trespasser; and under such circumstances, he can not acquire an outstanding title by neglecting to pay the taxes and allowing the land to be sold for the same, and purchasing at the sale. The rule is the same if the possession is such that it would give the possessor title by the statute of limitations.

Barrett v. Amerein, 36 Cal. 322.

391. A party against whom a tax is levied can not obtain any title to property by purchase of it at a sale for the payment of the taxes which he should have discharged.

Garwood v. Hastings, 38 Cal. 217.

392. A party in possession, whose duty it is to pay the tax, can derive no advantage from a sale for the tax which he ought to have paid without a sale.

Reily v. Lancaster, 39 Cal. 354.

393. A purchase of land at a sale of the same for taxes, by the agent of one who was in possession thereof, either by himself or his tenants, does not pass or otherwise affect the title to such land.

Bernal v. Lynch, 36 Cal. 135.

394. When the tax is valid, but the sale irregular, equity will not cancel the tax deed at the suit of the owner of the land, without a tender of the taxes to the purchaser. Hibernia Bk. v. Ordway, 38 Cal. 679.

395. But where the purchaser of the tax title has made the purchase by collusion with the owner, with the view of defrauding a mortgage creditor of the owner, a tender of the amount of the taxes is not necessary.

Id.

396. Such deed is not void because the purchase money at the tax sale was not paid to the sheriff until some time after the sale, provided the sheriff accepted of it.

Anderson v. Rider, 46 Cal. 135.

397. A title acquired by a sheriff's deed, in pursuance of a sale for a delinquent tax, will prevail over a title acquired by a similar deed for the tax of the previous year, even if the sale for the oldest tax was made after the sale for the later tax.

Id.

398. A sheriff's deed made under a sale for a tax, in pursuance of a judgment enforcing the lien of the tax, is not void because the property sold, being several lots in the city, was assessed in soldo, and not each lot separately.

Id.

399. A purchaser of land at a tax sale, made under a judgment enforcing a lien for a tax, which judgment is regular on its face, is not affected by any matters outside the judgment of which he had no actual notice.

Stokes v. Geddes, 46 Cal. 17.

400. If land be sold for taxes, a part of which are valid and a part illegal, the whole sale and the tax deed will be void.

Wills v. Austin, 53 Cal. 152.

401. Houghton v. Austin, 47 Cal. 646; and Wills v. Austin, 53 Id. 152, affirmed.

Harper v. Rowe, 53 Cal. 233.

402. If a sale of land for a delinquent tax is made for a sum in excess of the tax and legal costs, the sale is void, unless the excess is less than the smallest fractional coin authorized by law.

Treadwell v. Patterson, 51 Cal. 637.

403. A sale of land for taxes to the highest bidder in one parcel, and not to the person who would take the smallest or least quantity of the land and pay the tax due, is illegal, and a deed given in pursuance of it is absolutely void.

Hewell v. Lane, 53 Cal. 213.

404. A sale of land for a sum in excess of that authorized by law is void.

Harper v. Rowe, 53 Cal. 233.

405. Section 3803 of the political code, authorizing the tax collector to include interest on the delinquent tax at the rate of two per cent. per month, does not apply to a sale made by the tax collector to collect a delinquent tax in the first instance.

Id.

406. The acts of March 28th and 30th, 1874, did not have the effect to validate tax sales void under the law as it existed when the sales were made, for the reason that property can not be taken "without due process of law."

Id.

407. If a tax sale is absolutely void, the payment of the tax by the purchaser stands on the footing of a voluntary payment, not made at the request of the owner of the land, and which a court of equity will not require him to refund.

Id.

408. Where an action had been commenced in due time to enforce the collection of a street assessment in San Francisco, and a third party subsequently procured a tax deed to the premises: Held, that under the revenue law, as amended in 1850, the deed extinguished the lien for the street assessment. Dougherty v. Henario, 47 Cal. 9.

409. As a general rule, a sale and conveyance in due form for taxes extinguishes all prior liens, whether for taxes or otherwise. Id.

410. The title acquired by the later sale for taxes must prevail over that acquired by a sale for taxes of a prior year.

Chandler v. Dunn, 50 Cal. 15.

411. A deed of land executed by an officer under a sale made on a judgment enforcing a lien for a tax can not be held to have an effect, which the statute under which the judgment was rendered says it shall not have. Such deed is not, therefore, conclusive evidence of title against one who paid the tax and was not a party to the judgment. Mayo v. Haynie, 50 Cal. 70.

412. A judgment in an action in rem to enforce a lien on land for a tax can not be held to enlarge the operation of the deed given by a sheriff under a sale on the judgment, beyond the limitations of the statute by force of which the judgment was rendered. Id.

413. If a sheriff sells land on a judgment enforcing the lien of a tax, and the purchaser does not pay the price bid by him, until five months after, and the sheriff then gives him a certificate of sale bearing date the date the sale was made, and at the end of six months from the day of sale gives him a deed, and there was no stipulation for a credit between the sheriff and the purchaser, the deed is not void, but passes the legal title. Maine v. Elliott, 51 Cal. 8.

414. If the statute directs the officer who sells land under a judgment for delinquent taxes to sell the smallest quantity that any purchaser will take and pay the judgment for the tax and costs, a deed of the officer who made the sale, which recites that he has sold the premises to the grantee who was the highest bidder therefor, is void and conveys no title.

Carpentier v. Gaun, 51 Cal. 193.

415. A deed of land under a tax sale is only prima facie evidence that no redemption had been effected; and the party who makes the redemption may, in ejectment on the title acquired by the deed, prove that a redemption was effected.

Cooper v. Shepardson, 51 Cal. 298.

416. In the absence of a statute declaring that the recitals in a tax deed shall convey the title to the land therein described, and shall be prima facie evidence of title, the burden is cast on the party claiming under the deed of proving that the recitals are true.

Pierce v. Low, 51 Cal. 580.

417. If a delinquent tax list, and time and place of sale of property for the delinquent taxes, are not published as required by the statute of 1859, the defendant may, under said statute, avail himself of the same as a defense in an action of ejectment brought against him by one claiming under a tax deed. Tully v. Bauer, 52 Cal. 487.

418. It is the general rule that a grantee under a tax deed, valid on its face, is not affected in any of his rights by recitals in the sheriff's return of the tax sale contradicting the recitals in the deed.

Hewell v. Lane, 53 Cal. 213.

419. Where the statute prescribes the particular form of a tax deed, the form becomes substance, and must be strictly pursued, or the deed will be void.

Grimm v. O'Connell, 54 Cal. 522.

420. If a tax deed recites a void assessment, it is void, and it can not be shown that there was in fact a valid assessment. The plaintiff must recover, if at all, on his tax deed, supported by evidence of the regularity of the prior proceedings, if the same are attacked. He can not recover on the tax roll or delinquent list. Id.

421. Under a judgment in a tax suit, in favor of the people against an undivided interest, equal to fifty-five thousand three hundred and forty-four acres, in certain real estate, the sheriff sold an undivided interest, equal to five thousand acres, for the amount of the judgment and costs, including in the latter fifty cents for filing with the recorder a duplicate certificate of sale, the interest sold being the smallest undivided interest that any purchaser would take and pay the amount demanded. In an action to quiet title, brought by the original owner of the land against defendants holding under the sale: Held, first, that the provision of section 8 of the act of May 12, 1862 (Hitt., art. 6479), that no more of the property should be sold than was necessary to pay the judgment and costs, authorized the sheriff to include the accruing costs in the amount for which the sale was made, and that the fifty cents for filing the duplicate certificate of sale was rightly charged; and, second, that the property assessed and directed to be sold, being an undivided interest, a specific tract could not be sold, and the sheriff was therefore authorized to sell an undivided interest; h/d, further, objection being made to certain recitals in the sheriff's deed, that, as the statute did not provide for the form of the deed in such cases, the objectionable matter was mere surplusage, and did not affect the validity of the deed.

Harper v. Rowe, 55 Cal. 132.

422. A void tax deed can not be made valid by proof of a valid assessment.

Hearst v. Egglestone, 55 Cal. 365.

423. A tax deed for state taxes purporting to have been levied for the fiscal year 1872-3, when, under the decisions of the supreme court, there was no valid law authorizing a state tax to be levied for that year, would be void on its face, so far as it related to the state tax.

Wills v. Austin, 53 Cal. 152.

424. The defendant can not, in ejectment, for the purpose of defeating title acquired by a sheriff's deed executed under a sale made on a judgment foreclosing a lien for taxes, avail himself of defects in the assessment roll, of which the purchaser had no notice when he purchased, and which, if they had been shown in the tax suit, would have defeated a recovery.

Jones v. Gillis, 45 Cal. 541.

TAX DEED.

Generally.

425. Public land of the United States can not be sold for taxes; and plaintiff in ejectment for such land can not recover on a tax deed. If the tax was for improvements on the land, and if such tax was proper, then the deed should show this, and not a sale of the fee, or a taxing of the land itself.

Hall v. Dowling, 18 Cal. 619.

426. The sheriff's deed, executed under a judicial sale for taxes, is not prima facie or conclusive evidence of his power to sell; but his power to sell, to recite a sale in his deed, and to make the deed, must be proved by the judgment and execution.

People v. Doe, 31 Cal. 220.

427. To sustain a title by virtue of a tax collector's deed, it has, by the best authorities, been held that every prerequisite to the exercise of the power of sale by the officer must be shown to have been accomplished.

Norris v. Russell, 5 Cal. 249.

428. By the doctrine of the common law, a party claiming under a tax deed must show that all the requirements of the law, from the first to the last, have been complied with. Though the statute has altered the rule, and made the deed prima facie evidence of the conveyance of all the title of the delinquent, it does not dispense with the necessity of the officer reciting in the deed the authority under which he acted. The deed has no validity as an independent conveyance. It depends upon the statute, and if, by any of its recitals, it appears that any material requisition of the law has been omitted, the deed is void.

Ferris v. Coover, 10 Cal. 589.

429. The tax collector's deed, under the act of 1854, would show the fact that taxes were assessed, and the time and the amount of the assessment. And if it appeared that property was sold in 1860, for taxes assessed under the act of 1854, and due in 1857, the nullity of the sale would be shown on the face of the deed. Burr v. Hunt, 13 Cal. 303.

430. A tax deed depends for its validity upon a lawful assessment.

Braly v. Scaman, 30 Cal. 610.

431. The prima facie evidence of title furnished by the recitals of the tax deed is overthrown by showing that the assessment was illegal. Bidleman v. Brooks, 28 Cal. 72.

Burr v. Hunt, 13 Cal. 303.

433. Our statute makes tax collectors' deeds prima facie evidence of title.

Norris v. Russell, 5 Cal. 249.

434. A deed executed by a collector of taxes for property sold for non-payment of taxes, which recites generally that the property was duly assessed, and that the taxes were levied upon it according to law, is prima facie evidence of title in the grantee, and is entitled to be received in evidence as such without any further proofs.

O'Grady v. Barnhisel, 23 Cal. 287.

435. A tax deed properly acknowledged is admissible in evidence without further proof. Wetherbee v. Dunn, 32 Cal. 106.

436. The fact that a tax deed is prima facie evidence of certain facts makes it none the less obligatory to comply strictly with the law. The deed simply shifts the burden of proof. Kelsey v. Abbott, 13 Cal. 609.

437. The statute which makes a tax deed prima facie evidence of the transfer of the title of the delinquent, applies only to deeds executed upon a sale for taxes levied subsequent to its passage. A tax deed executed previous to the passage of the statute is not admissible as evidence of title without proof that all the requirements of the law authorizing its execution had been complied with.

Keane v. Cannovan, 21 Cal. 291.

438. If the certificate of sale of property for taxes is made to "Michael Dundon," and the deed under the certificate is made to "Patrick Michael Dundon, Jr.," and it appears in proof that there were two persons, Michael and Patrick Michael, and there is no evidence that Patrick Michael acquired the right of Michael by assignment, the deed is not admissible in evidence without proof that the two names are for the same person.

McMinn v. Whelan, 27 Cal. 300.

439. A tax deed executed by a sheriff as tax collector, by his under sheriff, is not admissible in evidence, and vests no title in the grantee. Lathrop v. Brittain, 30 Cal. 680.

440. One who is under any legal or moral obligation to pay taxes can not, by neglecting to pay the same and allowing the land to be sold in consequence of such neglect, add to or strengthen his title either by purchasing at the sale himself or by suffering a stranger to buy and then purchasing from him. Moss v. Shear, 25 Cal. 38.

441. One who is in possession of land, claiming it as his, when it is assessed for taxes, can not, by failing to pay the tax and allowing the land to be sold for the same, and becoming the purchaser, and obtaining a sheriff's deed, acquire a title to it. McMinn v. Whelan, 27 Cal. 300.

Recitals in.

442. The description of property in a tax deed must be certain of itself, and not such as to require evidence aliunde to make it certain. Keane v. Cannovan, 21 Cal. 291.

443. A tax deed in which the property is described as follows: "A lot on Dupont street, one hundred and thirty-seven feet and six inches from the north-west corner of Washington street, with the improvements thereon, 12x100," is void for uncertainty of the description. Id.

444. Neither an assessment for taxes nor a tax deed is necessarily void because, in describing the land assessed, a false call has been inserted in the description in the assessment roll or tax deed.

Bosworth v. Danzien, 25 Cal. 296.

445. If the description of the land assessed is definite and accurate in the assessment, and is inserted in the tax deed, and the purchaser at the sale buys a portion of it for the taxes and costs, such description in the tax deed of the portion sold as will enable its boundaries to be determined by extrinsic evidence, applying the description in the deed to the land, is sufficient. Brunn v. Murphy, 29 Cal. 326.

446. A tax deed which describes the property conveyed as "Block No. 25, less a lot belonging to Bryant, 70 by 137, in the south-easterly corner," is not void on the ground that the description of the premises is insufficient, nor because it was assessed by that description.

Wetherbee v. Dunn, 32 Cal. 106.

447. It is not necessary in the recitals in a tax deed, given for land sold for the taxes of 1857-8, to state in what manner the tax had been levied or the rate of taxation, nor for what amount the land was assessed by the assessor, nor that a certificate of sale was filed with the county recorder. Id.

448. It was not necessary under the revenue act of 1854, to recite in a tax deed the various acts showing a compliance on the part of the revenue officers with the several conditions of the statute. These acts, if inserted in the deed, are prima facie evidence; but if not inserted may be proved aliunde. Moss v. Shear, 25 Cal. 38.

449. It is not necessary that a deed for taxes recite each act of the officers in making the assessment and levying the tax, etc., but a general recitation of the conclusions resulting from those acts is sufficient. O'Grady v. Barnhisel, 23 Cal. 287.

450. Such a deed is prima facie evidence that all the proceedings in relation to the tax were regular and in accordance with law, and the burden of showing that any irregularity occurred is thrown upon the one asserting its invalidity. Id.

When Void.

451. A tax deed executed in 1860, for land sold for taxes, is void if the assessment shows that there was not any cash valuation of the lot which the deed purports to convey. Hurlbutt v. Butenop, 27 Cal. 50.

452. If the property is not listed and assessed for the purpose of taxation, the tax deed conveys no title. People v. Hastings, 29 Cal. 449.

REDEMPTION.

453. After a sale of lands under a judgment recovered for taxes a redemption can not be made by paying a portion of the bid equal to the interest of the redemption in the parcel sold.

People v. McEwen, 23 Cal. 54.

454. If the land is sold in separate parcels by the officer, a redemption of distinct parcels can only be made by paying the whole sum bid on any distinct piece sold separately. Id.

455. Third persons have no right to inquire from what source a redemptioner gets the money he proposes to use to effect a redemption he is entitled to make. Scale v. Doane, 17 Cal. 476.

456. Where a party purchased property at sheriff's sale, and on an attempt by the owner to redeem from him, he objects that the amount tendered for redemption is not enough, because not including certain taxes he has paid on the property: Held, that he must show that the taxes were legally assessed and paid, and were a charge on the property before or at the time of the redemption; and the tax collector's receipts are not sufficient proof. Id.

457. Where an entire tract of land has been sold on a judgment recovered against the same, or the owner thereof for taxes, the owner of an undivided interest in the land can not redeem his undivided portion from the sale, by a payment of his proportion of the judgment and costs. Mayo v. Marshall, 23 Cal. 594.

458. The purchaser at sheriff's sale of land sold on execution issued on a judgment recovered for taxes is not entitled to receive the rents and profits during the period allowed for redemption.

Mayo v. Woods, 31 Cal. 269.

459. Where lands are thus assessed to several persons jointly by the revenue law of 1860, the owner of an undivided portion may pay his proportion of the tax and thus release his portion of the land from the lien of the tax; but unless he makes this payment before a sale is made of the land under a judgment recovered for the tax this right is gone, and a redemption can only be effected by a payment of the entire judgment and all charges.

People v. McEwen, 23 Cal. 54.

460. Section 3779 of the political code, requiring the purchaser at a tax sale to reconvey upon "payment of the purchase money and fifty per cent. added thereon," does not apply to a void sale.

Harper v. Rowe, 53 Cal. 233.

461. A judgment debtor may redeem by paying the purchaser the amount of his purchase, with twelve per cent. thereon, together with the amount of taxes, etc., paid by the judgment creditor. He is not obliged to pay other liens which the purchaser may have on the property.

Sharp v. Miller, 47 Cal. 82.

462. A person redeeming from a tax sale made by the collector of taxes, under a judgment recovered for the tax, must pay the whole amount of the judgment, even if he own only an undivided interest in the land; but the payment does not redeem any land other than that which the redemptioner owned at the time of the tax sale.

Quinn v. Kenney, 47 Cal. 147.

463. If a purchaser of land at a sale made by a sheriff for delinquent taxes does not pay the price bid until five months after the sale, and then receives a sheriff's deed at the expiration of six months from the time of sale; although the sheriff's deed conveys the legal title, yet a court of equity will recognize the right of the owner to redeem at any time within six months from the day the purchase money was paid, and will compel the sheriff's grantee to convey the legal title.

Maina v. Elliott, 51 Cal. 8.

464. If sufficient money is paid to the county treasurer to redeem land sold for taxes, and the payment is made for the purpose of effecting a redemption, and a receipt is taken, the redemption is effected, even if the receipt is not filed with the recorder, and recorded by him.

Cooper v. Shepardson, 51 Cal. 298.

465. If land sold for taxes is redeemed, the redemption has the effect of defeating a deed afterwards given to the purchaser. Id.

466. In an action by a minor to redeem from a tax sale, brought after the deed has been executed by the tax collector, the proper decree, if the purchaser at the tax sale has not conveyed or incumbered the property, is, that he convey the same to the plaintiff, and if such purchaser bring into court and tender to the plaintiff such deed, the court may decree that the plaintiff accept it, and recover costs.

Quinn v. Kenney, 47 Cal. 147.

LOCAL TAXATION.

467. The act of 1860, authorizing suit to be brought for the unpaid taxes of the years 1858 and 1859 in the city and county of Sacramento, and prohibiting the defendants from setting up in defense, any formality in the levy or assessment of the tax, and making duly certified copies of the delinquent tax list, or the original or duplicate assessment rolls, evidence of the delinquency of the property assessed, of the amount of taxes due and unpaid, and that all the forms of law in relation to the levy and assessment have been complied with, is constitutional.

People v. Seymour, 16 Cal. 332.

468. Such a law making the assessment prima facie proof, merely affects the remedy, and is not therefore liable to any constitutional objection. Id.

469. Nor is the act unconstitutional because it compels the delinquent, if sued, to pay costs and a percentage by way of attorney fees in addition to the tax assessed. Id.

470. Nor is it any constitutional objection to the act that the delinquent tax list for 1859 was not properly published. The liability to pay the tax assessed preceded the publication of the delinquent list, and suit, under the act of 1860, is based upon that liability. Id.

471. An assessment made by an assessor elected by the qualified electors of the city and county of Sacramento is not a sufficient basis for the levy of a tax in the city of Sacramento for city purposes.

People v. Hastings, 29 Cal. 449.

472. It was unnecessary that the ordinance levying the tax in this case should provide for adding to or modifying the assessment of 1860, the act itself having provided for the correction of the list.

Kelsey v. Nevada, 18 Cal. 627.

473. Held, further, that if a party objects to the tax on the ground that notice was not given, as required by law, for the meeting of the board of equalization, he must show error in the assessed value of his property to his prejudice. Id.

474. The charter of the city of Marysville contains this clause: "The common council shall have power within the city to construct a bridge across the Yuba river at the southern extremity of the public plaza, or to authorize the construction upon such terms as to a division of the proceeds from the tolls as may be just, and to regulate the rates of toll." Under this clause, an ordinance was passed granting Eaton & Smith the franchise of constructing a bridge, the grant to last twenty-five years, they paying the city five per cent. of the gross tolls. They constructed the bridge, and subsequently assigned all their interest in it and the franchise to plaintiff, who has regularly paid over the five per cent. The city now assesses a tax on the bridge as the property of plaintiff: Held, that plaintiff has a taxable estate in the bridge, and that the tax is valid; that the city is not the present owner of the bridge, but has only a reversionary interest.

Fall v. Marysville, 19 Cal. 391.

475. Held, further, that the objection that the bridge has been assessed at its full value does not affect plaintiff's right to maintain this suit to enjoin the collection of this tax, but only goes to the amount of the tax, and not to its validity; and that the only remedy of plaintiff was to apply for a reduction of the tax. Id.

476. The property was not taxable beyond plaintiff's interest in it; and, in legal effect, the tax assessed amounted to nothing more than a tax upon such interest. Id.

477. The revenue act of 1860 repealed the act of April, 1858, concerning the collection of poll taxes, etc., in the county of Sierra; and under the provisions of the revenue act of 1861, the sheriff of that county is the collector of poll and license taxes, as well as the tax on property.

People v. Grippen, 20 Cal. 677.

478. The thirty-seventh section of the act of April 6, 1863, authorizing a special tax for school purposes to be levied in any school district in this state, is not repealed as to the county of San Mateo by section 9 of an "act to define and limit the compensation of officers and reduce public expenses in the county of San Mateo," passed February 6, 1864, nor by section 12 of an "act to provide for the continuance and election of a board of supervisors in the county of San Mateo," etc., approved March 24, 1864.

People v. S. F. & S. J. R. Co., 23 Cal. 254.

479. Under the act of April 3, 1860, "providing for the collection of delinquent taxes in the city and county of Sacramento," where several lots are assessed to unknown owners by fictitious names, and suits are instituted for the collection of the several taxes, there is no valid objection to having one affidavit for, and one order of publication of summons, apply to the several cases. In such case, the publication of one summons gives the court jurisdiction in each case. Moss v. Mayo, 23 Cal. 421.

480. In such case a judgment rendered becomes a lien only on the property of the person against whom it is rendered; and where no judgment is rendered either against the real owner by name or the fictitious person representing such real owner, a court of equity will enjoin the purchaser from dispossessing the real owner by a writ of assistance obtained under the tax deed. Id.

481. A special tax for school purposes can only be levied after the question has been submitted to the qualified electors of the district in the manner pointed out by the statute. People v. Castro, 39 Cal. 65.

482. A tax levied on the property of a given district, to pay for a local improvement, which is assessed upon the parcels of property in the district, in proportion to the benefits each parcel derives from the work, is unconstitutional. Such tax must be levied on all property according to its value.

People v. Whyler, 41 Cal. 351.

483. Property sold for taxes must at the time of sale be liable for the entire amount of tax for which it is sold, or the sale will be void.

Bucknall v. Story, 36 Cal. 67.

484. A purchaser under a tax sale for widening Kearny street, in San Francisco, in order to recover the land, must introduce in evidence, not only his deed, but the assessment, and must show the regularity of all the proceedings. Id.

485. The twenty-second section of the act incorporating the city of Oakland does not abridge the ordinary remedy by suit for the collection of delinquent taxes, but was intended to afford an additional, summary, and effectual remedy for its collection. Id.

486. If the property of a district is taxed to build levees to protect it from overflow, the fact that land which is injured by the levee is assessed at its former value, and land benefited by the levee is also assessed at its former value, does not render the tax liable to the objection of want of equality and uniformity. People v. Whyler, 41 Cal. 351.

487. A charge imposed on all the property of a district, to be used in constructing levees to protect the district from overflow, is a tax, and not an assessment. Id.

488. The fact that levees built to protect the land of a district from overflow injure some of the land instead of benefiting it does not render the tax unequal or void for want of uniformity. Id.

489. A tax on the property in a township for a township road fund, must be assessed by an assessor elected by the electors of the township.

People v. Sargent, 44 Cal. 430.

490. A county assessor can not assess the property of a township for a tax levied on the township property, to raise a fund for township purposes. Id.

491. The act incorporating the city of Placerville granted to the common council the right to levy and collect certain taxes, and constituted the city marshal ex officio collector of taxes, and made it his duty to receive and collect all taxes due the city, authorized the sale of the property of delinquents for taxes due the city, and further enacted that the manner of assessing and collecting taxes, and proceedings for the sale of property in cases of delinquency, should be regulated by ordinance. The common council enacted by ordinance a mode of collecting delinquent taxes remaining unpaid after a certain date, whereby the entire duty was devolved upon the city attorney, and the services of the city marshal dispensed with: Held, that the ordinance prescribing such mode was void, because in conflict with said incorporation act.

Placerville v. Wilcox, 35 Cal. 21.

492. An assessment for a special school tax must be made by an assessor elected by the qualified electors of the school district.

People v. White, 47 Cal. 616.

493. A tax for school purposes must be based upon an assessment made by an assessor elected by the qualified electors of the school district.

People v. S. & C. R. Co., 49 Cal. 414.

494. If an ordinance of a city council, incorporated under the act of 1850, requires a complaint to be filed, and personal notice in writing to be given to a tax-payer before the board of equalization can raise the assessed value of his property, such complaint must be filed and notice given before such value can be raised.

Los Angeles v. L. A. W. Co., 49 Cal. 638.

495. If a board of equalization raises the assessed value of the property of a tax-payer without having acquired jurisdiction to do so, the tax-payer must still pay a tax upon the value of his property as assessed. Id.

496. School district taxes can not be imposed unless the provisions of the political code relating to the same are substantially complied with. People v. Seale, 52 Cal. 71.

497. If an act creates a district within a county, and authorizes the supervisors to levy a tax upon the property therein for the purpose of building a bridge, the property within the district can not be assessed for the tax by an assessor elected by the county, nor can the tax be collected by a collector elected by the county.

Smith v. Farrelly, 52 Cal. 77.

498. A tax for local improvement levied upon the property within a district created by an act of the legislature, is not an assessment within the meaning of that term as employed in article XI, section 18, of the constitution. Id.

499. Section 3666 of the political code is unconstitutional, in so far as it delegates to the state board of equalization the right to fix the rate of taxation, "after allowing for delinquency in the collection of taxes," because it is a delegation of legislative power to said board.

TAX COLLECTOR.

1. It is not necessary, before introducing a tax deed in evidence, to prove that the person by whom it was executed held the office of tax collector at the time when the sale was made. Wetherbee v. Dunn, 32 Cal. 106.

2. The constitution affixes no period of tenure to the office of tax collector, nor does it provide any mode of appointment. So far as this office exists in the incumbent, it is an office created by legislative act. The legislature may direct how it shall be filled, and how its duties shall be discharged.

Attorney-general v. Squires, 14 Cal. 12.

3. A tax collector has power to contract for publishing the delinquent list of tax-payers, so as to bind the county for payment of the price. He is the agent of the county in this respect, and, for any reasonable exercise of that agency, the county is responsible.

Randall v. Yuba Co., 14 Cal. 219.

4. And where he did so contract with plaintiffs, who publish the list and sue the county for the price, the fact that the tax collector had assented to a contract previously made, or attempted to be made, by the supervisors with another party, for publishing the list, is not enough to affect plaintiffs, if they had no notice of it; and evidence of such assent was properly ruled out. Id.

5. No provision is to be found in the constitution under which the sheriff, as sheriff, may perform the duties of tax collector.

Lathrop v. Brittain, 30 Cal. 680.

6. The sheriff acquires his authority to act as tax collector, in those counties where he so acts, under the revenue act of 1857, which invests the person elected to the office of sheriff with another distinct office—that of tax collector; and though he is elected, eo nomine, sheriff, he is, in fact, also elected to the office of tax collector, and the two offices are distinct. Id.

7. The law authorizing sheriffs to act as tax collectors does not authorize the sheriff as tax collector to appoint an under tax collector, wherefore the under sheriff can not perform the duties of tax collector. Id.

8. The legislature has the power to enact a law directing the collector of taxes for a county to pay one-half of the compensation allowed him by law for the collection of the same into the county treasury for the benefit of the general fund.

Solano Co. v. Neville, 27 Cal. 465.

9. If the statute allows a collector of taxes, for his own use, a percentage for collections of state tax, and also a percentage on the amount of county tax collected, and provides that he shall pay the percentage allowed him on the county tax into the county salary fund, and that it shall become a part of said fund, the collector can not claim the percentage to be paid into the salary fund as his own fees or property.

Donahue v. El Dorado Co., 49 Cal. 248.

10. If a tax is not illegal and void, the facts that the person taxed paid it to the tax collector under protest and to avoid a threatened sale of his property for the same, and that such person has commenced, or is about to commence, a suit against the tax collector to recover it back, are not sufficient reasons why the tax collector should fail to pay the money into the public treasury at the time required by law.

People v. Austin, 46 Cal. 521.

11. So long as the tax collector retains taxes and assessments (outside land taxes and assessments) it is his duty to pay the same to the unsuccessful litigant, and he will not be allowed to set up as a defense that the city and county of San Francisco is the proper party to be sued.

Randall v. Austin, 46 Cal. 54.

12. It is the duty of a tax collector, under the code, on the first Monday in each month, to pay to the county treasurer all money collected by him as taxes for the state and county, even if the tax is illegal and the money is paid to the collector under protest.

San Francisco v. Ford, 52 Cal. 198.

13. A tax collector elected for a city can not collect the taxes of an adjoining town, even if it has, after his election, and after the levy of the tax, been annexed to the city. Mason v. Johnson, 51 Cal. 612.

WHO ARE TENANTS IN COMMON.

1. The books do not afford any instance in which the right to hold land as tenants in common, either with themselves or with natural persons, is denied to corporations.

De Witt v. San Francisco, 2 Cal. 289.

2. No one of the reasons which work a want of capacity in corporations to hold as joint tenants would prevent them holding as tenants in common.

Id.

3. Land held by a husband with his wife and child, as tenants in common, is not subject to homestead rights under the laws of this state.

Giblin v. Jordan, 8 Cal. 416.

4. The parties in such case are as much tenants in common as though they were entire strangers to each other.

Id.

But see Laws 1867-8, p. 116.

5. Where V., an owner of land, makes a verbal agreement with B., which they term a lease, by which B. is to have the land for three years; V. to furnish the farming implements, wagons, horses and his share of sacks; B. to work the land, and give V. for the use of it one third of the grain raised, after it is put in sacks, free from the expense of threshing; Held, that this agreement is not a lease, but a contract for working the farm upon shares; and that the parties are tenants in common of the grain, until a division be made; held, further, that a sheriff having an attachment against V. may levy on his interest in the grain; and to effect this may take and detain possession of the entire quantity of grain; but he can sell under the execution on the judgment that may be recovered in the action only the undivided one third interest of V., the purchaser at the sale becoming tenant in common with B.

Bernal v. Hovious, 17 Cal. 541.

6. The grantee of a specific quantity in a larger tract, thereafter to be segregated, becomes a tenant in common with his grantor of the entire tract, and may maintain ejectment against his co-tenants.

Lawrence v. Ballou, 37 Cal. 518.

7. The purchaser, under execution sale, of the interest of one partner in the real estate of a partnership, acquires the legal title, and not a mere equity, and is entitled to be let into possession as a tenant in common with the other owners.

McCauley v. Fulton, 44 Cal. 356.

8. A tenancy in common results from a rule of law by which it is controlled and governed, and each co-tenant sells out or incumbers his interest at pleasure, regardless of the knowledge or consent or wishes of co-proprietors, without affecting the legal relation existing between them, beyond the going out of one and coming in of another.

Bradley v. Harkness, 26 Cal. 69.

9. The joint proprietors of water ditches in the mining districts, in the absence of any special facts constituting them something else, are tenants in common of real estate, and their rights in the ditches and sales of water are governed by the law of tenancy in common.

Id.

10. If two persons own a tract of land as tenants in common, and one of them conveys to a third person a ditch crossing the same, and the other afterwards conveys to another third person the same ditch, the deeds are valid conveyances as between the parties, and the persons to whom the conveyances are made become tenants in common in the property.

Reed v. Spicer, 27 Cal. 57.

11. If an undivided portion of land is common property, and the remaining undivided part is the separate property of the wife, the grantee of the husband becomes a tenant in common with the wife or those claiming under her.

Ewald v. Corbett, 32 Cal. 493.

12. If the owner of sheep lets them for a year to another, with an agreement that he is to take care of and pasture and shear them, and sack the wool, and deliver the same to the owner of the sheep to be sold, or at a port to be shipped to a commission merchant, and that when the wool is sold the proceeds shall be equally divided, the parties become tenants in common of the wool, and the delivery of the wool is merely a step looking to a division to be had between them.

Hewlett v. Owens, 50 Cal. 474.

RELATIONS WITH EACH OTHER.

13. Tenants in common, or partners, have a right to acquire their co-tenants' or co-partners' interest, by purchasing under an execution sale, there being nothing in their relations to forbid it.

Gunter v. Laffan, 7 Cal. 588.

14. Where the tenant in common, or partner, goes away and remains absent from the premises, leaving his associates in possession, it creates no presumption of abandonment; nor does his refusal to pay, or delay in paying the expenses of the business, or the assessments, create of itself a forfeiture.

Waring v. Crow, 11 Cal. 366.

15. The mere passive acquiescence of the other partners or tenants in common in a sale of the interest of the plaintiff by a party having no title, can not confer any upon the vendee.

Id.

16. At common law, one tenant in common has no remedy against the other, who exclusively occupies the premises and receives the entire profits, unless he is ousted of possession, when ejectment may be brought, or unless the other is acting as bailiff of his interest by agreement, when the action of account will lie. The occupation by him, so long as he does not exclude his co-tenant, is but the exercise of a legal right. His cultivation and improvements are made at his own risk; if they result in loss he can not call upon his co-tenant for contribution; and if they produce a profit his co-tenant is not entitled to a share in them. The co-tenant can at any moment enter into equal enjoyment of his possession; his neglect to do so may be regarded as an assent to the sole occupation of the other.

Pico v. Columbet, 12 Cal. 414.

17. There is no equity in the claim asserted by the tenant to share in profits resulting from the labor and money of his co-tenant, when he has expended neither, and has never claimed possession, and never been liable for contribution in cases of loss. There would be no equity in giving to a tenant, who would neither work himself nor subject himself to any expenditures or risks, a share in the fruits of another's labor, investments, and risks. Id.

18. From rents received, the tenant in possession may deduct the amounts paid for taxes and for necessary and proper repairs and additions for the preservation and security of the building held in common during the period for which the rents were collected. And where the building contained theater rooms, which were let from time to time with the furniture thereof—as carpets, lamps, and scenery—which furniture was the individual property of the tenant in possession, he is entitled, in the accounting, to a reasonable allowance, to be deducted from the rents, for the use of such furniture, when such use was required to let the premises themselves. But he is not entitled to allowances for the use of any individual property in connection with the premises not thus required, nor any allowances for his personal services in taking charge of the building, renting the same, and collecting the rents. Goodenow v. Ewer, 16 Cal. 461.

19. A party put in possession or allowed to occupy a portion of premises by one tenant in common, can not be sued as a trespasser by another tenant in common, without notice to quit or other act showing a termination of this license or tenancy. Ord v. Chester, 18 Cal. 77.

20. H., as assignee of the purchaser at sheriff's sale of a three fifths' interest in a water ditch, owned by the South Fork canal company, was in possession of this interest after the time allowed for redemption, and received the rents and profits thereof from the day of sale. The affairs of the company were managed by superintendents, agents employed and paid by the company. Afterwards, the judgment under which the three fifths' interest was sold, was reversed and the sale set aside, and H. ordered to account for the rents and profits received. While he was so in possession he gave considerable personal attention to the affairs of the company, and during this time the company, with the consent and advice of its members, made various reasonable and judicious improvements, and also bought another ditch, which enhanced the value and profits of the South Fork canal: Held, that H. was not entitled, in the account, to compensation for his personal services, being at most but a tenant in common, one of several owners, and the company having employed competent agents to manage the property. Raun v. Reynolds, 18 Cal. 275.

21. Held, further, that for the improvements made by the company, and for the ditch purchased, allowance should be made in taking the account. Id.

22. No action of a portion of several tenants in common can impair the rights of their co-tenants.

Mahoney v. Van Winkle, 21 Cal. 552.

23. As a general rule, neither a tenant in common nor a mortgagee, can acquire a tax title and set it up as against his co-tenant or mortgagor, but this rule rests upon the doctrine of constructive frauds, and is not applicable in a case where, by statute, the deed can only be attacked for actual fraud. Mills v. Tukey, 22 Cal. 373.

24. Several persons owning a tract of mining claims, as tenants in common, and acting under a company name, have not the capacity to take or hold, in the name of the company, the interest of any one or more of the tenants in common, by forfeiture.

Wiseman v. McNulty, 25 Cal. 230.

25. Where husband and wife are divorced, and the decree also directs an equal division of the common property, and both afterwards die, the former husband leaving a will, and the former wife intestate, the executors of the last will of the former husband can not exclude from the lands formerly held in community the heirs of the former wife. McLeran v. Benton, 31 Cal. 29.

RELATIONS WITH THIRD PERSONS.

26. One tenant in common may sue a party in possession by adverse claim, and recover the premises, if plaintiff represents the better title. Collier v. Corbett, 15 Cal. 183.

27. One tenant in common can recover possession of the entire premises, as against a mere trespasser, without joining his co-tenants as plaintiffs.

Treat v. Reilly, 35 Cal. 129.

28. One joint tenant, or tenant in common of land, may convey his interest in a particular portion of the land described by specific metes and bounds, but the grantee takes subject to the co-tenant's right of partition of the whole tract. The grantee's title is good against his grantor and all persons except the co-tenant.

Stark v. Barrett, 15 Cal. 361.

29. The right of partition existing in the co-tenant may be exercised at any time, and may result in the loss to the grantee of the particular parcel conveyed to him. Id.

30. Such grantee, though seised in fee of only an undivided interest in the particular parcel of land, may recover in ejectment the whole of that parcel, as against all persons except the original co-tenant and his grantees. He is entitled to the possession of the entire premises as against all other parties. Id.

31. A tenant in common of an undivided portion of a tract of land is entitled to the possession of the whole tract as against all persons except his co-tenants, and as a consequence may, against all others than they, maintain ejectment for the entire premises.

Fouchard v. Crow, 20 Cal. 150.

Mahoney v. Van Winkle, 21 Id. 552.

32. A tenant in common, although he may, as against a stranger, recover in ejectment the entire premises, can not in such action recover the whole of the mesne profits or damages for the detention, but only a proportionable part corresponding to his interest. Clark v. Huber, 20 Cal. 196.

Muller v. Boggs, 25 Id. 175.

33. One tenant in common is entitled to the possession of the entire tract held in common against all persons but his co-tenants and parties claiming under them, and as a consequence can maintain against them an action for its recovery.

Hart v. Robertson, 21 Cal. 346.

34. If several persons are the owners of a tract of mining claims as tenants in common, and are known by a company name, and an action is commenced against all of them as individuals composing the company on a money demand, and a judgment is rendered against all as the persons composing the company, and the claims are sold by virtue of an execution issued on the judgment, and a deed executed to the purchaser, and if one or more of the defendants were not served with process and did not appear in the action, the purchaser does not acquire any title as against the persons not served with process and who did not appear.

Wiseman v. McNulty, 25 Cal. 230.

35. Where Woods, being the owner of a lot in San Francisco, conveyed an undivided quarter which passed to Williams, and a quarter to Hastings, and a quarter to Haskell; and afterwards Sutton, claiming title under a Colton grant, brought trespass quare clauum fregit against Woods, Hastings, and Haskell for alleged interference with his possession, and recovered judgment, and also obtained an injunction against their interference with his possession: Held, in ejectment by Williams against Sutton, that the effect of the judgment was merely to estop Woods, Hastings, and Haskell from asserting title as against Sutton, not to transfer their title to him or make him a tenant in common with Williams; and that such judgment could not prevent Williams from recovering the whole property.

Williams v. Sutton, 43 Cal. 65.

36. A tenant in common is seised per mi et per tout, and has an interest in the whole, which entitles him to the enjoyment of the entire estate as against every one except his co-tenant. Id.

37. A conveyance by one tenant in common, or any number of them less than the whole, of a specific portion of the common lands, is not void, but can not be made to the prejudice of the tenants not uniting in the conveyance. Gates v. Salmon, 35 Cal. 576.

38. The grantee at such sale acquires all the interest of his grantor in such special tract, which interest is a tenancy in the special tract with the co-tenants of his grantor. Id.

39. A conveyance by one or more of several tenants in common, less than all, of a specific parcel described by metes and bounds of the land owned in common, makes the grantee a tenant in common to the extent of the interest of his grantors in the specific parcel of land described in the conveyance. Id., 46 Cal. 362.

40. Such grantee occupies the precise position, so far as title is concerned, which his grantor or grantors held in the land described in the deed, and becomes a tenant in common, so far as the land conveyed is concerned, with those tenants in common who did not unite in the deed. Id.

41. Such conveyance does not sever the special tract from the general tract of which it is a part, so far as the co-tenants of the grantor are concerned, and the whole tract is subject to partition, so far as the co-tenants of the grantor are concerned, as it would be had the conveyance of the special tract not been made. Id., 35 Cal. 576.

42. A confirmation by the Van Ness ordinance of the title to a lot granted by an alcalde, inures alike to the benefit of all the tenants in common of the lot.

Broad v. Broad, 40 Cal. 493.

43. Equity does not deny to one tenant in common, the right to purchase in an outstanding or an adverse title to the common property; but it will not permit him to acquire such a title solely for his own benefit, or to the absolute exclusion of the other.

Mandeville v. Solomon, 39 Cal. 125.

44. But the co-tenant must exercise reasonable diligence in making his election to participate in the benefit of the new acquisition. Id.

45. Unless he make his election to participate in a reasonable time, and contribute, or offer to contribute, his proportion of the consideration actually paid, he will be deemed to have repudiated the transaction and abandoned its benefits. Id.

46. A tenant in common, entering and remaining in possession of such, can not, as against his co-tenant, assail the common title, or call its validity in question.

Bornheimer v. Baldwin, 42 Cal. 27.

ACTIONS BETWEEN.

47. One tenant in common can not sustain an action of forcible entry and detainer against another, for holding over. He must first resort to a court of equity for a partition of the land in dispute.

Lick v. O'Donnell, 3 Cal. 59.

48. If the parties were tenants in common, and the defendant sold the chattels held in common, and appropriated the proceeds to his own use, the remedy of the plaintiff is in trover, or by an action for money had and received; and an action for goods, wares, and merchandise, sold and delivered, will not entitle him to a judgment.

Williams v. Chadbourne, 6 Cal. 550.

49. One of several tenants in common has a right to sue alone for his moiety.

Covillaud v. Tanner, 7 Cal. 38.

50. One tenant in common out of possession may, in equity, as a collateral incident to a claim for partition, compel his co-tenant in possession to account for rents and profits received by him from tenants of the premises.

Goodenow v. Ewer, 16 Cal. 461.

51. One tenant in common can not have partition of a part only of the entire common property, and have his entire interest located in this part.

Sutter v. San Francisco, 36 Cal. 112.

52. A tenant in common of a water ditch can maintain action to recover his share of the rents and profits of his co-tenant in possession and collecting the same.

Abel v. Love, 17 Cal. 233.

53. Pico v. Columbet, 12 Cal. 420, has no application to the case of money received by one tenant in common from sales of water, or profits derived from the business of a ditch or mine. These operations may be regarded as partnerships in this respect, the shareholders as partners being entitled to participate in the profits. Id.

54. In trespass for driving cattle upon land alleged in the complaint to be "in the quiet and peaceable possession" of plaintiffs, "claiming the same as in fee simple," plaintiffs proved their possession and actual occupancy. Defendants then offered deeds from I. to M., and from M. to plaintiffs, and from M. to defendants, of an undivided half interest in the land, to show that plaintiffs and defendants were tenants in common, deriving title from the same source, and hence that the action did not lie. Plaintiffs objected on the ground that they relied solely on possession. Objection sustained, and deeds ruled out: Held, that the ruling was right, there having been no deraignment of title from its source, nor any proof to connect the holding of the parties with the deeds, or to show that possession was taken and claimed under them.

Woodbeck v. Wilders, 18 Cal. 131.

55. If the plaintiff and defendant, at the commencement of a suit in ejectment, are tenants in common in the premises, the plaintiff can not recover possession of the entire premises to the exclusion of the defendants, nor can he recover his undivided part without proof of an ouster.

Ewald v. Corbett, 32 Cal. 493.

56. Tenants in common, in possession as such, can not assail the common title, or call its validity in question: Held, accordingly, in an action by one tenant in common against others, to be let into possession, that the defendants could not justify an ouster of the plaintiff, by setting up an outstanding title (though it might be the true title), purchased by them while in possession under the common title; though they might assert their new title in an appropriate action, after letting the plaintiff into possession.

Olney v. Sawyer, 54 Cal. 379.

57. If several persons are the owners, as tenants in common, of a mining claim, and one of them is also a tenant in common with several other persons in the ownership of an adjoining claim, and the first-named owners lease their claim to the second-named owners, to be mined for a given term, and the one of the lessees who is a tenant in common in both claims, and superintendent of the lessees' claim, after the term of the lease has expired, as superintendent of the lessees and a member of their company, sells the tailings of the claim leased, and accounts to the lessees for the proceeds, the other lessors can not maintain an action against him as a tenant in common in their company for their proportion of the proceeds.

Clark v. Jones, 49 Cal. 618.

58. If the possession of one, as a tenant in common, is not disturbed by his co-tenants, and there have been no acts of exclusion equivalent to an ouster by his co-tenants, they can not claim the benefit of the statute of limitations as against his right or title.

McCauley v. Harvey, 49 Cal. 497.

POSSESSION OF ONE POSSESSION OF ALL.

59. Possession of one partner or tenant in common of a mining claim is the possession of all.

Waring v. Crow, 11 Cal. 386.

60. Where two persons enter into a contract to work a farm on shares, the one to furnish the land, teams, and seed, the other to sow and harvest the grain and cut the hay, the hay and grain, when harvested, to be equally divided between them, they become tenants in common of the grain and hay, until a division is made. Each is entitled to possession of the whole as against all persons except his co-tenant, and can maintain an action for its recovery.

Knox v. Marshall, 19 Cal. 617.

61. Where, in such case, one of the tenants in common gave to his creditor an order on his co-tenant, who furnished the land, teams, and seed, for the possession of all the right, title, and interest of the drawer in the hay and grain then on the farm: Held, that the order to deliver possession to the creditor only authorized a possession in connection with the co-tenant; but that the latter having consented to a delivery of the sole possession to the creditor, and he having taken such sole possession, the creditor was entitled to hold possession of the whole crop to the exclusion of third parties; and that other creditors of the drawer of the order can not complain that the drawee has not sufficient title or interest in the hay and grain to maintain an action for its possession. Id.

62. The possession of one tenant in common is presumed to be the possession of all, and in order to rebut this presumption and make the presumption adverse, it must be shown that the possession was with the intent to hold adversely, and such intent must be indicated by acts calculated to exclude the co-tenant.

Colman v. Clements, 23 Cal. 245.

Owen v. Morton, 24 Id. 373.

63. Tenants in common hold their lands by unity of possession, and each and every one of them has the right to enter and occupy the whole of the common lands, and every part thereof.

Tevis v. Hicks, 38 Cal. 234.

Carpentier v. Webster, 27 Id. 524.

64. One tenant in common has no share, except that which is undivided, and has no right to exclude his co-tenant from any portion of the lands. Id.

65. If one who takes possession of land unlawfully afterwards becomes a tenant in common in the ownership of the same, the moment he becomes such tenant in common, his possession loses its hostile character, and the presumption is that it remains amicable until the contrary is made to appear.

Carpentier v. Mendenhall, 28 Cal. 484.

66. The tenant in common out of possession has a right to assume that the possession of his co-tenant is his possession, until informed to the contrary, either by express notice or by acts and declarations, which may possibly be equivalent to notice.

Miller v. Meyers, 46 Cal. 535.

OUSTER OF A TENANT IN COMMON BY HIS CO-TENANT.

What Amounts to.

57. Any act of the co-tenant in the exclusive possession, which manifests an intention on his part to hold exclusively for himself, is equivalent in law to an actual ouster. Owen v. Morton, 24 Cal. 373.

58. If one tenant in common incloses and enters into the exclusive possession of a portion of the common lands, not exceeding in quantity the number of acres which he would be entitled to have allotted to him on a partition of the whole, and refuses to allow a co-tenant to occupy this portion with him, it is an ouster of the co-tenant, and he may maintain ejectment and be let into the possession of the part from which he is thus excluded.

Carpentier v. Webster, 27 Cal. 524.

59. If several are tenants in common, in a grant of land made by Mexico, of a given quantity, to be located within the exterior boundary lines of a much larger quantity, and no survey or location of the quantity granted has been made, the exclusive possession by one of the tenants in common of a portion less than the whole of the land within the exterior boundary lines of the larger quantity, and his refusal to let a co-tenant into possession of the same, is an ouster. Id.

60. One tenant in common may be guilty of an ouster of a co-tenant by excluding him from a portion less than the whole of the property held in common. Id.

61. If one tenant in common is in the exclusive possession of a portion less than the whole of the common lands, and his co-tenant demands of him to be let into possession of the same on the ground of his joint ownership, and the other, while admitting the several title of the co-tenant, refuses to let him into possession, this refusal is an ouster. Id.

62. If a tenant in common denies the several title of a co-tenant, but lets him into possession, it is not an ouster; but if he admits the several title of a co-tenant and refuses to let him into possession, it is an ouster. Id.

63. A demand made by the tenant in common, of a co-tenant in possession, to be let into possession of every part of the common lands, is not a notice to the co-tenant in possession to quit. Id.

64. If a tenant in common demand of his co-tenant, who is in the occupancy of the common property, to be let into possession, and the co-tenant refuses and does not give any explanation of his refusal, the court would be justified in directing or advising the jury to infer an ouster.

Carpentier v. Mendenhall, 28 Cal. 484.

65. A denial of the title of a co-tenant by a tenant in common, in the possession of land owned by the two as tenants in common, is evidence of an ouster of the co-tenant. Carpentier v. Gardiner, 29 Cal. 160. Spect v. Gregg, 51 Id. 198. Rickard v. Johnson, 51 Id. 545.

What does not Amount to.

66. Proof that the co-tenant is in the exclusive possession, and that he does not claim by deed or lease from his co-tenant out of possession, is not sufficient to show an ouster or adverse possession.

Owen v. Morton, 24 Cal. 373.

67. Taking actual possession of land under a deed which purports to convey the whole thereof, under a belief that it does convey the whole, when in fact it gives title to an undivided portion only, is not an ouster of the tenant in common who owns the other undivided part. Seaton v. Son, 32 Cal. 481.

Ouster must be Proved.

68. To enable the tenant out of possession to maintain ejectment against the co-tenant in the exclusive possession of the land, it is not necessary to prove an actual ouster; but proof that the tenant in possession appropriates the entire use or profits of the land, under a claim of exclusive right, or with a manifest intent to possess the whole exclusively, is sufficient.

Owen v. Morton, 24 Cal. 373.

69. If the plaintiff and defendants are tenants in common in a mine, and the plaintiff brings ejectment to recover an undivided interest, and avers that defendant has entered into possession of said undivided interest, it is requisite for the plaintiff to prove not only his title, but a demand to be let into possession, and a refusal of the demand; or more generally to prove an ouster.

Hebrard v. Jefferson M. Co., 33 Cal. 290.

Ouster must be Found.

70. A finding, in a special verdict, in an action of ejectment brought by a tenant in common against a co-tenant who is in the occupancy of the land held in common, that the plaintiff demanded of his co-tenant to be let into the immediate possession of the same, and that the co-tenant refused, is not a finding of an ouster, either in terms or by legal conclusions.

Carpentier v. Mendenhall, 28 Cal. 484.

71. The law will not presume from acts of ownership by one tenant in common, nor from his refusal to allow a co-tenant to enter, nor from both combined, that there was an intent to oust, but the intent to oust must be established as a fact by the finding of the jury.

Id.

Damages for an Ouster.

72. A tenant in common when ousted by his co-tenant may recover the damages resulting from the ouster, as well as when ousted by an entire stranger to the land.

Carpentier v. Mitchell, 29 Cal. 330.

73. In an action to recover the possession of land by a tenant in common against a co-tenant, the plaintiff can recover damages only from the time of the actual ouster proved.

TENANT AT SUFFERANCE

1. By the common law, a tenant who holds over after the expiration of his lease, was regarded as a tenant at sufferance; but this estate was destroyed whenever the true owner made an actual entry on the lands and ousted the tenant.

Uridias v. Morrell, 25 Cal. 31.

2. A tenancy by sufferance is not by the consent, but by the laches of the owner, and where the owner has been guilty of no laches there can be no tenancy by sufferance.

Moore v. Morrow, 28 Cal. 551.

3. A tenant under a lease for a term does not become a tenant by sufferance upon the expiration of his lease, and is only made such by the laches of the landlord in not re-entering, or in not giving him notice to quit.

Id.

4. Conceding the land in controversy to be public land, as claimed by defendant, and that Fremont so represented it, and thus induced defendant to enter, occupy and improve, yet he was not prohibited from subsequently acquiring the title from the government. The pre-emption laws not extending to mineral lands, defendant was a mere tenant at sufferance; by mere occupation it could acquire no rights which could control the action of the government, as the superior proprietor; and if that proprietor saw proper to give the land to Fremont or to any other person, the defendant could interpose no objection. Boggs v. Merced M. Co., 14 Cal. 279.

EJECTMENT, 26.

TENANT AT WILL

1. An agent or servant having the care of real estate can not be considered as a tenant at will of his principal or master. The adoption of such a principle would lead to very inconvenient results, and would give to servants and agents novel and embarrassing powers over employers and their property.

Mitchell v. Davis, 20 Cal. 45.

2. A tenancy at will can not exist without express grant or contract, and when it does exist, the tenant is entitled to a reasonable notice of his landlord's intention to terminate the estate before an action can be maintained against him for the possession.

Blum v. Robertson, 24 Cal. 127.

3. If the owner of land permits another to occupy land without any lease or agreement to pay rent, and such other merely takes care of it for the owner, he is a tenant at will.

Jones v. Shay, 50 Cal. 508.

TENDER

1. In an action for specific performance against a vendor who refused to make a title, it is not necessary that a deed should be tendered him for execution.

Goodale v. West, 5 Cal. 339.

2. Where B. sells and delivers to C. certain personal property, with an agreement then made that C. is to resell and redeliver upon B.'s executing and delivering to C. certain notes, and B. subsequently tenders these notes and demands the property, and C. refuses to take the notes or surrender the property, and the whole transaction on the part of C. was a fraud, his intention being to get hold of and keep the property: Held, that the tender of the notes did not vest the ownership thereof in C., and that he can not sue on them; that the fraud takes the case out of the rule that a tender of specific personal property vests the title thereto in the tendor. Lamott v. Butler, 18 Cal. 32.

3. Where a tender is made of the full amount due, before suit is brought, and the tender is kept good and brought into court, the judgment should be for plaintiff for the amount tendered, and for defendant for his costs.

Curiae v. Abadic, 25 Cal. 502.

4. A tender of legal tender notes in payment of a note payable in gold coin is not a discharge of the debt.

Vilhac v. Biven, 28 Cal. 409.

5. Where by an agreement for the sale or purchase of land, the price is payable in installments, for which the purchaser executes his notes, payable at certain times, and the vendor agrees to convey on payment of the last installment, the suit is brought on the notes after the installments have become due; the tender of a conveyance by the vendor is a condition precedent to the right to sue, and the purchaser may insist on the want of such tender against an indorser after maturity.

Folsom v. Bartlett, 2 Cal. 163.

6. In an action of damages for violation of a contract to grind wheat and deliver the flour on demand, upon payment of the price agreed on for grinding, tender of the price is necessary to maintain the action.

Vance v. Dingley, 14 Cal. 53.

7. Where a party contracts for a quantity of wheat to be delivered on demand, and paid for on delivery, in an action for non-delivery it is unnecessary for plaintiff to aver and prove a tender of the purchase money at the time of demand or before suit.

Crosby v. Watkins, 12 Cal. 85.

8. A payment to the sheriff for the redemption of land sold can not be tendered in certified checks.

People v. Hays, 4 Cal. 127.

9. A tender of the money due on a bond and mortgage after the law day of the mortgage, and a refusal to accept the money, do not discharge the lien of the mortgage.

Perre v. Castro, 14 Cal. 519.

10. The tenders made by plaintiff were a sufficient assignment to McE. of Z.'s covenants to plaintiff, that when McE. got a deed from plaintiff, and also an assignment of the deed from Z. to plaintiff, he would stand in the same position as if the contract between Z. and K. had been literally performed.

Gaven v. Hagen, 15 Cal. 203.

11. To make a valid tender so as to give the vendee a right of possession, under such contract, the money should be offered to Z., and a deed demanded of him, with an offer to execute the mortgage, if the party was unwilling to take the deed of McE. Id.

12. A party having no interest in the mortgaged premises or in the tender made, has no right to make a tender on his own behalf of the amount due on the mortgage.

Mahler v. Newbauer, 32 Cal. 168.

13. When the tender of the amount due on a mortgage is made by a stranger, and not the party in interest, the creditor must be informed on whose behalf it is made, and if not so informed, the tender is invalid. Id.

14. Where A. had contracted verbally to convey to B. a certain lot of land for five thousand dollars, of which sum one thousand dollars was to be paid down, and the balance in two months, with interest at the rate of two per cent. a month, and the time for the payment of the four thousand dollars had elapsed long before the commencement of the suit: Held, the plaintiff not having paid or tendered four thousand dollars with interest, that a specific performance ought not to be decreed.

Hoen v. Simmons, 1 Cal. 121.

15. A tender of the unpaid purchase money must be proved, as it is of the essence of the contract. Goodale v. West, 5 Cal. 339.

16. In a suit by a vendor for specific performance of a contract of sale, the avertment of tender of payment was in general terms, as that the tender had been repeatedly made, and that the plaintiff has been at all times and still is willing and ready to pay: Held, that the tender should have been stated with greater particularity as to time, but that the objections in this respect can not be taken for the first time in the supreme court.

Duff v. Fisher, 15 Cal. 375.

17. Where plaintiff has two mortgages on the same property—the property being indivisible—and one of the mortgages is not due, he may, nevertheless, file his bill and have a decree for the foreclosure of both. And if the second mortgage becomes due before the decree, then the defendant can not defeat the action as to this mortgage by tendering the money due on the first mortgage after the maturity of the second. The jurisdiction of the court over the subject-matter having attached, the court should close the controversy by settling all things involved in the litigation. Hawkins v. Hill, 15 Cal. 499.

18. A. agreed to convey to B. a certain vessel, called the Mariposa, and B. gave his promissory note for the consideration money, payable at a future day: Held, that A. being still the holder of the note, could not bring an action thereon, without showing that he had conveyed the vessel to B., or had tendered a conveyance; and held, further, that the tender of a bill of sale executed by A., as attorney for C., the real owner, was neither performance nor an offer to perform.

Osborne v. Elliott, 1 Cal. 337.

19. A tender, though sufficient to enable a party to maintain an action upon a dependent covenant, condition, or agreement, is not equivalent to performance; and when suit is brought the plaintiff must show a continuous readiness to perform after the tender.

Redington v. Chase, 34 Cal. 666.

20. A tender does not satisfy or extinguish the obligation, nor does the offer to comply with the commands of a judgment amount to a satisfaction. Id.

21. A tender, as far as the computation of interest is concerned, must be considered as a payment. Hidden v. Jordan, 39 Cal. 61.

22. A tender of the principal sum due, with the stipulated interest up to the time of the tender, puts a stop to the accruing of interest from the date of the tender.

Patterson v. Sharp, 41 Cal. 133.

23. To constitute a valid tender, the party must have the money at hand, immediately under his control, and must then and there not only be ready and willing, but produce and offer to pay it to the other party, on the performance by him of the requisite condition. *Englander v. 25. If the judgment creditor agrees with the judgment debtor, that the judgment shall be satisfied upon the performance of certain conditions, by the judgment debtor, and the judgment is satisfied, and the judgment creditor afterwards sues to cancel the satisfaction, on the alleged ground that it was fraudulently obtained, before all the conditions were performed, he is not obliged, before bringing the action, to return money paid him in performance of the conditions, nor to place the debtor in statu quo.

Gilson M. Co. v. Gilson, 47 Cal. 597.

26. In such case, the judgment creditor is entitled to retain the money paid him, in any event. Id.

27. The plaintiff, before bringing such action, is not obliged to return or tender to a third person, property given by such third person to the judgment creditor, as one of the considerations for the cancellation of the judgment. Id.

28. Evidence of a tender made after the commencement of the action, of the amount of the purchase money then due, is not admissible unless it is pleaded.

TOWN GOVERNMENT.

1. The legislature of this state has not established a system of town governments, as required to do by section 4, article XI of the constitution.

Ex parte Wall, 48 Cal. 279.

2. The constitution is not self-executing. Town governments must be created by statute. Id.

3. The words "system of town governments," used in the constitution, were used with reference to town organizations in their general features like those of other states where town governments had been established when the constitution was adopted. Id.

4. When a system of town governments shall have been established by the legislature, and when local town legislatures shall have been organized under that system, the legislature may confide to such local legislatures the right to make local rules, but it can not delegate to the people living within certain territorial limits, but who have no distinctive political character or governmental organization, the power to make laws. Id.

5. The power to make laws must be exercised by the legislature; that to make by-laws for a town, by the local legislature. Id.

TOWN LOTS.

1. Where the complaint in the county court, under the act of 1856, alleges that plaintiffs claim title to the lots under the original occupants and locators of the town, and on the trial plaintiffs proved that one Wilson was one of such original occupants and locators, and that he took up and occupied a tract of public land, at the time unoccupied, containing about one hundred and sixty acres, embracing the lot in controversy, and then traced title, by deed, from Wilson to one Crosier, in December, 1850, and from Crosier to themselves in May, 1853; and defendant then offered in evidence a contract entered into in May, 1850, between two companies styling themselves respectively "the Mendocino exploring company," and "the Union company," by which the members of the first-named company agreed to locate and secure three quarter sections of land opposite to the same number of sections selected by the latter company, and that the six quarter sections when surveyed should form a site for the town of Eureka, and that the town when laid out should be allotted to each member of both companies in equal proportions, and offered to prove that Wilson, the plaintiffs' grantor, was a member of the Union company, and in pursuance of the contract in question, and in trust for the equal benefit of the parties thereto, located the land described in his conveyance to Crosier, and that at the date of this conveyance, Ricks, one of the plaintiffs, knew of the existence of the contract, and the fiduciary capacity in which Wilson acted: Held, that such contract and the evidence offered in connection with it, were properly excluded on the objection of plaintiffs; that if Wilson sold the claim located in violation of the trust reposed in him by the companies, it was matter for them to complain of; and as defendant did not claim under or in privity with them, he was not in a position to call in question the good faith of the acts of their agent. Ricks v. Reed, 19 Cal. 551.

2. Held, further, that as there is no evidence that Crosier, when he took the conveyance from Wilson, had any knowledge of the relation of the latter to the companies, he was, so far as appears from the record, a bona fide purchaser for a valuable consideration, and therefore took the claim freed from any secret trusts. Id.

3. Held, further, that defendant can not object to the deeds from Wilson to Crosier and from Crosier to plaintiffs, that they were not properly acknowledged or recorded, because he does not claim under Wilson, there being no question as to the due execution of the deeds. Id.

4. When the act says that in case any claimant shall feel aggrieved by the decision of the trustees he may take an appeal to the county court, and requires the proceedings there to be by complaint, answer or demurrer, and in conformity with the rules applicable to actions in courts of record, it only means that if the claimant be dissatisfied with the decision of the trustees he may have his right investigated and determined in an action brought against the successful claimant in the county court. Id.

5. The action authorized before the county court, is only a mode provided for testing, before one of the regularly constituted tribunals of the country, the conflicting rights of adverse claimants to the town lots under the acts of congress and the legislation of the state. Id.

6. The mere use of the word appeal in the act does not make the jurisdiction of the county court appellate. The substance and intent of the whole proceeding authorized by the statute must be looked to in determining the nature of the jurisdiction in such cases. Id.

7. The proceeding before the corporate authorities of the town, under the act of 1860, is a "special case," within article VI, section 9, of the constitution. It is a purely statutory proceeding, commenced and prosecuted for the ascertainment of a particular fact to guide the corporate authorities in the execution of the trust devolved upon them under the act, and not an ordinary action at law or equity, nor conducted according to the forms of such action. Id.

8. The proceeding in the county court, on appeal from the action of the corporate authorities, by complaint, answer or demurrer, takes the form of a regular action; but still this proceeding also is a "special case" within the constitution, because marked by one peculiarity which distinguishes it from ordinary actions at law or equity, to wit, that the parties—the corporate authorities, or board of trustees in the present case—who are to be governed by the judgment of the court, are not parties litigant before it, or parties to the record. They do not appear at all, and yet must obey and carry into effect the decision of the court. The proceeding is in effect only an inquisition through the form of a regular action, like the proceeding before the corporate authorities for the ascertainment of a particular fact, upon which, when once judicially ascertained, the corporate authorities must act independently of any volition on their part. Id.

9. The acts of congress authorizing the county judge or corporate authorities to make entry of the public lands occupied as town sites "in trust for the several use and benefit of the occupants thereof, according to their respective interests," did not intend to give the benefits of the entry to mere temporary occupants of particular tracts at the date of the entry, without reference to the character of their occupancy, and thereby, in many instances, deprive the original bona fide settlers of their premises and improvements in favor of those who had by force or otherwise intruded upon their settlement; but the intention was that the original and bona fide occupants should be the recipients of the benefits of the entry to the extent, at least, of their interests, that is, of their actual occupancy and improvements. TRADE-MARKS.

1. The name established for a hotel is a trade-mark, in which the proprietor has a valuable interest, which a court of equity will protect against infringement.

Woodward v. Lasar, 21 Cal. 448.

2. W. leased a lot of land, on which he erected a building, in San Francisco, and used it as a hotel, to which he gave the name of "What Cheer House." Before the lease expired, he purchased an adjoining lot, upon which he erected a larger building, and for a time occupied both buildings as the "What Cheer House," the principal sign being removed to the one last built. He soon after surrendered the leased lot, with the building which was on it, and continued the business, under the same name, entirely in the building which he had erected on the lot he had purchased. Two months afterwards, the defendants, having purchased the first-mentioned lot and building, opened there a hotel, under the name of "the Original What Cheer House," the word "original" being painted on the sign in small letters, and in a manner calculated to deceive the public into the supposition that it was the same name. In an action by W. against defendants, to restrain them from using the name of "What Cheer House" for their hotel: Held, that plaintiff was entitled to the relief sought, and that defendants should be enjoined from the use of the name. Id.

3. The right or property in a trade-mark is recognized by the common law, and does not in any manner depend for its inceptive existence or support upon statutory law, although its exercise may be limited or controlled by statute.

Derringer v. Platt, 29 Cal. 292.

4. The right of property in a trade-mark is not limited in its enjoyment by territorial bounds, but may be asserted and maintained wherever the common law affords remedies for wrongs, subject only to such statutory regulations as may properly be made concerning the use and enjoyment of other property. Id.

5. The statute of 1863 concerning trade-marks does not take away the common law remedy for the protection of the same from those who do not register their trade-mark according to the provisions of the act. Id.

6. By the the common law, the manufacturer of goods, or the vendor of goods for whom they have been manufactured, has a right to designate them by some peculiar name, symbol, figure, letter, form, or device, whereby they may be known in the market as his own and be distinguished from other like goods manufactured or sold by other persons; and when original with him, the owner of such mark will be protected by the courts in its exclusive use, but only so far as it serves to indicate the origin and ownership of the goods to which it is attached, to the exclusion of such symbols, figures, and combination of words which may be interblended with it, indicating their name, kind, or quality.

Falkenburg v. Lucy, 35 Cal. 52.

7. By the terms, "peculiar name, letters, marks, devices, figures, or other trade-mark or name," as used in the statute concerning trade-marks (Hittell's Laws, art. 7134), is not meant the established and proper means by which the "articles" to which they are attached and by which they are known in the market; nor something indicating their actual kind, character, or quality; but by them is meant, as the subject of protection against infringement, something new, not before in use; something of the manufacturer's own invention, or first put to use by him; something peculiar to him, and not common to him and others; something which is intrinsically foreign to the "articles" themselves, and only serves to designate them because it has been fancifully put to that use, in disregard of all natural relations. Id.

8. The statute does not vest in the manufacturer or vendor, as the case may be, any exclusive property in the "articles" manufactured or sold, nor in their names or the words which most aptly and properly describe them; and even if such were the proper construction of the statute, it would be void for want of power in the legislature to enact it. Id.

9. If the statute goes beyond the common law, and embraces within its protection matter which relates to kind, character, or quality of "articles," it is not perceived why it does not trench upon the law of copy and patent rights, and is therefore void. Id.

10. It is suggested, but not decided, that the terms used in the statute, to wit, "to designate it as an article of peculiar kind, character, or quality," were inadvertently incorporated in it under a mistaken notion of the functions of a trade-mark, and that in respect of those terms the statute can have no intelligible operation. Id.

11. In an action to recover damages for an alleged invasion, by imitation, of the plaintiff's trade-mark for the sale of a certain washing powder, which consisted of a highly-colored picture representing a wash-room, with tubs, baskets, clothes-lines, etc., also the following legend interblended with it: "Standard soap company, erasive washing powder," followed by directions for the use of the "washing powder," and the place of manufacture, the alleged imitation by defendants consisted of a picture and label which were the same as in plaintiff's alleged trade-mark, only in the use of the words "washing powder," the directions for the use of the powders, and in use of paper of the same color as that used by plaintiff: Held, that this did not constitute an infringement of plaintiff's trade-mark. Id.

12. A trade-mark is a word or device adopted or devised and used by the manufacturer or vendor of goods, to designate the origin or ownership of his goods.

Burke v. Cassin, 45 Cal. 467.

13. A label, at common law, is not a trade-mark, but when a manufacturer or seller of goods adopts a label to distinguish his goods from those of another, he is entitled to be protected in its use, and others will be enjoined from using the same, or a colorable imitation thereof. Id.

14. An imitation of a label used on goods is such a colorable representation thereof as is calculated to produce in the mind of the purchaser of goods the impression that they were manufactured or sold by the person whose label has been imitated. Id.

15. A word, figure, etc., in common use, which indicates the name, nature, kind, quality, or character of the article, can not be appropriated as a trade-mark. Id.

16. Terms in common use to designate a trade or occupation in connection with other words indicating that a particular class of merchandise of the same general description is specially dealt in, can not be exclusively appropriated by any one as a trade-mark.

Choynski v. Cohen, 39 Cal. 501.

17. The word "aromatic," when employed to express one of the qualities of liquor, can not be protected as a trade-mark.

Burke v. Cassin, 45 Cal. 467.

18. The word "scheildam" can not be adopted as a trade-mark, because it has long been used to denote quality or kind. Id.

19. The word "schnappa," which has long been in use to designate gin manufactured at Scheidam, can not be appropriated as a trade-mark for gin in the United States, even if its former use had been confined to Europe. Id.

20. The name of the manufacturer or seller of goods may be used as a trade-mark, and the adoption of the same name as a trade-mark for goods of the same kind, by a person of a different name, is "piracy of a trade-mark." Id.

21. A slight change in the name, such as cutting off the final letter, or prefixing "Von" or "Van" to it, so long as it is an evident imitation, does not prevent its use from being piracy of the trade-mark. Id.

22. In an action to recover damages for a violation of plaintiff's trade-mark, the profit actually realized by defendants from the sales of the spurious article under the simulated trade-mark is a proper measure of damages, but the recovery of the plaintiff is not limited to the amount of such profits. Graham v. Plate, 40 Cal. 593.

TREATY.

1. Treaties made by the United States, removing the disability of aliens to inherit, are valid, and within the intent of the constitution of the United States.

People v. Gerke, 5 Cal. 381.

2. The treaty between the United States and the Hanseatic towns has not enlarged the rights of natives of those towns in this respect, as the treaty only gives them the right to dispose of land which they are prevented from inheriting by their character as aliens.

Siemssen v. Bofer, 6 Cal. 250.

3. Under the treaty of Queretaro all Mexicans established in California on the thirtieth day of May, 1848, who had not on or before the thirtieth day of May, 1849, declared their intention to become Mexican citizens, are to be deemed American citizens, and laws applicable to aliens will not apply to them.

People v. Naglee, 1 Cal. 332.

4. The treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo had the effect, directly and of itself, to fix the status of the inhabitants of the ceded territories, in their relation as citizens to the respective governments of Mexico and the United States.

People v. De la Guerra, 40 Cal. 311.

5. The only way in which it was possible for congress to admit the Mexicans in the territory ceded by the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo to the enjoyment of all the rights of citizens of the United States, was by incorporating the ceded territory into the union as states. Id.

6. After admission into the union, no act of congress was necessary to define the rights of the inhabitants who were recognized as members of the community organized into a state. Id.

7. It was no violation of the ninth article of the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, that the qualifications of electors, as prescribed in the constitution of California, were such as to exclude some of the inhabitants from certain political rights. Id.

8. A grant by a Mexican officer, duly authorized, and made in accordance with the Mexican laws applicable to California, and before the acquisition of the country by the Americans, is a title protected by the laws of nations, as well as by the treaty of Queretaro, and can not be disturbed.

Reynolds v. West, 1 Cal. 322.

9. Under the treaty between the United States and China, of July 3, 1844, and the act of congress carrying it into effect, the United States commissioner and consul constitute a judiciary for the government of the citizens of the United States in China, and are governed by the law of nations, the laws of the United States, the common law, and the "decrees and regulations" of the commissioner, until modified and amended by congress; and such a judicial system is constitutional.

10. TREES AND TIMBER.

1. The right to the use of growing wood and timber upon the public mineral lands, as between the claims of miners on the one hand and agriculturists on the other, is governed by the rule of priority of appropriation.

Rogers v. Soggs, 22 Cal. 444.

2. The possession of public land in the mineral districts of this state, acquired and held in accordance with the possessory act for agricultural purposes, carries with it the right to the wood and timber growing thereon, and this right is superior to that of subsequent locators of mining claims who need, and seek to use the wood and timber for carrying on their mining operations. Id.

3. In an action between occupants of the public lands neither party can claim a right to the growing timber thereon under the laws of the United States. The cutting or destruction of the timber by any occupant is expressly prohibited by act of congress of March 2, 1831. Id.

4. An action of trover may be maintained against a trespasser who is cutting timber, as soon as the tree is cut.

Sampson v. Hammond, 4 Cal. 184.

5. An injunction will not be dissolved, restraining defendants from felling trees where the question of boundary is in dispute, especially when the plaintiff's bond will fully protect the defendants for any delay, if it should turn out that they have the right.

Bucklelew v. Estell, 5 Cal. 108.

6. Where the defendant conveyed by deed to plaintiff a tract of land, and there was subsequently a dispute between the parties respecting the boundary line of the land so conveyed, and the parties subsequently made an agreement fixing the line: Held, that in an action for trespass by the plaintiff against the defendant for cutting timber upon the land previous to such agreement, the defendant was not estopped by the agreement in showing title in himself previous thereto. It was competent for the defendant to show that the deed did not embrace the locus in quo, and it was error for the court to instruct the jury that the delivery of the deed and the cutting of firewood on the tract was sufficient evidence of possession. The cutting of timber by itself was neither possession nor title as against the owner.

Stockton v. Garfrias, 12 Cal. 315.

7. In an action for cutting down growing trees, the measure of damages is not the value of the trees as firewood, but the injury done to the land by destroying them.

Chipman v. Hibbard, 6 Cal. 162.

8. The damages should be estimated by all the circumstances, and the purpose for which such trees were used or designed, and not according to the speculative or fancied ideas of jury. Id.

9. Where the complaint and evidence show that a defendant is in possession of a tract of land, and claiming and holding under an adverse title, and the weight of evidence is in favor of the title, an injunction will not be granted on the application of a party claiming title to the land to prevent the defendant from cutting timber thereon.

Smith v. Wilson, 10 Cal. 523.

10. Against the cutting of timber, the owner of real property is entitled to the preventive remedy of an injunction. Whilst the timber is growing, it is part of the realty, and its destruction constitutes that kind of waste, the commission of which a court of equity will, upon petition, restrain. When once cut, the character of the property is changed; it has ceased to be a part of the realty and has become personalty, but its title is not changed. It belongs to the owner of the land as much afterwards as previously, and he may pursue it in whosoever hands it goes, and is entitled to all the remedies for its recovery which the law affords for the recovery of any other personal property wrongfully taken or detained from its owner. And if he can not find the property to enforce its specific return, he may waive the wrong committed in its removal and use, and sue for the value as upon an implied contract of sale.

Halleck v. Mixer, 16 Cal. 574.

11. A complaint in replevin, alleging that F. was seized and possessed of certain premises at the time of his death; that the plaintiffs were appointed the executors of his last will and testament, and ever since their appointment have been in possession of the premises; that certain persons, whose names are not designated, entered upon the same without authority, and cut down timber growing thereon, to the amount of about.

three hundred cords; that the defendant afterwards also entered upon the premises without authority, and removed the wood thus cut, and still detains it from the plaintiffs; that they have demanded the possession of the same from him, and that he refuses to deliver it to them, to their damage of one thousand one hundred dollars, the alleged value of the wood, sufficiently shows plaintiff's ownership of the wood. Id.

12. The averments, in such complaint, of "unlawful and wrongful," as applied to the entry upon the premises and the cutting down of the timber, and to his removal and detention of the same, may be stricken out as surplusage. Id.

13. In suits for damages for timber cut and removed, as in this case, the true rule, so far as the title to the land is concerned, is this: The plaintiff out of possession can not sue for the property severed from the freehold, when the defendant was in possession of the premises from which the property was severed, holding them adversely, in good faith, under claim and color of title; in other words, the personal action can not be made the means of litigating and determining the title to the real property as between conflicting claimants. Id.

14. But this rule does not exclude the proof of title on the part of the plaintiff in other cases, for it is upon such proof that the right of recovery rests. It is because the plaintiff owns the premises, or has the right to their possession, that he is entitled to the chattel which is severed, and that must be in the first instance established. A mere intruder or trespasser is in no position to raise the question of title with the owner so as to defeat the action. Id.

O'Connor v. Corbitt, 3 Cal. 370.

3. An action of trespass may be maintained against a trespasser who is cutting timber, as soon as the timber is cut.

Sampson v. Hammond, 4 Cal. 184.

4. According to common law rules, a plaintiff can not, by mere notice, bring in parties not sued in an action for trespass, when there is no pretense that they were trespassers.

Pico v. Webster, 14 Cal. 202.

5. The fact that the parties in possession of a gold mine are foreigners, and have not obtained a license, affords no apology for trespass. Mitchell v. Hagood, 6 Cal. 148.

6. The statute making possessory rights of settlers on public lands for agricultural or grazing purposes yield to the rights of miners has legalized what would otherwise be a trespass, and the act can not be extended, by implication, to a class of cases not especially provided for.

Weimer v. Lowery, 11 Cal. 104.

7. One who claims public lands in this state, for raising fruit trees or crops, can not enjoin miners from digging up the same for mining purposes, unless he can show that his fruit trees were planted or crops sown before the land was located for mining.

Ensminger v. McIntire, 23 Cal. 593.

AS TO REAL ESTATE.

8. A person has no right to construct a ditch through the inclosure of another without his consent.

Weimer v. Lowrey, 11 Cal. 104.

9. Where plaintiff and defendant hold under a common source of title, it is not necessary, upon a question of title, for either to go beyond that source; but the mere production of a deed from a stranger to plaintiff, without other proof, is not sufficient to show either that such stranger had title, or that his grantee entered under, or holds in subordination to the deed.

Woodbeck v. Wilders, 18 Cal. 131.

10. The owner of real estate has a right to remove a trespasser from his premises, using, however, only so much force as may be necessary for that purpose.

McCarty v. Fremont, 23 Cal. 196.

11. In consequence of the stable and permanent nature of real estate, the rule of the common law, which is in force in this state, is, that an injury to it is not indictable, and therefore to steal anything adhering to the soil is not indictable.

People v. Williams, 35 Cal. 671.

12. In replevin for hogs distrained under the act of March 26, 1857, the court found that the "defendant had caught the said hogs in traps on his land, and had hauled them in wagons to the pen," and that certain persons, selected by the constable without notice to the plaintiff, and in his absence, and who were not sworn nor acting on the testimony of sworn witnesses, appraised the damages "committed by said hogs in destroying fifteen acres of grain, which defendant claimed was destroyed by said hogs." Held, that such facts do not tend to prove the trespass.

Kusel v. Sharkey, 46 Cal. 3.

13. One who enters wrongfully upon the land of another is a trespasser, and he does not cease to be such, so that an action will not lie against him for a trespass, because he is allowed for one month after his entry to remain in the undisturbed possession. Meyers v. Farquharson, 46 Cal. 191.

14. An action can not be maintained for a trespass committed on land when the plaintiff is totally disseised, and the defendant is in the adverse possession thereof.

Raffetto v. Fiori, 50 Cal. 363.

15. In an action to recover damages for a trespass alleged to have been committed by destroying the plaintiff's fences, and by trampling and destroying the grain and herbage growing on his land, the plaintiff can not recover for injury done to the grain by the cattle of a third person, for any period of time after the original entry and trespass.

Berry v. S. F. & N. P. Co., 50 Cal. 435.

16. In trespass, quare clausum fregit, it is incumbent on the plaintiff to show that he was in the actual possession of the premises at the time of the alleged trespass, and the defendant may prove, under a general denial, that a tenant of the plaintiff was in the actual possession.

Uttendorfer v. Saegers, 50 Cal. 496.

17. An action for forcibly entering upon land owned and possessed by the plaintiff, and tearing down a dwelling-house and out-buildings, and carrying away the materials of which they were built, and for digging up and carrying away fruit trees, is quare clausum fregit. Id.

18. If the plaintiff, in a complaint for cutting down trees on his land, does not aver that the defendant cut them down knowingly, willfully, or maliciously, he can not recover the treble damages given in the two hundred and fifty-first section of the old practice act. Barnes v. Jones, 51 Cal. 303.

19. If the complaint contains such averment, and it is found that the timber was cut down through a mistake as to where the boundary line was, the plaintiff can not recover treble damages. Id.

20. Without such averment, the plaintiff may recover simple damages. Id.

AS TO PERSONAL PROPERTY AND RIGHTS.

21. The owner of property, in the possession of the same, has a right to use so much force as is necessary to prevent a forcible trespass. People v. Payne, 8 Cal. 341.

22. Where a trespasser goes with the intent and with the means to commit a felony, if necessary to accomplish the end intended, the owner of the property may repel force by force. Id.

23. An officer, when he puts a receiver in possession of the property of another, against whom he has no process, or asserts through himself or another an unlawful dominion over such property, is a trespasser.

Rowe v. Bradley, 12 Cal. 226.

24. No ouster is necessary to maintain an action of trespass; any unlawful entry is enough. Id.

25. L. recovered judgment against R. Co., from which R. Co. appealed to the supreme court, where the judgment was modified by reducing the rate of interest and striking out the requirement for its payment in gold coin. No stay of proceedings, pending said appeal, having been obtained, L. caused the mining claims of R. Co. to be sold under execution, issued on said judgment before said reversal, and became the purchaser for the amount of his judgment, he paying to the sheriff his legal fees, and giving receipt on his judgment for the amount of his bid. Within six months thereafter L. received from the working of said claims seven thousand dollars over the expenses for said work: Held, first, on the assumption that said modification of judgment per se rendered said sale void; that the working of said claims by L. was a trespass, and he a tortfeasor, and not a debtor of R. Co. in the sense of the statute in relation to attachments (practice act, sec. 126); second, that while R. Co., at their option, could hold L. responsible as tortfeasor, or by waiving the tort, treat him as their debtor, yet until the tort should be so waived by R. Co., neither they nor their creditors could treat L. as a debtor for said amount realized by him from working said claims. Johnson v. Lamping, 34 Cal. 293.

26. Where, in such a case, R. Co. had ceased to work said claims before said sale, and immediately after it had been made, entered into a contract with L., by which it was stipulated that R. Co. should work the claims during the time allowed for redemption, and pay the gross proceeds to L., who should pay the expenses of said working, and pay wages to R. Co. for said working, whether the claims should yield a profit or not, and under said contract L. received from R. Co. gold dust of the value of said seven thousand dollars over the expenses of such work: Held, that such contract was valid, and said gold dust became the property of L., and thereby he became neither debtor nor tortfeasor. Id.

REMEDIES.

27. An action can not be maintained against A. to recover damages for a trespass to real estate committed by B.

Stevenson v. Lick, 1 Cal. 128.

28. Possession in the plaintiff is sufficient to enable him to maintain trespass; and although a higher title may be attempted to be set up, the failure to sustain it will not operate against the right to recover damages. McCarron v. O'Connell, 7 Cal. 152.

29. In an action for nuisance or trespass, the defendant has no right to inquire into the good faith of the plaintiff's possession.

Eberhard v. Tuolumne W. Co., 4 Cal. 308.

30. The lines of a quarter section of government land which are distinctly marked by natural boundaries, and by stakes placed at convenient distances, so that the lines can be readily traced, are sufficient to authorize the occupant to maintain an action for a trespass thereon, under the provisions of the act of April 11, 1850.

Taylor v. Woodward, 10 Cal. 90.

31. It does not matter that such lines were marked out before the passage of the act, any more than it does that the possession was anterior to its passage. Id.

32. Nor does it make any difference when the act has been repealed, if the plaintiff's right accrued and the trespass of the defendant occurred prior to such repeal. The right of action being complete, the repeal of the act would not divest such right. Id.

33. In suits for damages for timber cut and removed, as in this case, the true rule, as far as the title to the land is concerned, is this: The plaintiff out of possession can not sue for the property severed from the freehold, when the defendant is in possession of the premises from which the property was severed—holding them adversely, in good faith, under claim and color of title; in other words, the personal action can not be made the means of litigating and determining the title to the real property as between conflicting claimants.

Halleck v. Mixer, 16 Cal. 574.

34. But this rule does not exclude the proof of title on the part of the plaintiff in other cases, for it is upon such proof that the right of recovery rests. It is because the plaintiff owns the premises, or has the right to their possession, that he is entitled to the chattel which is severed, and that must be in the first instance established. A mere intruder or trespasser is in no position to raise the question of title with the owner so as to defeat the action. Id.

35. An action can be maintained by the mortgagee of real estate to recover damages for wrongful and fraudulent injuries done to the mortgaged property, by which the security of the mortgage has been impaired.

Robinson v. Russell, 24 Cal. 467.

36. A party can not recover for injuries done by cattle of defendant breaking into plaintiff's close, unless the land entered be inclosed by a fence of the character described by statute, or at least by an inclosure equivalent, in its capacity to exclude cattle, to the statutory fence.

Comerford v. Dupuy, 17 Cal. 308.

37. Plaintiffs sue defendants for damages for their alleged trespasses upon a certain portion of quartz mining claims, alleged in the complaint to be the property and in the possession of plaintiffs, asking an injunction against further trespasses, which was granted, the complaint averring the insolvency of defendants. The defendants deny all the allegations of the complaint, and claim ownership. The jury found generally "for defendants," and judgment was rendered in their favor for costs. Defendants then moved to amend the judgment by adding thereto the words "and that the injunction heretofore granted be, and the same is hereby dissolved," which was refused; but the judgment was so modified as to permit defendants to work the surface diggings set up in their answer: Held, that the action amounted to an action of trespass, with an injunction as ancillary thereto; and that the action itself having failed by the verdict for defendants, the injunction falls with it, and should have been dissolved.

Brennan v. Gaston, 17 Cal. 372.

38. This conclusion does not trench upon the positions, first, that a judgment in trespass does not necessarily determine the title to the real estate alleged to be trespassed on; and, second, that upon a proper state of facts, an injunction may be a proper remedy upon an original bill in equity, to enjoin trespass and waste where the injury is irreparable and goes to the destruction of the inheritance. Id.

39. Action for damages for trespass alleged to have been committed by defendants upon certain quartz-mining claims; and also for a perpetual injunction against future trespasses; which was granted. Defendants deny all the allegations of the complaint, and set up ownership of certain mining ground. Verdict generally "for defendants," and judgment in their favor for costs. Defendants move to amend the judgment by dissolving the injunction; motion denied, but the judgment modified so as to permit defendants to work the ground set up in their answer. After the term had expired, defendants appeal from this order refusing to dissolve the injunction, and subsequently, upon defendants giving bond, the judge, in chambers, made an ex parte order directing plaintiffs to yield possession of the ground described in the answer to defendants, which order plaintiffs refused to obey; and then followed an order to show cause why they should not be punished for contempt: Held, that the court had no power to make the ex parte order for the restitution of possession or the induction of defendants into possession of the premises, as this was in effect to decide the whole controversy in limine, and to execute the judgment by an ex parte order; that the possession by plaintiffs of the premises was property, and could not be disposed of except in due course of law; and that all the subsequent orders, for contempt, etc., being dependent on this, fall with it. Id.

40. In an action for a trespass upon a mining claim, where the complaint avers that defendants are working upon and extracting the mineral from the claim, and prays for a perpetual injunction, and the answer admits the entry and work and takes issue upon the title; if a jury to whom the issue of title is submitted, find in favor of the plaintiffs, it is the duty of the court to decree the equitable relief sought, and enjoin the defendants from future trespasses.

McLaughlin v. Kelly, 22 Cal. 211.

41. The complaint charged that defendants had wrongfully entered upon a tract of mining ground (described by metes and bounds) owned by the plaintiffs, and had extracted therefrom gold-bearing earth of the value of one thousand dollars, and that they threatened to continue their wrongful acts, and prayed for damages in the sum of one thousand dollars, and for a perpetual injunction. The answer set up title in defendants to a specific portion of the tract claimed by plaintiffs, and denied that they had worked upon any other portion than that to which they thus asserted title. Id.

42. The plaintiff is not entitled to recover damages for a trespass quare clausum fregit, alleged in his complaint to have been committed on his own land, when in fact the trespass was committed upon another piece of land. Doherty v. Thayer, 31 Cal. 140.

43. If the complaint in an action to recover damages for an alleged trespass, avers that the defendant unlawfully entered on plaintiff's land and tore down a gate, the gist of the action is the entry, and the removal of the gate is mere matter of aggravation; and if the plaintiff fail to prove the gist he can not recover for the matter of aggravation.

Pico v. Colimas, 32 Cal. 578.

44. Where a sheriff under an execution against McGrane, and at the direction of the judgment creditor, Williston, seized upon certain property, including wheat and barley, in possession of Goodyear, who had purchased in good faith and for value of McGrane, after the crop was cut and stacked; and at the same time, the sheriff, having in his hands a mortgage given by McGrane to Williston upon the crop while growing, took possession of the wheat and barley, also under such mortgage, and placed all the property seized in possession of Casey, as his keeper, as agent of Williston: Held, that these facts established a joint taking by the sheriff and judgment creditor, which, if wrongful, would sustain an action against them jointly as trespassers.

Goodyear v. Williston, 42 Cal. 11.

45. Although a person gets upon a railroad car wrongfully and as a trespasser, for the purpose of riding without paying his fare, yet the conductor, if he resolves to exercise his right to remove him, must do so prudently, and in such a manner as not to endanger his personal safety. If he do not exercise this prudence, and injury result, the company can not absolve itself from liability on the ground that the wrong was mutual.

Kline v. C. P. R. Co., 37 Cal. 400.

46. The court will not interfere, by injunction, to restrain the commission of naked trespasses, where there is no waste committed.

N. C. & S. C. Co. v. Kidd, 37 Cal. 282.

47. The plaintiff in an action quare clausum fregit, may prove several distinct trespasses committed at various times, if in his complaint he alleges the time of one trespass and that others were afterwards committed.

Brady v. Bronson, 45 Cal. 640.

48. A plaintiff, who recovers in trespass quare clausum fregit does not thereby become vested with the title, or succeed to the interest, which the defendant in such action may have had in the property.

Williams v. Sutton, 43 Cal. 65.

49. Where a trespass is continuous, as in the trespass of cattle upon land day after day, the party injured is not authorized to divide it up into several causes of action, either with respect to the means by which the trespass was committed or the time of its commission, so as to maintain separate actions or proceedings for each cause of action. De la Guerra v. Newhall, 53 Cal. 141.

50. The eighth section of the act of February 4, 1874, "to protect agriculture, and to prevent the trespassing of animals upon private property in certain counties," does not contemplate a recovery of a part of the damages for the trespass by proceeding under the act, and another part of the damages for a portion of the same trespass by means of an action at law. Id.

51. In an action for damages caused by the trespassing of cattle upon grain, whether the action be in the nature of trespass, or founded upon an express promise to pay such damages, it is error to instruct the jury that if one man's stock trespasses upon another's grain, the law implies a promise on the part of the owner of the stock to pay all damages done.

Van Valkenburg v. McCauley, 53 Cal. 706.

EVIDENCE IN.

52. Where several defendants are declared against jointly, but no joint trespass is proved, the plaintiff can introduce evidence of a several trespass against one of the defendants, and recover against such defendant. Aliter, if a joint trespass has been proved.

McCarron v. O'Connell, 7 Cal. 152.

53. Where the complaint and evidence show that a defendant is in possession of a tract of land, and claiming and holding under an adverse title, and the weight of evidence is in favor of his title, an injunction will not be granted, on the application of a party claiming title to the land, to prevent the defendant from cutting timber thereon.

Smith v. Wilson, 10 Cal. 528.

54. A defendant who has not been served with process is not a competent witness for his co-defendant in an action of trespass.

Gates v. Nash, 6 Cal. 194.

55. The lessor of plaintiff is a competent witness in an action of trespass to the leased premises, where the lease does not bind him to protect plaintiff against trespassers.

McCormick v. Bailey, 10 Cal. 232.

56. In an action of trespass against a sheriff where he is declared against personally, and not as sheriff, it is competent to prove that the defendant was sheriff, and that his deputy, as such, committed the trespass.

Poinsett v. Taylor, 6 Cal. 79.

57. In an action against a sheriff for seizing and selling certain personal property alleged to belong to plaintiff, under an execution against one Teal, it being averred in the answer that the property belonged to Teal: Held, that evidence tending to prove that it was partnership property of Teal and plaintiff was proper, and that if they were partners, and as such owned the property, plaintiff could not recover.

Hughes v. Boring, 16 Cal. 82.

58. In an action of trespass for entering upon the mining ground of plaintiff, and digging the same up and converting the gold-bearing earth, the vendor of plaintiff is a competent witness, although a part of the purchase money is still due him.

Rowe v. Bradley, 12 Cal. 230.

59. In an action for damages for the diversion of water from the plaintiff's ditch, the deposition of one of the owners of the ditch was taken by plaintiff, and subsequently and before the trial the witness conveyed, by deed, his interest in the ditch to plaintiff: Held, that such deed of conveyance did not pass the witness' right to the damages, and hence he was an incompetent witness.

Kimball v. Gearhart, 12 Cal. 27.

60. In trespass for driving cattle upon plaintiff's land, and by means thereof trampling on, consuming and destroying the grass and herbage, and tearing up, subverting and spoiling the soil: Held, that plaintiff could ask a witness: "What would have been the injury to the land by turning in two hundred head of cattle on the twelfth, thirteenth, and fourteenth of April, and letting them remain in six or seven days?" and "What would it be worth to turn in two hundred or three hundred cattle, and pasture them for six or seven days in the field spoken of?" that the questions, as put and answered, amounted to little, if anything, more than an estimate of the value of the pasturage or grass.

Woodbeck v. Wilders, 18 Cal. 131.

61. Plaintiffs own mining claims called the "Columbus claims." Defendants own claims, called the "Dayton claims," on the west of plaintiffs' claims. The boundary line between the claims is the point of dispute. Plaintiffs aver that defendants are working ground over the line and on plaintiffs' claims, and bring trespass. Defendants deny, the pleadings being verified, that they are working on plaintiffs' ground, and claim to own it; they also set up that they are owners of certain claims known as the "Eureka claims," lying on the east of the Dayton claims. Defendants on the trial offered to show that at the time of the alleged trespass the "Eureka company" owned the ground said to have been trespassed on, and that defendants had purchased it from the "Eureka company" before this suit: Held, that defendants were entitled to prove their title from the "Eureka company,"—plaintiffs objecting for irrelevancy, and that the title had not been pleaded.

TRIAL, DEFINED.

1. A trial is the examination before a competent tribunal, according to the law of the land, of the facts, or a question of law put in issue in a cause, for the purpose of determining such issue.

Anderson v. Pennie, 32 Cal. 265.

2. Until a decision of the court has been entered in the minutes, or reduced to writing by the judge, and signed by him and filed by the clerk, a case has not been tried.

Hastings v. Hastings, 31 Cal. 95.

TRIAL, GENERALLY.

3. Causes may be removed from one district or county to another county or district, in the manner provided by statute.

Reyes v. Sanford, 5 Cal. 117.

4. If the complaint avers that the defendant brought a false charge against the plaintiff, and threatened to publish the same and injure his credit unless he paid a false account, and that by reason of the false charge and threats he paid the same without other consideration, and prays judgment for the money thus paid, the payment of the money without consideration is the gist of the plaintiff's cause of action, and upon that issue he holds the affirmative. If he fails to offer any evidence of the facts tending to show a want of consideration, a nonsuit should be granted.

Kohler v. Wells, 26 Cal. 606.

5. The power of opening up a case after it has been once submitted, rests in the sound discretion of the court hearing the cause, and as a general rule will not be revised.

Pinkham v. McFarland, 5 Cal. 137.

6. A plaintiff must be confined to the allegations in his complaint.

Branger v. Chevalier, 9 Cal. 353.

7. Where the facts stated in the complaint are proved on the trial, and found to constitute a good cause of action, the plaintiff is entitled to judgment thereupon.

Crosby v. McDermitt, 7 Cal. 146.

8. During the progress of a case on trial, parties can not be heard otherwise than through the attorneys of record. If a release or other paper has been executed by one of the parties, it should be pleaded.

Turner v. Caruthers, 17 Cal. 431.

9. When a case, involving questions of law and of equity, is brought before the court for trial without a jury, the more regular and orderly practice is, first, to dispose of the equitable branch of the case.

Martin v. Zellerbach, 38 Cal. 300.

10. In such case, it should distinctly appear from the record that the issues on the equity side of the court were first tried and disposed of; or, if the whole action and all the issues were tried and submitted together, that fact should appear. Id.

11. In an action for recovery of land, brought against many defendants holding separate portions thereof, and having no common interest, and who rely upon different sources of title, it is the duty of the court, on the motion of defendants, to order separate trials. It is likewise the duty of the court, without any motion therefor, to order separate trials, whenever, to the satisfaction of the court, it appears that the parcels of land in controversy are separate and distinct, and the several classes of defendants rely on different sources of title.

Judson v. Malloy, 40 Cal. 299.

12. The responsibility of an erroneous order or decision, made on motion, or at the request of one of many defendants, will attach alike to all the defendants, unless it appears that the order or decision was clearly restricted, or would necessarily apply only to particular defendants or parcels of property. Id.

13. The position of a cause on the calendar will not be changed to a different day from that on which it is set by the clerk, whether upon stipulation or motion, except for good cause shown.

Wetmore v. San Francisco, 43 Cal. 37.

14. When two actions are pending at the same time, and between the same parties, to recover possession of the same tract of land, and in the absence of the plaintiff, one is tried and judgment rendered for the defendant, and the defendant then pleads the judgment as a bar in the other action, the plaintiff is still entitled to have the other action tried.

People v. De la Guerra, 43 Cal. 225.

JURY TRIAL.

In Law Cases.

15. In chancery cases the parties have no right to demand a trial by jury, but in all cases at law, it is a right which can be insisted upon and enforced.

Cahoon v. Levy, 5 Cal. 294.

16. Our statute as to referring cases applies solely to equity causes. The right of trial by jury in all common law actions is secured by the constitution of this state.

Grim v. Norris, 19 Cal. 140.

17. The language of the constitution as to the right of trial by jury was used with reference to the right as it exists at common law. This right of trial by jury can not be claimed in equity cases, unless an issue of fact be framed for the jury, under the direction of the court.

Koppikus v. State Cap. Com., 16 Cal. 248.

18. After judgment by default, in ejectment, a jury trial can not be awarded, there being no issue. Smith v. Billett, 15 Cal. 23.

19. Failure of defendant in ejectment to appear when the cause is called for trial, an answer being in, authorizes the court to try it without a jury.

Doll v. Feller, 16 Cal. 432.

20. The right of trial by jury can not be waived by implication.

Smith v. Pollock, 2 Cal. 92.

21. The right of trial by jury may be waived in the mode prescribed by law.

Russell v. Elliott, 2 Cal. 245.

22. The failure of the defendant to appear on the trial of an action of replevin, when the cause is called, is a waiver of a jury, under the one hundred and seventy-ninth section of the practice act.

Waltham v. Carson, 10 Cal. 178.

23. The legislature alone can determine in what cases the right of trial by jury may be waived.

Exline v. Smith, 5 Cal. 112.

24. The failure of either party to appear on the trial of a civil case operates as a consent on his part that the issue be tried by the court without a jury. But such failure to appear does not authorize the trial to be had by a jury of less than twelve persons.

Gillespie v. Benson, 18 Cal. 409.

25. A jury may be waived by the parties by a failure to file with the clerk, at least six days before the commencement of the term at which the action may be tried, a notice that a jury will be required.

Doll v. Anderson, 27 Cal. 248.

26. The court has a right to direct an issue of fact to be tried by a jury, notwithstanding the parties have waived the same by a failure to give notice at least six days before the commencement of the term that one will be required. Id.

27. In an application for a mandamus to compel a district judge to sign a bill of exceptions, which the relator alleges he refuses to do, and where the district judge, in his answer, avers that he has signed a true bill of exceptions, and that the one presented by him is not a true bill: Held, that the relator is not entitled to a jury to try the issue, under section 472 of the practice act.

People v. Judge Tenth Dist., 9 Cal. 19.

In Equity Cases.

28. Parties to a suit in chancery are not entitled to a trial by jury.

Walker v. Sedgwick, 5 Cal. 192.

29. Special issues, framed by the court according to the established rules of chancery practice, may be tried by a jury in equity cases.

Brewster v. Bours, 8 Cal. 501.

30. Where the answer contains both a legal and equitable defense, the court may first try the equitable defense, and refuse the plaintiff a jury trial, and, if the facts warrant it, grant the equitable relief prayed for.

Bodley v. Ferguson, 30 Cal. 511.

FORMATION OF JURY.

Generally.

31. The statute vests the ordering of a trial jury in the discretion of the court.

Pacheco v. Hunsacker, 14 Cal. 120.

32. The time provided by the statute, in which a jury shall be returned by the sheriff, is directory, and not mandatory.

Mowry v. Starbuck, 4 Cal. 274.

33. That a jury has just tried a case involving the liability of defendant for a similar cause of action, depending on the same general considerations, does not render the jury incompetent to sit in the subsequent case. So with regard to an individual juror.

Algier v. Steamer Maria, 14 Cal. 167.

34. A less number than twelve persons does not constitute a legal jury, without the consent of the adverse party; and such consent must be express, and entered at the time in the minutes of the court, and can not be inferred from the mere absence of the party.

Gillespie v. Benson, 18 Cal. 409.

35. If the trial jurors, although legally drawn, have not been legally summoned, the court may, by an order, direct additional jurors to be summoned.

People v. Devine, 46 Cal. 46.

36. If, on the trial of an issue in ejectment, as whether the demanded premises were swamp or dry land on the twenty-eighth of September, 1850, the jurors are sent by the court to view the premises in controversy, they can not take into consideration the result of the examination in determining the character of the land, as swamp or dry, but must render their verdict on the testimony of witnesses given on the stand, and use the inspection of the land only as a means of enabling them to understand and apply the evidence. Wright v. Carpenter, 49 Cal. 607.

Qualifications of Juror.

37. To render a person competent to act as a juror, he must be an elector of the county in which he is returned, and have resided in the county thirty days.

Sampson v. Schaffer, 3 Cal. 107.

38. Under the jury act (Laws 1863, p. 630, sec. 1, subd. 3), a person otherwise qualified is not a competent juror unless he has been "assessed on the last assessment roll of his township or county, on real or personal property, or both, belonging to him, if a resident at the time of the assessment."

People v. Thompson, 34 Cal. 671.

39. In an action of ejectment, a juror who has formed an opinion adverse to the validity of the title under which defendants claimed, is an incompetent juror.

White v. Moses, 11 Cal. 68.

40. The proviso to the act concerning jurors from the provisions of the act requiring jurors to understand the language in which the proceedings are had, can have effect by construing it to mean that a want of sufficient knowledge of the language in which the proceedings of the courts are had is not a legal disqualification of a juror, but that the court may require in its discretion all the jurors on the same panel to understand the same language.

People v. Arceo, 32 Cal. 40.

41. One who declares that he knows the defendants, and, if the testimony was evenly balanced, he would incline to their side, but would decide against them if the testimony was against them, and that he would do his duty as a juror, under the instructions of the court, is a competent juror.

McFadden v. Wallace, 38 Cal. 51.

Peremptory Challenge to Juror.

42. In a civil action, a party is not bound to exercise his right of peremptory challenge to jurors, until there are in the jury-box twelve persons whom the court has adjudged to be competent jurors.

Taylor v. W. P. R. Co., 45 Cal. 323.

Challenges for Cause.

43. In impaneling a jury, each party has a right to put questions to a juror to show not only that there exist proper grounds for a challenge for cause, but to elicit facts to enable him to decide whether he will make a peremptory challenge.

Watson v. Whitney, 23 Cal. 375.

44. A general challenge of a juror for cause, without specification of the particular grounds, is insufficient. The statute enumerates several different grounds for which such challenges may be taken, and a designation of the one upon which any particular challenge rests, is essential to its consideration by the court. It is not sufficient to say, "I challenge the juror for cause," and then stop.

Paige v. O'Neal, 12 Cal. 483.

Want of Qualification.

45. The objection to the qualification of a juror, that his name was not on the venire returned by the sheriff, comes too late after verdict. The objection, if it had any validity, should have been urged at the trial.

Thrall v. Smiley, 9 Cal. 530.

46. The object of the law is to secure honest and intelligent men for the trial, and it is of no practical consequence in what order, or at what time during the term, they are summoned. Id.

47. Unless the irregularity complained of in the formation of the jury goes to the merits of the trial, or leads to the inference of improper influence upon their conduct, their verdict should not be disturbed. Id.

48. The plaintiff's attorney made an affidavit, that since the trial he had discovered one of the jurors to be incompetent, because a resident of the state only three months. The juror also made an affidavit to the same effect: Held, that the juror was competent.

Thompson v. Paige, 16 Cal. 78.

Having Previously Served in Same Cause.

49. Where, in a civil case, Taylor, a juror, had been accepted by both parties, and subsequently, during the examination of another juror, the fact came out that there had been a former trial of forcible entry and detainer for the same ground now in dispute, and Taylor then of his own accord stated that the title to the ground had been spoken of in the forcible entry case, and that his mind was made up as to the title; and the plaintiffs thereupon challenged Taylor for cause, and the court excused him, defendants resisting on the ground that it was too late: Held, that there is no error; that where the court below exercised its discretion in excusing a juror to attain justice, this court would interfere with great reluctance.

Grady v. Early, 18 Cal. 108.

Unqualified Opinion.

50. In an action of ejectment a juror who has formed an opinion adverse to the validity of title under which defendants claimed, is an incompetent juror.

White v. Moses, 11 Cal. 68.

51. Under the jury act (stats. 1863, p. 630, sec. 1, subd. 3), a person otherwise qualified is not a competent juror unless he has been "assessed on the last assessment roll of his township or county, on real or personal property, or both, belonging to him, if a resident at the time of the assessment."

People v. Thompson, 34 Cal. 671.

52. A verdict of a jury will not be set aside on the ground that one of the jurors "knew and was aware of the circumstances connected with the affair," the subject-matter of the suit, where no objection to him was made until after the verdict was rendered, and it not appearing that he had formed or expressed an opinion before the trial, or was in any way biased in favor of the plaintiff.

Lawrence v. Collier, 1 Cal. 37.

Bias.

53. The law contemplates that every juror who sits in a cause shall have a mind free from all bias or prejudice of any kind, and if a juror is prejudiced in any manner, he is not a proper person to sit in the jury-box.

People v. Reyes, 5 Cal. 347.

54. Prejudice is a state of mind, which, in the eye of the law, has no degrees. Id.

55. Prejudice being a state of mind more frequently founded in passion than in reason, may exist with or without cause; and to ask a person whether he is prejudiced or not against a party, and if the answer be affirmative, whether that prejudice is of such a character as would lead him to deny the party a fair trial, is not only the simplest method of ascertaining the state of his mind, but is probably the only sure method of fathoming his thoughts and feelings. Id.

56. The mere formation of hypothetical opinions as to the guilt or innocence of the prisoner, founded on hearsay or information, and unaccompanied with malice or ill-will, is not sufficient to support a challenge for implied bias. People v. Murphy, 45 Cal. 137.

57. The decision of the court upon the challenge of a juror for actual bias, if erroneous, is not an error of law, but an erroneous finding of fact.

Trenor v. C. P. R. Co., 50 Cal. 222.

58. Such decision, if not final, and if subject to review, can only be reviewed on the ground that the evidence is insufficient to sustain it, and the court will not, except in the clearest case, interfere with it. Id.

Duty and Powers of Jury.

59. After the jury have once retired, it is error to allow them to come into court and receive instructions in the absence of the parties or their counsel.

Redman v. Yontz, 5 Cal. 148.

60. Such instructions will be considered important, if the contrary is not shown, from the very fact that the jury have asked for them. Id.

61. The province of the jury is to determine from the evidence the issues of fact presented by the parties; and their decision is final in all cases where there is a conflict of testimony.

McCauley v. Weller, 12 Cal. 500.

Polling the Jury.

62. There is no right to poll a jury in a civil case, after the verdict has been recorded, nor before, unless there are circumstances of suspicion attending the delivery of the verdict.

Blum v. Pate, 20 Cal. 69.

63. But in all cases it rests with the discretion of the court. Id.

64. In a civil action it is not a matter of right, which either party may claim, to have a jury polled. Before the verdict is recorded, it is a matter resting in the discretion of the court to allow the proceeding; it will generally be allowed where circumstances of suspicion attend the delivery of the verdict. After the verdict is recorded, the proceeding is never allowed. With the assent of the jury to the verdict as recorded, their functions with respect to the case cease, and the trial is closed. Id.

65. The jury, acting as a body, speak through their foreman, and his assent is conclusive upon all, unless a disagreement with the record be expressed at the time. Id.

66. Before a verdict is recorded, it should be declared by the foreman of the jury, or, if sealed, read by the clerk, so that the parties may be distinctly informed of its purport. It is irregular to record the verdict before it is thus announced, but the irregularity must be objected to at the time, or it will not be noticed on appeal. Id.

67. Assent to a recorded verdict, expressed by the foreman, is conclusive upon all the jury, unless a disagreement is expressed at the time. Id.

68. Although a juror may, at the last moment, dissent from a verdict rendered, yet that dissent must be founded on the question of fact presented by the verdict, and not upon information received from the court, as to what is the legal effect of the verdict as found.

Fitzpatrick v. Himmelmann, 48 Cal. 588.

Discharge of Jury.

69. If, when a cause is on trial before a jury, the court continues the hearing to a day which carries the court into the next term, and then, before the day arrives, adjourns the court for the term, the jury is discharged, and the court can not proceed with the hearing before the jury when the day arrives. Johnson v. Pacific C. Co., 50 Cal. 648.

70. If, in such case, the court does not adjourn for the term, it may proceed with the hearing notwithstanding the close of the term. Id.

Impeaching Verdict.

71. An affidavit of a juror can not be received to impeach his own verdict, unless the verdict was arrived at by "a resort to the determination of chance."

Hoare v. Hindley, 49 Cal. 274.

72. An affidavit of a party to an action, stating what took place in a jury-room, while the jury were considering their verdict, without any statement therein, or proof that such party was present in the jury-room, will not be received to impeach the verdict of a jury, for it can not be presumed that such party was present in the jury-room. Id.

CONDUCT OF THE TRIAL.

Special Issues.

73. Where special issues are submitted to a jury, they should include all questions of fact raised by the pleadings and necessary to determine the case, and should be separately and distinctly stated, so that each question should relate to only one fact.

Phoenix W. Co. v. Fletcher, 23 Cal. 481.

74. When, in a chancery case, the court directed that special issues of material facts in the case should be framed or settled, and stated in writing, before proceeding to trial: Held, not to be error.

Smith v. Rowe, 4 Cal. 6.

75. Where special issues are submitted to a jury, and they announce that they can not agree upon the special issues, but can agree upon a general verdict, and by consent of counsel on both sides the special issues are withdrawn and a general verdict received by the court, no error is committed.

Mitchell v. Hockett, 25 Cal. 538.

Questions of Law.

76. The admissibility of evidence is not a question for the jury.

People v. Glenn, 10 Cal. 32.

77. When, in the progress of a trial, evidence is reserved, subject to further consideration and future decision as to its admissibility, it is the duty of the judge, when the decision is made, to distinctly and expressly rule upon it, one way or the other. Such reservations should not be made without the consent of parties, in cases where the consequences of the ruling might be obviated by other evidence by the party against whom the ruling is finally made.

Sharp v. Lumley, 34 Cal. 611.

78. It is the duty of the court to decide upon the admissibility of a witness objected to for interest. Taber v. Staniels, 2 Cal. 240.

79. The question whether a judgment entered in the court below is entered in accordance with the mandate of the appellate court, is one of law, and not of fact.

Luckhart v. Ogden, 30 Cal. 547.

82. Whether an agreement between parties amounts to an extension of time for the performance of a former contract between them, and if so, what time, are questions of law for the court, and not of fact for a jury. Id.

83. Mining laws, when introduced in evidence, are to be construed by the court, and the question whether, by virtue of such laws a forfeiture had accrued, is a question of law, and can not, therefore, be properly submitted to a jury.

Fairbanks v. Woodhouse, 6 Cal. 433.

84. Questions arising on a trial as to proper parties plaintiffs, as to the validity and effect of a Mexican grant from which plaintiff deraigned title, as to its loss and contents, and as to the validity and effect of the mesne conveyances through which plaintiff claimed, and as to whether the proceedings in the probate court showed jurisdiction in said court to make orders, by virtue of which sales were had, resulting in deeds through which plaintiff in part claimed, were matters for the court alone, and not for the jury.

Gerke v. Cal. S. N. Co., 9 Cal. 251.

90. Where there is no dispute as to the facts, and the law upon those facts declares a transaction fraudulent, it is not a question for the jury. The court, in such case, may direct the jury how to find, or set aside the verdict, if they find to the contrary.

Chenery v. Palmer, 6 Cal. 119.

91. When the facts are agreed upon or ascertained, it is a question of law whether the case is brought within the bar of the statute of limitations; and in such case it is error to submit to the jury the question whether a demand is barred by the statute.

Reed v. Swift, 45 Cal. 255.

92. The question as to what facts are admitted by the pleadings is one for the court and not for the jury; and the court should not submit such a question to a jury.

Tevis v. Hicks, 41 Cal. 123.

Questions of Fact.

93. To weigh the evidence and find the facts is, in this state, the exclusive province of the jury.

People v. Dick, 34 Cal. 641.

94. It is the province of the jury to determine whether the letters were written and received by the respective parties, and the terms of the contract therein contained complied with, and of the court to determine the construction and legal effect of such contract. Ellis v. Crawford, 39 Cal. 523.

Weaver v. Page, 6 Cal. 681.

107. The existence of the conditions making one a pre-emptioner, and the performance of the acts necessary to give a right of pre-emption, are facts for the jury to find from the evidence, and not for the court to determine.

Treadwell*, 16 Cal. 248.

act, to amount to a conversion, must be done with a wrongful intent, either expressed or implied. Rogers v. Huie, 2 Cal. 571.

2. The conversion is the gist of the action of trover, and without conversion neither possession of the property, negligence or misfortune will enable the action to be maintained. Id.

Sampson v. Hammond, 4 Cal. 184.

4. If the parties were tenants in common, and the defendant sold the chattels held in common, and appropriated the proceeds to his own use, the remedy of the plaintiff is in trover, or by an action for money had and received; and an action for goods, wares, and merchandise, sold and delivered will not entitle him to a judgment.

7. In trover, the plaintiffs must either have the possession, or the immediate right to the possession of the property, to entitle them to recover. Id.

8. Nickerson v. Cal. Stage Co., 10 Cal. 520.

9. Where the defendant contracted with a factor, who was in his debt for certain goods, but before he took them away was informed that a portion of them belonged to another, his taking such portion was an unlawful as-

In a suit by an administrator against defendant, for conversion of the property of the estate, under the one hundred and sixteenth section of the statute to regulate the settlement of estates, the proof, as to the right, or title, or possession, of plaintiff, and the taking or interference by defendant being conflicting, it is error to instruct the jury that a mere demand on the defendant, and refusal by him to surrender the property, charge him with a conversion.

Where, in such case the defendants, warehousemen, deliver the wheat to third persons, who bought from the broker for his own debt, on the ground that they held the storage receipts of defendants to one S., who had loaned money to E. & H. on the wheat as collateral, and had indorsed the receipt, "deliver to bearer, or E. & H.," the defendants knowing at the time of said delivery that E. & H. claimed the wheat as their property, they are liable to E. & H. for a conversion. Hanna v. Flint, 14 Cal. 73.

Atkins v. Gamble, 42 Cal. 86.

16. The mere fact that the pledgee of mining stocks sells the particular certificates pledged does not render him liable as for a conversion of the pledge, provided the pledgee, upon a redemption, restores similar certificates, and has been at all times ready to do so. Thompson v. Toland, 48 Cal. 93.

17. The pledgee, as against a stranger to the pledgor and wrong-doer, who has converted the pledge, may recover its full value; for he is answerable over to the pledgor for any surplus in his hands; and if he recovers in such action, and the wrong-doer satisfies the judgment, he thereby acquires a title to the pledge. Id.

18. If, in an action of trover, the complaint, in addition to alleging a taking and carrying away of the goods, avers a detention of the same, and it appears on the trial that the defendant had sold the goods before the suit was brought, and the plaintiff recovers judgment only for the value of the goods, the defendant is not injured by the allegation of a detention.

Hutchings v. Castle, 48 Cal. 152.

19. An administrator may bring an action of trover in his own name to recover the value of personal property belonging to the estate, tortiously taken after the death of the intestate and before letters were issued. Ham v. Henderson, 50 Cal. 367.

20. If the taking of personal property is tortious, no demand is necessary before bringing suit. Id.

21. An administrator has a special property in the personalty of the estate, which enables him to bring trover to recover its value when converted. Id.

22. If a special administrator of an estate, as such, and without authority, sells stock of a corporation, which had been pledged to the deceased in his lifetime, as security for a loan of money, and receives the proceeds, which he pays over to executors subsequently appointed, this does not constitute a conversion by the estate, so as to enable the pledgor to recover the enhanced value of the stock in an action of trover against the executors.

Von Schmidt v. Bourn, 50 Cal. 616.

23. One tenant in common can not maintain trover against his co-tenant, for a sale of the common property which he is authorized by contract to make, nor will it lie against the person to whom the co-tenant sold the property.

Hewlett v. Owens, 51 Cal. 570.

24. An order of the president of a corporation, drawn upon himself as president, to transfer to a person a certain number of shares of stock of the corporation, followed by the refusal of himself and the secretary to deliver the stock, does not amount to a conversion of the stock by the corporation.

Morrison v. Gold Mt. Co., 52 Cal. 306.

25. The expression of section 3336, "the detriment caused by the wrongful conversion of personal property is presumed to be," indicates that it was intended to establish a legal presumption to operate, and which could only operate at the trial of the cause.

Tully v. Tranor, 53 Cal. 274.

26. The amendment of section 3336 of the civil code, which took effect July 1, 1874, operated upon the trial of an action brought for the conversion of personal property which took place after the amendment took effect, although the conversion had occurred prior to the amendment. Id.

27. L., as tenant of B., placed certain fixtures upon the real estate of B., and B. subsequently sued out an injunction to prevent L. from removing the fixtures. Upon a showing by L., the injunction was dissolved, and thereafter L. sued B. for damages caused by the injunction. At the trial the court instructed the jury that the mere issuance and service of the injunction was a conversion of the fixtures by B.: Held, that the instruction was erroneous.

Lacey v. Beaudry, 53 Cal. 693.

28. To maintain trover, or trespass de bonis asportatis, evidence of an actual forcible dispossession of the plaintiff is not necessary. Any unlawful interference with the property, or exercise of dominion over it, by which the owner is damaged, is sufficient to maintain either action: Held, accordingly, in an action by a mortgagee of personal property against a sheriff, for taking the same under attachments against the mortgagor, that a levy upon a part of the property in the possession of the mortgagor, and the appointment of a keeper, was a taking, although the property was not moved or otherwise disturbed, and though it was released before any demand from the plaintiff.

TRUSTS AND TRUSTEES.

1. GENERALLY.
30. EXPRESS TRUST.
42. IMPLIED TRUST.
104. TRUSTEE.
148. CESTUI QUE TRUST.
152. ENFORCEMENT OF TRUST.
173. BREACH OF TRUST.

IN GENERAL.

1. Money in the hands of an executor is held by him in trust, not as a debt.

Ex parte Smith, 53 Cal. 204.

2. If an administrator becomes a purchaser, through another person, of the land of the estate sold by him, the heirs of the intestate may have him declared a trustee, and compel him to convey the land to them.

Guerrero v. Ballerino, 48 Cal. 118.

3. Case stated where the evidence shows that an administrator, through another person, was the purchaser at the sale of the intestate's land, made by himself, and where the finding of the court below, that the administrator was not the real purchaser, is set aside as being not sustained by the evidence. Id.

4. If the payee of a note receives from the payor a note and mortgage of a third person as collateral security for the payor's note, and upon the death of the payor receives from the administrator payment of the note and mortgage, he holds the balance of the money above what extinguishes the payor's and assignor's note in trust for the payor and assignor.

Ponce v. McElvy, 47 Cal. 155.

5. If, in such case, the assignee of the note and mortgage, instead of receiving the money from the administrator, has the note and mortgage allowed in his own name against the estate and bids in the land of the estate at administrator's sale, and applies the claim in payment of the purchase money, he holds the land subject to the same trust as he would have held the money if paid to him by the administrator. Id.

6. The same rules apply as to such trusts in relation to a person who receives from the assignee such note and mortgage upon the same terms that the assignee received it. Id.

7. In such cases the trust does not arise until the assignee of the note and mortgage receives the money in payment of the same, or becomes the purchaser of the land at administrator's sale. Id.

8. If a debtor makes an assignment of his property, to a trustee in trust to pay the proceeds pro rata to his creditors, one to whom the trustee assigns the property with notice of the trust must execute it.

Sharp v. Goodwin, 51 Cal. 219.

9. If a trustee to whom a debtor has assigned his property in trust to pay the proceeds pro rata to his creditors, sells and assigns the property to a third person for value, with notice of the trust, and such person converts the property into money, and pays the creditors, they have no cause of action against the trustee. Id.

10. As a general rule, trustees and cestui que trust are regarded as so independent, that proceedings against one do not affect the other. Shay v. McNamara, 54 Cal. 169.

11. If the testator, after making a will, in which he devises all his property absolutely, writes a letter to the legatee, stating the trusts upon which the testator intended to devise the estate, and explaining how the legatee was to execute the trusts, and the legatee, during the lifetime of the testator, accepts in writing the terms of the trust, and promises to execute it faithfully, a trust is created as expressed in the letter, and a court of equity will compel the legatee to execute it.

De Lawrence v. De Boom, 48 Cal. 581.

12. If trustees have authority, in their discretion, to execute a deed of the trust property, a court of equity may compel them to execute a conveyance in a proper case.

Saunders v. Schmaelzle, 49 Cal. 59.

13. If trustees who have a discretionary authority to sell and convey the trust property, sell the same, and receive the consideration, it is their absolute duty to convey the legal title. Id.

14. Whenever by the terms of a conveyance to trustees with power to sell it is doubtful whether the trustees take as joint tenants, or tenants in common, courts will hold, if possible, that they take as joint tenants. Id.

15. In a conveyance to trustees with power to sell, and use the proceeds to pay expenses and the debts of the grantor, if the conveyance is silent, as to whether the trustees take as joint tenants, or tenants in common, courts will hold that they take as joint tenants. Id.

16. When trustees, with power to sell, hold as joint tenants, and one of the trustees dies; as the whole estate descends to the survivors, so the power annexed to the trust devolves on them, and they may sell and convey the legal title. Id.

17. A deed conveying land to a trustee who has no beneficial interest, with power to sell and lease, will be most strongly construed against the trustee, and most favorably to the beneficiary under the trust.

Sprague v. Edwards, 48 Cal. 239.

18. When a conveyance is made to a trustee, who has no interest in the trust fund, with power to sell and convey the trust lands, subject to the approval of the cestui que trust, the deed of the trustee to a purchaser will not pass the legal title without the approval of the cestui que trust in writing. Id.

19. When a conveyance is made to a person as a trustee, and he, at the same time, executes and delivers to the grantor a declaration in writing in which there is no ambiguity, stating the objects and purposes of the trust, the powers and duties of the trustee, with reference to the trust estate, are to be ascertained from the deed and the declaration; and when so ascertained, the rights and duties of the parties must be controlled thereby. Tyler v. Granger, 48 Cal. 259.

20. In a case where two parties are contesting pre-emption claimants before the United States land officers, and the land is awarded to one and the patent issued to him, and the other then files a bill in equity to have the court adjudge the patentee his trustee, and compel him to make a conveyance of the legal title, the plaintiff must show, first, that he possessed all the necessary qualifications of a pre-emptor, for without these qualifications he has no standing in court; second, that the defendant did not possess those qualifications, and that the land officers, in deciding that he did, were imposed on and deceived by fraudulent practices and false testimony used before them, and procured by the defendant.

Burrell v. Haw, 48 Cal. 222.

21. The courts will not pass on the sufficiency of the evidence upon which the decision of the land officers was based in such case, but it must be shown that their decision was induced by fraudulent practices of the defendant, whereby the plaintiff was deprived of his right to pre-empt. Id.

22. In such case, the fact that the patentee was not a citizen and swore falsely on that point in his declaratory statement, is not sufficient to show fraudulent practices on his part on the question of citizenship; but it must appear that he produced witnesses who swore falsely on that point, and thereby deceived the land officers. Id.

23. Where real estate, with the fixtures appertaining thereunto, together with certain personal property, were conveyed in trust as security for the payment of a debt, and the creditor was obliged to resort to a court of equity to secure the protection of the personal property and fixtures from detriment and destruction: Held, that the court should take jurisdiction of the whole subject-matter of the litigation, and also decree a sale of the real estate proper. Craft v. De Forest, 53 Cal. 656.

24. The land department having determined that the defendant's homestead entry, No. 304, was valid, and it not being shown that the determination was based upon an erroneous decision of a matter of law, and entry No. 304 being prior to the initiation of the plaintiff's pre-emption, there is no ground on which the plaintiff can claim that the defendant acquired the title to the land under his homestead entry as his (the plaintiff's) trustee. Powers v. Leith, 53 Cal. 712.

25. The right to an estate in reversion becomes absolute on the happening of the event which terminates the intermediate estate.

Hawes v. Lathrop, 38 Cal. 493.

26. Where it was provided in a conveyance of real estate to certain parties in trust for a specified purpose, that if the trustees should declare by resolution that the objects of the trust were found to be impracticable, the estate thereby conveyed should be determined, and the land revert to the grantor, it was held that on the happening of the event the trust deed became void, and the right of the grantor became absolute. Id.

27. N. D., in consideration of natural love and affection and of one dollar, executed to himself and his brother, R. D., jointly, a deed of conveyance of an undivided half of the rancho Dos Pueblos, in trust for his children, and, after subsequently conveying a portion of the rancho, by metes and bounds, to one D. H., died, leaving a will, wherein (after constituting three executors and enjoining upon them to pay his debts) he devised to them, in trust for his children, the rancho Dos Pueblos, or so much thereof as had not, before the date of the will, been conveyed by the deed of trust above mentioned, the share of each to be conveyed to him upon his reaching the age of twenty-one years. Bequests were also made to T. A. and J. A. All the executors qualified, but one of them afterward resigned. Afterward, and more than five years before the beginning of the suit, the other executors sold and conveyed portions of the land to H. and others, for the purpose of paying debts and charges of the trust, and also conveyed portions of the land, in professed pursuance of the trust, to certain of the adult heirs, some of whom accepted and others declined to accept the deeds, the title of two of those accepting afterward vesting, by means of conveyances, in H. and others of the purchasers aforesaid. Afterward, the acting executors and R. D. executed a deed of partition of the rancho between the two trusts, by which all of the land conveyed as aforesaid by the former fell into their allotment, and R. D. agreed to make such conveyances to the purchasers as might be necessary to perfect their titles. Afterward, a final decree of distribution was made by the probate court, by which the rancho Dos Pueblos was distributed to the acting executors, as trustees under the will, and in which no mention was made of the legacies to T. A. and J. A. No mention was made of the trust deed in the decree; and, indeed, except in the partition deed above mentioned, the trust deed was ignored by the executors throughout all their proceedings. In an action brought by the trustees in the district court to close the trust, against the heirs, R. D., the purchasers, and others, in which cross-complaints were filed by the several sets of defendants, the purchasers, among other defenses, pleading the statute of limitations and an estoppel in pais: Held, first, the deed of trust by N. D. to himself and R. D. was a valid, operative instrument as a declaration of trust, and, in an equitable proceeding, must control the legal title: It is not the legal conveyance or transfer of property, but the declaration of trust, that operates in the creation of trustees; and a trust will not be permitted to fail for the want of a trustee, even if none is named. In this case, also, the deed is referred to and recognized in the will, and the parties claiming under the will are estopped from denying its validity; second, the direction of the testator to the executors to pay debts did not.

give them a power of sale for that purpose; the deeds to H. and others were, therefore, wholly unauthorized and void; even if these deeds could operate to convey the legal title, the grantees, holding under the will, were bound to know its contents, and were, therefore, not purchasers in good faith, and took subject to the trusts; third, the deeds to the children can not be maintained, because the land was held in common and undivided with R. D.; and the executors, therefore, could not convey the undivided half held by the latter, and because the allotments were, therefore, too great; fourth, the partition between the trustees under the will and R. D. was void, because D. H. (the owner of an undivided half of the tract conveyed to him by N. D. in his life-time) was not a party; and, because R. D., under the deed of trust, had no power to make partition; fifth, there was no estoppel in pais against the heirs generally, or against those who had accepted the portions conveyed to them by the executors, and sold them to others, the purchasers in both cases having knowledge of the true state of the title, or the means of acquiring it with reasonable diligence; sixth, the decree of distribution in the probate court was final and conclusive as to the legacies to J. A. and T. A., and is as to them a complete bar; seventh, the statute of limitations has no application, the patent having issued since the beginning of the suit.

Hill v. Den, 54 Cal. 6.

28. Maria Antonio Carillo, wife of De la Guerra and mother of plaintiff, died in 1843, there being a large amount of common property. Jose kept possession of this property, and sold a portion of it during his life, and died in 1858, leaving a will appointing defendants his executors, and making them legatees of most of his property. Plaintiff now sues defendants for her share of the property disposed of by her father, Jose, and of that undisposed of and which came into the hands of defendants: Held, that, upon the death of the wife, the children of the marriage, plaintiff among them, succeeded to her interest in the common property, subject to the payment of debts; that Jose, the father, became trustee of plaintiff for this interest; that chancery has jurisdiction to settle the account, and ascertain the share and interest of the heirs; that no administration upon the wife's estate was necessary, the husband holding as surviving partner of the community; and that the remedy of plaintiff, as heir of her mother, is governed by the laws now existing, and her rights, whether arising out of a past system or the present, can be enforced just as would be enforced the rights of a representative at common law claiming of a surviving partner in a commercial partnership distribution of partnership effects left, after settlement of firm debts, in the hands of such survivor; held, further, that Jose, the father, held as surviving partner, and not as owner, and that he could not by his own act, without the consent or laches of the heir or representative, change, for his own benefit, the tenure by which he held; that he, as trustee, could not silently disavow the trust, and set up an exclusive holding in himself; and that his holding would become adverse only from the time when notice is given the beneficiary or cestui que trust of the individual claim of the trustee; held, further, that if this were not so, still Jose, the father, held the property in presumption of law, as well for the heirs as for himself; that they were tenants in common with him; that his possession was their possession; and hence he could not merely by his acts of control or dominion as of his own property, however unequivocal, change the title and tenure, unless such acts and claims were brought directly to the knowledge of the heirs, and they assented or acquiesced.

Ord v. De la Guerra, 18 Cal. 67.

29. If the husband did so sell or dispose for other purposes, he could not, when called upon by the heir of the wife, set up as a defense a want of power to make such sale. The heir, by claiming his proportion of the proceeds, may affirm the sale. Id.

EXPRESS TRUST.

30. Where a declaration of trust accompanying a conveyance of real property, provided that parties making advances to the trustee, to a specified amount for certain designated purposes, with the consent of persons previously named in the declaration, as beneficiaries of the second class, should stand as to the advances so made, in the same position and receive payment in the same manner and proportion, as such previously named beneficiaries: Held, that the trust estate was not liable for advances made to the trustee for any other than the purposes designated in the declaration, nor for advances made for those purposes by third persons without the consent of the beneficiaries.

Beatty v. Clark, 20 Cal. 11.

31. Where the purposes designated in the declaration of trust were to secure advances to pay off a debt to a particular estate, to purchase and locate school warrants on certain lands, and to raise a crop upon the lands for the year 1856; and the trustee in one instance borrowed money to harvest the crops for 1856, and to put in the crops of 1857, and gave his promissory note as trustee for the amount borrowed, including also an amount for storage on grain, and stated in the note that for its payment all the property held by him in trust was pledged; and in another instance borrowed money in 1857 to meet the expenses of future farming operations, and gave his note for the same as trustee, in which he also stated that all the property held by him in trust was pledged for its payment: Held, that the statement of the trustee in the notes did not create any lien upon the trust property; that even if raising a crop for 1856, as mentioned in the declaration, implied also the harvesting of the crops for that year, no allowance could be made on that account, inasmuch as it did not appear from the note or otherwise how much of the amount was borrowed for that purpose; that the other objects for which the money was borrowed, as stated in the notes, were not embraced by any of the purposes designated in the declaration of trust; and for the payment of the money the trustee had no authority to pledge the trust property; and, further, that he had no authority to accept the moneys and place the claims thereupon arising in the second class of claims secured, even if the moneys had been advanced for the express purpose of the trust, without the consent of the persons holding the claims of that class. Id.

32. If two partners are embarrassed with debts, and one executes a deed to the other, absolute on its face, with a consideration expressed, of both his individual property and interest in the partnership property, for the purpose of enabling the grantee to raise money by mortgaging the same to pay the firm debts, there is no express trust, nor does a trust arise by implication of law.

Burt v. Wilson, 28 Cal. 632.

33. T. agreed with M. that if they could obtain a road franchise from the legislature in T.'s name, and M. would draw a bill to that effect, and would construct half the road, T. constructing the other half, they should be equal owners and divide the tolls. M. drew the bill, which became a law, and constructed his half of the road; then, by express agreement, T. took possession of the road and collected the tolls on mutual account: Held, to be an express trust.

Miles v. Thorne, 38 Cal. 333.

34. A transfer of property by a debtor to a creditor, who undertakes to sell the same and apply the proceeds to the discharge of his own debt and those of certain other creditors, with the assent of the latter, clothes such creditor with a power, coupled with a trust for the benefit of those others, which he can not relinquish until those debts are discharged.

Handley v. Pfister, 39 Cal. 283.

35. If A. makes an absolute deed of his land to B., with the understanding between him and B. and C. that B. is to sell the land and use the proceeds to pay the debt of A. to C., C. can compel B. to account to him and pay over the proceeds.

Raynor v. Lyons, 37 Cal. 452.

36. A trust deed of real estate, taken by a person who loans money to the owner, defensible on payment of the debt, is something more than a mortgage. It conveys the legal title and an interest in the land.

Fuguay v. Stickney, 41 Cal. 583.

37. If A. conveys to B. a tract of land, to be re-conveyed to himself, he thereby creates an express trust, which B. may accept by accepting the deed.

Hearst v. Pujol, 44 Cal. 230.

38. When the attorneys for the parties withdraw from a sheriff money deposited with him as security for a judgment that may be rendered in an action, they hold the money in trust for both parties to the action, the same as it was held by the sheriff.

Hathaway v. Patterson, 45 Cal. 294.

39. When money deposited by a defendant with a sheriff, as security for property released on attachment, is withdrawn by the attorneys of the parties, and divided between them, and each gives his note to the other for one half of it, with a stipulation that it was to be held in like manner as if it remained in the sheriff's hands; after the plaintiff recovers judgment, the defendants' attorneys may be sued on the note given by them, and they can not set off, either the note of plaintiff's attorney to them, or what is due to them by their client, for their services in the action. Id.

40. If an attorney contracts with a party who claims land, to commence a suit to recover the land and to pay the expenses, and receive for his services and expenses one undivided half of what may be recovered, and the undivided one half of the result of a settlement or compromise of the matter, and the party compromises by having money paid to a third person, who, in consideration of the money, deeds to a fourth person land in trust for the party, such fourth person holds an undivided one half of the land in trust for the attorney.

Hoffman v. Vallejo, 45 Cal. 564.

41. The statute of limitations does not run in favor of a trustee, as against the cestui que trust, while the latter is in the possession of his estate, and there has been no adverse holding on the part of the trustee.

Love v. Watkins, 40 Cal. 547.

IMPLIED TRUST.

42. Where land is purchased in the name of one person, and the consideration is paid by another, a trust immediately is given and the person in whose name the conveyance is taken is deemed in law to hold as trustee for the one furnishing the money.

Osborne v. Endicott, 6 Cal. 149.

Hidden v. Jordan, 21 Id. 92.

Bayles v. Baxter, 22 Id. 575.

Simson v. Eckstein, Id. 580.

Millard v. Hathaway, 27 Id. 119.

43. When one person furnishes the consideration to buy land, whether that con-consideration is money or other property, and the purchase is made, and the title is taken in the name of another, the land will be held by the grantee in trust for the person furnishing the consideration.

Currey v. Allen, 34 Cal. 254.

44. In order to create such a trust, the facts need not appear affirmatively on the face of the deed, but may be proved by any note or memorandum in writing of the nominal purchaser, even though he plead the statute of frauds.

Osborne v. Endicott, 6 Cal. 149.

45. The fact that the party receiving a conveyance of land verbally agreed at the time with the person paying the consideration that the former should, upon demand, execute a conveyance to the latter of the premises, does not make the trust express as distinguished from one implied by law from the act of the parties, so as to exclude proof of it by parol under the operation of the statute of frauds.

Bayles v. Baxter, 22 Cal. 575.

46. If several parties contract, in writing, that one shall purchase land about to be offered at sheriff's sale, for the benefit of all, each to furnish his proportion of the money, and the buyer to convey to each, if no redemption is made, his proportion of the land, and one of the contracting parties, after the purchase is effected, on his own account purchases another judgment which makes him a redemptioner, and redeems and obtains a sheriff's deed, an implied trust arises, and he becomes a trustee in invitum, holding the legal title in trust for all the parties to the contract. Jenkins v. Frink, 30 Cal. 586.

47. If several parties are interested in the purchase of land made by one by mutual agreement, neither can exclude the other from what was intended for the common benefit; and any private benefit touching the common right which is secured by either party will turn him into a trustee for the benefit of all. Id.

48. Where a part of the purchase money of land is paid by a person other than the grantee, and no agreement is shown between the grantee and such person, a trust results in favor of the latter for an interest in the land, proportioned to his share of the purchase money.

Hidden v. Jordan, 21 Cal. 92.

49. Although a verbal agreement by A. to purchase land for B. may not be given in evidence to establish a resulting trust where the entire purchase money has been paid by A. and the conveyance taken in his name, yet if any part of the purchase money is shown to have been paid by B., a verbal agreement may then be proved which shall have the effect to deprive A. of all beneficial interest in the purchase, and to clothe the entire estate in his hands with a trust in favor of B. Id.

50. H., being desirous of purchasing a certain farm, agreed verbally with J. that the purchase should be made by and in the name of J., and the conveyance taken to him; that H. should furnish a portion of the purchase money, and that the balance should be advanced by J. and within a certain time repaid to him with interest by H., upon which J. should convey the title to H. H. having furnished the portion of the purchase money as agreed, J. made the purchase, paid the whole price, and took a deed in his own name. In an action by H. to compel J. to execute a conveyance to him: Held, that the verbal agreement might be proved for the purpose of showing a resulting trust in favor of H., and that the effect of the transaction was to make J. a mere trustee of H. as to the entire property, holding the legal title as security for the repayment of his advances. Id.

51. Where A. purchases land with his own funds, but before the execution of the deed enters into a verbal contract with B. by which the deed from the grantor is executed directly to B., and B. is at some future time to pay A. the purchase money: Held, that a resulting trust is not created in favor of A. McCue v. Gallagher, 23 Cal. 51.

52. The sheriff was about to sell certain real estate on an execution in favor of C. A., at C.'s request, attended the sale and bid off the property, and had the bid credited on the execution, but took the certificate of purchase in his own name, and afterwards had a sheriff's deed made to him: Held, that A. held the legal title in trust for C.

Currey v. Allen, 34 Cal. 254.

Millard v. Hathaway, 27 Cal. 119.

54. Where one pays the purchase money, and the deed is executed to another, the law implies a trust to be executed by a conveyance to the cestui que trust, on demand; and this implied trust is not destroyed because the beneiciary stipulates, in writing, to repay the money, with interest, until paid; and the trust is not to be executed until the money is paid. Id.

55. The purchaser of parcels of the land granted by congress to the state for internal improvements, who, before the entire purchase is made, sells portions thereof by quitclaim deeds to others, by whom the remainder of the purchase money is paid, and who thereupon receives a patent from the state, becomes, constructively, the trustee of his vendee, and holds the title for their benefit. Wasley v. Foreman, 38 Cal. 90.

56. If a party who is in possession of land, without right, legal or equitable, is fraudulently deprived of the possession by one who does not deprive him of any right at law resulting from his prior possession, and the one who thus obtains possession then purchases the title from the true owner, he does not hold this title in trust for the prior possessor, and can not be compelled to convey it to him.
Scott v. Umbarger, 41 Cal. 410.

57. If one party agrees to unite with two others in the purchase of land, each to furnish one third of the purchase money, and such party to conduct the negotiations and buy the land for the least possible price, he assumes a position of trust towards his associates, and is bound to exercise the utmost good faith towards them, and share with them all the profits of the bargain.

King v. Wise, 43 Cal. 629.

58. If A. agrees to unite with B. and C. in the joint purchase of a tract of land, each to furnish one third the price, and A. to conduct the negotiations, and buy the land at the least possible price, and A. represents to them that the land cost six hundred and fifty dollars per acre, when it only cost five hundred dollars per acre, and a purchase is made at the former sum, and A. pockets the difference between the two prices, B. and C. are entitled to recover from A. the full sum they paid beyond what they would have paid at five hundred dollars per acre. Id.

59. Before bringing an action to recover such difference, B. and C. need not offer to rescind the contract of purchase, and an affirmance of the contract by them, after they discover the fraud practiced on them by A., does not destroy their right of action for the damages sustained. Id.

60. The facts that two parties purchase separate tracts of land, from one who had located school land warrants on the same before the land was surveyed by the United States, and which location was consequently void, and that said parties acquired possession of said tracts by virtue of said purchase, do not create the relation of trust or confidence between them, so as to make a subsequent purchase from the United States, of all the land, by one of the parties, as a pre-emptioner, inure to the benefit of the other party in equity.

Collins v. Bartlett, 44 Cal. 371.

61. When two or more persons separately purchase distinct parcels of land from a common grantor, who possesses the same under an invalid title, and one of them afterwards acquires the true title to the whole, he does not hold the true title as trustee for the other, nor is he estopped from denying that the purchase from the holder of the invalid title was void. Id.

62. The tenure by which the pueblo lands are held by San Francisco is of a fiduciary nature, and can not be alienated except in accordance with the trust.

San Francisco v. Canavan, 42 Cal. 545.

S. D. v. S. D. & L. A. R. Co., 44 Id. 106.

63. It is for the legislature to decide how the trust, for which San Francisco holds the title to the pueblo lands, shall be performed.

San Francisco v. Canavan, 42 Cal. 545.

64. Where land is granted by congress to a city, in trust, to dispose of and to convey the same to parties in possession thereof, on such conditions as the legislature shall prescribe, and a condition prescribed is the payment of previous taxes before a certain time, and the person in possession does not make such payment, there is no beneficiary of the trust, and the city acquires the legal title divested of the trust, and may convey the same to any party.

Dupond v. Barstow, 45 Cal. 446.

Brown v. Brown, 41 Cal. 88.

66. If one who has a grant of land from the government of Mexico dies intestate, and then a person, mistakenly believing himself the heir, sells a part of the land to another, who afterwards, under the belief that he has acquired a good title, and without any fraud, obtains a confirmation of the grant and a patent from the United States, the patent does not deprive the heirs at law of their interest in the property, but the patentee holds the legal title in trust for the true heirs.

Wilson v. Castro, 31 Cal. 420.

68. It matters not in such cases whether the respective patentees acted in good faith, and did not know that they occupied to the heirs at law the relation of trustees in equity, for the trust arises as matter of law, and is a constructive trust. Id.

69. The respective patentees in such cases are presumed as matter of law to have notice of the rights of the true heirs, and that they hold the legal title of the land in trust for them. Id.

70. The fact that the true heirs in such case had notice of the proceedings taken by the respective patentees to obtain confirmation of the grant and patents for the same from the United States, but did not intervene to protect their rights, does not destroy the trust. Id.

71. The fact that the true heirs, in such case, were silent during the proceedings for confirmations and obtaining patents, does not estop them from asserting their equitable right to the land, and enforcing the trust. Id.

72. If a Mexican grant of land is confirmed to the wrong person, and a patent of the United States for the same issued to a person who did not own or claim to own the grant, and had no right to the patent, the patentee will be deemed to hold the legal title in trust for the real parties in interest.

Salmon v. Symonds, 30 Cal. 301.

73. The law in such cases raises a trust in favor of the party to whom the grant was made, or his successor in interest, whether the patent was taken in the name of the wrong party as a matter of convenience, or for any other reason. Id.

74. Where S., who located such warrant and had conveyed all his interest in the located land to H., and afterwards procured the patent to the same from the state, he thereby acquired no new interest in the land of an adverse character, subsequent to his conveyance to H., but after the patent he held the naked legal title in trust for H.

Bludworth v. Lake, 33 Cal. 256.

75. In such a case the law raises a trust in favor of the party holding the beneficial estate, which a court of equity will enforce, and this whether S. intended to commit a fraud in procuring the patent or not. Id.

76. The failure of the holder of the beneficial estate to appear before the register of the state land office and contest S.'s right to a patent, did not conclude him. Id.

77. R. was the owner of promissory notes overdue, and desired to have the same collected. Having no means to pay attorney fees and costs, he arranged with C., an attorney, to take the notes for collection. By the arrangement C. was to furnish money to pay costs and disbursements, and have the notes indorsed to him, and bring suit in his own name, and be reimbursed, both for his fees as attorney, and for advances by him made, out of the proceeds when collected. R. then indorsed the notes to C., who gave him a receipt as attorney, stating that he received the notes for collection. C. brought suit in his own name, obtained judgment, and had an execution issued, but the same was returned unsatisfied. C. then made an arrangement with a brother of one of the defendants in the judgment, by which the brother conveyed to C. a tract of land, and C. assigned him the judgment and paid him a sum of money beside. C. was solvent and willing to pay R. whatever was due him on a settlement: Held, that there was no resulting trust in favor of R., and that C. did not hold the land conveyed to him in trust for R., and that R. was only entitled to recover the money due him on a fair settlement.

Robles v. Clarke, 25 Cal. 317.

78. It seems that where the portion of the purchase money furnished by the party claiming the benefit of a resulting trust is not an aliquot portion of the whole, there is no resulting trust corresponding with the portion of the purchased money so furnished. Id.

79. Where one supposed he had acquired the legal title to land in trust for certain devisees under a will, and under that belief, in discharge of his supposed trust, paid off incumbrances existing on the land, and expended money necessary for its preservation: Held, that he was entitled to be reimbursed what he had so paid, with interest, notwithstanding that he had not in fact acquired the legal title to the land.

Morrison v. Bowman, 29 Cal. 337.

80. Where plaintiff deposits money with defendant to be loaned out from time to time, the interest to be collected, and principal and interest held by him for plaintiff until called for, there is a continuous trust, and the statute of limitations does not begin to run in favor of defendant until after demand made by plaintiff.

Baker v. Joseph, 16 Cal. 173.

81. In such case, if defendant used the money himself, he would be like a guardian using his ward's money, and be regarded as a borrower upon the same terms upon which he could have loaned to others. Id.

82. Where a son conveys real estate to his father, the only consideration being a verbal agreement by the father to make a will and devise to the son certain property, and the father dies without having complied with the agreement, the agreement is void, the conveyance is executed without consideration, express or implied, and a trust results in favor of plaintiff by implication of law, and he may set aside the conveyance and recover the property, it being shown that the transaction was not a gift.

Russ v. Mebius, 16 Cal. 350.

83. If, in such case, the conveyance did not express the consideration for which it was given, but acknowledged the payment of a nominal consideration in money, parol evidence would be inadmissible to establish the trust in favor of the son. Id.

84. The doctrine of resulting uses and trusts is founded upon mere implication of law, and, generally, this implication can not be indulged in favor of the grantor, where it is inconsistent with the presumptions arising from the deed. Unless there be evidence of fraud or mistake, the recitals in a deed are conclusive upon the grantee, and no resulting trust can be raised in his favor in opposition to the express terms of the conveyance. Id.

85. No implication of trust arises upon a purchase of property by a parent in the name of his child, as is the case when the purchase money is paid by one person, and the conveyance taken in the name of a stranger. Prima facie, such purchase is regarded as an advancement. Id.

86. The fact, that the stock was held in his name in trust for another, the transfer having been made simply to enable him to become an officer of the company, does not relieve him from responsibility.

Wolff v. St. Louis W. Co., 15 Cal. 319.

87. The trust, in such case, is only implied; and the seventeenth section of the corporation act of 1853 applies only to the trustee of an express trust. Id.

88. If a confidential agent, trusted by a principal with money used in trade, appropriates the money to the purchase of property for his own use and benefit, and the property can be identified as that so bought, the agent will be held as trustee for the owner of the money. Wells v. Robinson, 13 Cal. 133.

89. Where a judgment debtor remains in possession of a "water ditch" after sheriff's sale, and collects the rents and profits during the six months following, he is a trustee of the fund for the purchaser at the sale, and, if the fund be in danger of loss, a bill in equity to account will lie.

Harris v. Reynolds, 13 Cal. 514.

90. Defendants were the holders of a mortgage, executed by the Yreka water company and B. to them, to secure advances made, and to be made, by themselves and others, to said company. Plaintiff had made advances to the company, and was one of the persons intended to be secured by the mortgage, though not a party thereto. Defendants assign the mortgage, receive the consideration therefor, but refuse to pay any portion of the money to plaintiff, who sues for money had and received to his use: Hehl, that the action lies, that defendants are in possession of money which in equity and conscience they are bound to pay over; held, further, that defendants occupied toward plaintiff the position of trustees, and that the money sued for was received in that character; that it is of no consequence that the trust was created by a contract to which plaintiff was not a party, as he subsequently assented to it, and defendants can not now repudiate it, and retain money which they would not otherwise have received.

Krentz v. Livingston, 15 Cal. 344.

91. The facts constituting an implied trust can be proved by parol testimony.

Millard v. Hathaway, 27 Cal. 119.

Bayles v. Baxter, 22 Id. 575.

92. An implied trust can not exist in respect to a claim of title to land, which claim is without foundation.

Mandeville v. Solomon, 33 Cal. 38.

93. If one of two tenants in common, who have the title to land in fee, buys in an outstanding claim of title which is void, without an agreement to purchase for the use of his co-tenants, an implied trust can not be raised in favor of his co-tenant as to the void claim thus purchased. Id.

94. Where S., as attorney for plaintiff, conducted certain judicial proceedings to acquire the title to the property of H., which title did not pass, or was defective by reason of defects in said judicial proceedings, and after said relation of attorney and client had ceased, S., having discovered said defects, negotiated and purchased with defendant's money said property from H., in the name of and for the benefit of plaintiff alone, as his attorney: Hehl, first, that in law plaintiff and defendant were strangers; and, second, that in the absence of actual fraud on the part of the defendant, his title so acquired could not be subordinated to a trust in favor of plaintiff.

Learned v. Haley, 34 Cal. 608.

95. If one party pays the purchase money of land, to which another party takes the title, a resulting trust arises in his favor who paid the consideration. If one pays only a part of the consideration, a trust is thereby created in his favor pro tanto.

Case v. Codding, 38 Cal. 191.

96. Where A. agrees with B. that he will purchase a sheriff's certificate of sale of a mining claim, and take an assignment in his own name for the joint benefit of both, and A. makes the purchase, B. furnishing his proportion of the money, and takes a sheriff's deed in his own name, a resulting trust arises, and A. holds a part of the property in trust for B. Such resulting trust can not be defeated by the fraud of A. in making this agreement and taking B.'s money, when, in fact, he had already, unknown to B., made the purchase. Dikeman v. Norrie, 36 Cal. 94.

97. When the lender of money has assigned to him, as collateral security, a note and mortgage for a much larger sum, on a third person, and afterwards agrees with the borrowers, that at the foreclosure sale of the mortgaged premises, he would purchase the property in the name of the borrowers, and would hold the same for their benefit, subject only to a lien for the money loaned, upon faith in which promise, the borrowers take no further interest in the sale, but the lender, in his own name, purchases, and for a sum much less than the amount called for in the note, and makes the payment of the purchase, by crediting the amount of his bid, less the costs, on the judgment, a trust is thereby created in favor of the borrowers, and equity will decree them a conveyance, if it is in the power of the lender, to make a title unincumbered by any acts of his own.

Price v. Reeves, 38 Cal. 457.

98. A resulting trust can not be established in favor of a plaintiff upon a mere allegation of a verbal agreement, to the effect that he was to be jointly interested with the defendant in the purchase of the property, and in the absence of any averment that he paid a portion of the purchase money at the time of the purchase.

Roberts v. Ware, 40 Cal. 634.

99. The party claiming the benefit of the trust must show that the money was paid before, or at the time of the execution of the conveyance. Case v. Coddling, 38 Cal. 191.

100. Where a number of settlers on a Mexican grant deeded their claims and contributed money to trustees, under an agreement that the trustees were to buy up the grant title, and afterwards deed to each settler the land in his possession, and there was a dispute between two of the settlers as to the right to a deed of a particular piece: Held, that though the extent of one's possession would generally be indicated by his fences, it was the fact of actual possession, with or without a fence, which would entitle the possessor to a deed.

Slattery v. Hall, 43 Cal. 191.

101. If one bargains with another for the purchase of a tract of land, with the knowledge of a third person, who stands by, and becomes a party to it, by advancing a portion of the money, to enable the purchaser to complete the bargain, and if such third person then, without the knowledge of the purchaser, buys from the seller a portion of the same land, for which he obtains a conveyance, which is placed on record before the conveyance to the first purchaser, such third person will become the trustee of the first purchaser, and if he sells the land to a bona fide purchaser, without notice, becomes liable for the damage sustained.

Mercier v. Hemme, 50 Cal. 606.

102. Where K. had purchased the homestead of defendant and her husband at a foreclosure sale at their request, and received a certificate of sale: Held, that a judgment recovered against K. by the plaintiff's grantor, in an action to quiet title, did not bind the defendant, whether the money paid by K. at the foreclosure sale, was paid on his own account, or advanced as a loan to the mortgagors; that if the former was the case, the defendant and her husband derived no title or interest from K., and consequently were not his privies; that if the latter were the case, a trust resulted in their favor, but that they were not bound by the judgment against their trustee; and held, further, that the doctrine of relation could not be resorted to for the purpose of establishing the title of K. as of the date of the foreclosure sale, and of thus holding the defendants bound by the judgment against him.

Shay v. McNamara, 54 Cal. 169.

103. The plaintiff, to secure the note of her husband (given for his own indebtedness), executed, jointly with him, a mortgage upon land previously conveyed to her by him, by deed of gift duly recorded; and, upon the foreclosure of the mortgage, the land was purchased by one B., for the husband, and with his money, and was by B. conveyed to him. Afterward, the husband, to secure an antecedent indebtedness, conveyed to the defendant, who took without actual notice of the premises: Held, first, that the husband, in purchasing the property through B. at the foreclosure sale, was but paying his own debt, and therefore took the title in trust for the plaintiff; and, second, that the records were sufficient to put the defendant upon inquiry, and he was bound at his peril to inform himself as to the facts, and that he therefore took subject to the trust.

Hassey v. Wilkie, 55 Cal. 525.

TRUSTEES.

104. A trustee can not purchase nor deal with the subject of the trust, nor purchase debts to be paid out of the trust fund, nor place himself in a position antagonistic to the trust.

Page v. Naglee, 6 Cal. 241.

105. The purchase by a trustee of a debt to be paid out of the trust fund, and causing an action to be brought and judgment obtained thereon in the name of another, if not a fraud in fact, was a violation of his duties as a trustee, and it makes no difference in this respect whether his trust is created by deed or mortgage, or whether the same was void or not.

Id.

106. Having accepted the trust and received the rents of the property, the trustee can not dispute its validity, particularly for his own benefit.

Id.

107. A judgment so obtained by a trustee is void in law and a nullity, and may be enjoined at the instance of the party executing the deed of trust to secure the payment of his debts out of the fund.

Id.

108. Trustees act for the benefit of others and not for themselves, and the fair exercise of their judgments should be a protection to them. Very supine negligence or willful default will render them liable; but to make them liable for mere errors of judgment would tend to discourage good and prudent men from undertaking any trust.

Ellig v. Naglee, 9 Cal. 683.

109. A mortgagee who is also a trustee is as strictly bound to execute his trust faithfully as he would be were he not a creditor, but acting for the benefit of another cestui que trust. Gunter v. Janes, 9 Cal. 643.

110. A trustee can not by mingling trust moneys with other funds change his character from that of trustee to that of mere debtor. Id.

111. The act of either the trustee or cestui que trust, without the consent of the other, should not be permitted to change the relation or capacity of the parties. Id.

112. If the trustee does a wrongful act, then he, by the act, consents to be treated as a trespasser or debtor, at the option of the cestui que trust. Id.

113. A trustee should never be permitted to defeat the rights of the cestui que trust, so long as it is in the power of a court of equity to enforce them. Id.

114. In cases of express trust the capacity and that of the cestui que trust are created by trust, and all the legal rights and duties belonging to the one or the other are but the legitimate results contemplated by the contract itself, and flow from the capacity of each party thus created by the concurrence of the two wills. Id.

115. When trustees act with good faith in the management of the trust property, and without selfish motives, they are entitled to be treated by a court of equity with liberality and indulgence, and especially when they act under the advice of counsel.

Ellig v. Naglee, 9 Cal. 683.

116. A delay on their part in bringing suit to recover the rents of the trust estate, if subsequently approved by the cestui que trust, will excuse them. Id.

117. Money advanced by the trustees to the cestui que trust with the understanding that the same should be repaid out of the rents of the trust property, is a lien only upon the net incoming rents, and not a lien upon the trust property. Id.

118. The same is true respecting the charges for legal services of one of the trustees in the management of the trust property. The rents must be applied to the payment of such allowances until they are liquidated. Id.

119. The trustee of a naked trust has no power to mortgage the trust estate.

Griffin v. Blanchard, 17 Cal. 70.

120. Where the trustee of a naked trust is in actual possession of the trust estate, and conveys it, for a valuable consideration, to a purchaser without notice of the trust, the title of the purchaser will prevail. Id.

121. Discretionary power in the execution of a trust can not be delegated to a stranger by assignment.

Saunders v. Webber, 39 Cal. 287.

122. A trustee, acting under a declaration of trust, expending money not expressly authorized by the declaration, is not entitled to reimbursement out of the trust property, unless the expenditure was necessary for the preservation of the property, or to prevent the failure of the designated trusts; and a third person advancing money to the trustee stands in no better position with reference to the trust property. If the third person advance the money with the approbation of the grantors in the trust deed, he can only enforce the equitable lien thus obtained against the residuary interest coming to them after all the claims mentioned in the declaration are satisfied.

Beatty v. Clark, 20 Cal. 11.

123. The trustee of an express trust may maintain an action to prevent waste or trespass upon the land held in trust, or to recover possession thereof, without joining with him his cestui que trust; and should he refuse to do so, his cestui que trust may compel him by action to do so.

Tyler v. Houghton, 25 Cal. 26.

124. A trustee of an express trust is a person having such beneficial interest in the trust estate, within the meaning of the four hundred and sixty-eighth section of the practice act, as to enable him to apply for a mandamus to compel the surveyor-general to allow him to contest before him the application of a third person for the purchase of the land held in trust. Id.

125. If one who holds the legal title in trust for devisees under a will makes advances to pay incumbrances on the trust estate, and then sells portions of the property, a court of equity, in taking an account, will confirm the sales and charge the trustee with the proceeds.

Morrison v. Bowman, 20 Cal. 337.

126. Where one has received property or money in trust to hold for the security of sureties on a recognizance, a release by the sureties of all claim on the property, and a demand on the bailee, terminates the trust, and it then becomes his duty to return the property to the bailor.

Skidmore v. Taylor, 20 Cal. 619.

127. If two or more persons, as mining partners, claim and develop a mine situated upon land owned by a third person, and the partners authorize one of their number to purchase the land of the owner for the benefit of all, and he buys the same in his own name, he holds the legal title of his partners' proportion in the mine in trust for them.

Settembre v. Putman, 30 Cal. 490.

128. If one of several partners in a mine holds the legal title in the same in his own right to the extent of his interest, and in trust for his copartners to the extent of their interests, a sale made by him, without the consent of his associates, of an undivided interest not exceeding in amount the interest held in his own right, to one who had no notice of the trust, will convey only the title of the grantor, and not the interest of the cestui que trust. Id.

129. A guardian of an infant, appointed by the probate court, is not a trustee of an express trust within the meaning of section 6 of the practice act.

Fox v. Minor, 32 Cal. 111.

130. If one is employed by another to assist him in obtaining a conveyance of property, and trust and confidence are reposed in him to enable him to aid his employer in the business, and he violates the confidence and obtains a conveyance of the property to himself, he will be held to be the trustee of his employer and will be compelled to convey to him.

Webster v. King, 33 Cal. 348.

131. If one who is in possession of land, claiming to own it, finds that the conveyance of his grantor is defective, and to cure the defect, hands a quitclaim of his grantor, with an abstract of title, to an attorney and searcher of titles, and requests them to procure his grantor to execute the deed, and they undertake to do so, but instead thereof induce the former grantor to deed to one of them, who then deeds an undivided half to the other, they will become the trustees of their employer, and will be compelled to execute a conveyance to him. Id.

132. A conveyance to one in trust, to rent or sell the property, and apply the proceeds towards the payment of a debt of the grantor, conveys the fee, and the trustee has power to convey the legal title.

Thompson v. McKay, 41 Cal. 221.

133. Where the deed creating the trust conveys the trust estate to two trustees, and empowers them, or the survivor of them, to sell and dispose of the trust estate or any part of it, a conveyance by one of the trustees, while the other is acting as such, does not convey the legal title.

Learned v. Wilson, 40 Cal. 349.

134. Where the deed creating the trust empowers the trustees or the survivor of them, "with the approbation or at the request of" the cestui que trust, "expressed in writing, to sell and dispose of the trust estate or any part of it," such approbation is manifested by joining in the execution and acknowledgment of a deed by which the trustee effects the sale and conveyance of the estate.

Wilton v. Palmer, 39 Cal. 456.

135. A deed so executed and acknowledged vests in the grantee the entire estate in the lands therein described, as fully as it was held by the grantors under the trust deed. Id.

136. Where the cestui que trust assented to the deed in compliance with the terms of the trust, she could not thereafter complain that there was no consideration, and her heirs have, in this respect, no greater rights than she possessed. Id.

137. If the owner of land who is indebted to another person conveys the same to a third person in trust, and the trustee makes a declaration of the trust in writing, in which it is stated that he holds the land in trust, to sell the same at the end of sixty days, and apply the proceeds to the payment of the debt of the cestui que trust, unless within said time the cestui que trust finds a purchaser who will pay the debt to the trustee, and then to convey the land to such purchaser upon such terms and conditions as the cestui que trust may dictate, the trustee has not the right to the possession of the land during the sixty days, nor afterwards.

Tyler v. Granger, 48 Cal. 259.

138. In such case, if the debt is satisfied before a sale and conveyance made by the trustee in pursuance of the terms of the trust, equity will compel the trustee to make a conveyance to the cestui que trust or his assigns upon the payment of the amount due the trustee for his services and expenses. Id.

139. In such case the cestui que trust, or his assigns, may continue in the use and possession of the property until a sale and conveyance of the same, in pursuance of the terms of the trust. Id.

140. A trustee to whom land is conveyed by a debtor, with power to sell and use the proceeds, in payment of the debt and the expenses of the trust, and whose powers and duties are prescribed by a declaration of trust in writing, and who merely holds the title in trust as security for the debt, can not maintain ejectment against the cestui que trust or his assigns, to recover the land. Id.

141. A judge who orders a sale, and has the power to confirm or set it aside, comes within the reason of the rule that trustees, strictly so called, and other fiduciaries, can not make a valid purchase of any part of the estate, in respect to which they have duties to perform. Tracy v. Colby, 55 Cal. 67.

142. H. purchased land at an administrator's sale, and, on the day he received his deed, conveyed an undivided half of the land to C., the probate judge, who ordered and confirmed the sale, the latter paying therefor one half of the purchase money paid by H. In an action brought by the heirs of the intestate against H. and C. (the complaint alleging that the sale to C. was made in pursuance of an agreement, or understanding, between him and H., entered into prior to the administrator's sale): Held, that the declarations of H., made prior to the sale, but in the absence of C., that he was about to purchase for the benefit of himself and C., were admissible in evidence. Id.

143. A party who purchases trust property, with a knowledge of the trust, occupies the same position with the original trustee. Price v. Reeves, 38 Cal. 457.

144. When property is conveyed to a trustee to rent and sell, and apply the proceeds to the payment of a debt of the grantor, a bona fide purchaser at the trust sale acquires a good title, even if the trustee, before the sale, had received sufficient money from the rents to pay the trust debt.

Thompson v. McKay, 41 Cal. 221.

145. One who purchases land from another, who acquired the title fraudulently, and thereby became a trustee, in order to protect himself in his purchase, must have been ignorant of any of the facts constituting the fraud, not only at the time of his purchase, but when he paid the purchase money and obtained his deed.

Scott v. Umbarger, 41 Cal. 410.

146. A court of equity has jurisdiction to decree a sale of property held in trust for charitable or religious purposes, when, in its opinion, the objects of the trust would be more effectually carried out by such sale.

Aleman v. Wensinger, 40 Cal. 288.

147. A decree of sale of property held in trust for religious or charitable purposes should require from the trustee a bond, with sufficient security, to be approved by the court, for the proper application of the proceeds of the sale to the purposes of the trust, according to the directions of the decree, and reserving the authority of the court upon proper showing to require additional security, or to appoint another trustee, if circumstances make it necessary. Id.

CESTUI QUE TRUST.

148. A court of equity will not permit a cestui que trust who is insolvent, to enforce and collect through his trustee, a judgment against a party who holds a just and valid demand against the cestui que trust, which he has no means of enforcing or collecting if a set-off is denied.

Hobbs v. Duff, 23 Cal. 596.

149. Where an administrator, at his own sale, becomes the purchaser through another person of land of the estate, there are strong reasons for holding that the relation of trustee and cestui que trust is not, by the fact of the sale, shifted from the land to the proceeds of the sale, but that the administrator remains a trustee as to the land until the heir affirms the sale.

Boyd v. Blankman, 29 Cal. 19.

150. When the cestui que trust can identify the trust fund, either in its original or in a substituted form, he may elect to hold the original or substituted property, or may hold the trustee personally liable; but if he can not identify the property he must rely on the personal liability of the trustee.

Lathrop v. Hampton, 31 Cal. 17.

151. If the testator during his life-time, mingled the money of the cestui que trust with his own, and after his death neither the trust money nor property into which it was converted can be identified in the hands of the executor, the cestui que trust has only a claim against the estate, which must be presented to the executor for allowance, as required by the probate act. Id.

151a. A bond given by the owner of land to a person, conditioned to convey the land to him in trust for the stockholders of a corporation and their successors in interest, in proportion to the amount of stock held by each, with power to the trustee to sell under the direction of the board of trustees of the corporation, makes the corporation the real cestui que trust, and, in equity, it will be so regarded.

Coleman v. S. R. T. R. Co., 49 Cal. 517.

ENFORCEMENT OF TRUST.

152. A party seeking to enforce a trust against the administrator of a trustee is compelled, from the complex nature of the cause, to ask relief in a court of equity. The claimant of specific property is not a creditor within the meaning of the probate law, and therefore he is not bound to present his claim to the administrator.

Gunter v. Janes, 9 Cal. 643.

153. If the plaintiff alleges an express trust, it is incumbent upon him to prove it as alleged, but such a trust may be proved by circumstances, and to ascertain the intention of the parties, the court will consider the then existing circumstances. Id.

154. H. and others are creditors and beneficiaries under the trust of the second class; M. & Co. are creditors of the trustee claiming a lien upon the trust property, but subordinate to the claims of H. and others; M. & Co. threatened to bring suit and subject to sale the trust property, in order to reach the residuary interest of the grantors in the trust deed after satisfaction of the preferred claimants under the trust; to prevent this, and in consideration of an agreement by M. & Co. not to sue, H. and others execute a power authorizing the trustee to mortgage the real property held by him in trust to M. & Co., as security for the payment of their claims; the mortgage was executed accordingly, but by mistake the condition of the mortgage did not follow the terms defining the power; the delay stipulated for by H. & Co., and recited in the power as its consideration, was obtained in full: Held, that equity will afford relief and enforce the mortgage; held, further, that under a stipulation for an equitable settlement of the rights of the parties upon the facts presented, it is immaterial which course of the two above mentioned for the correction of the defect is pursued; that the result of either is to give M. & Co., the mortgagees, priority in the security which H. and others, donors of the power, possessed by the trust fund to the extent of the latter's respective claims, and to place these claims in the position which the claims of M. & Co. would have occupied but for the execution of the power and mortgage, H. and others preserving relatively to each other, in their postponed claims upon the trust fund, the order of their original classification. Beatty v. Clark, 20 Cal. 11.

155. A decree establishing a trust in favor of the cestui que trust, and making allowances to the trustees for moneys by him advanced, in and about the trust estate, and directing the trustee to execute a conveyance of the trust estate, to the cestui que trust before payment of the moneys advanced by the trustee, is erroneous. The payment of the money should be made a condition precedent to the conveyance.

Robles v. Clarke, 25 Cal. 317.

156. A court of equity will enforce a trust against all persons who, with notice of the trust, come into possession of the trust property, in the same and with like effect as against the original trustee.

Lathrop v. Bampton, 31 Cal. 17.

157. If an action to enforce a trust could not have been maintained against a testator, it can not be maintained against his executor. Id.

158. A trust assumed by a testator will not be enforced against the executor when the identity of the trust fund is entirely lost, and it is neither shown to be in the hands of the executor in its primary condition, nor that it was converted by his testator into the property, or any part of it, in the executor's possession. Id.

159. Before a cestui que trust can claim specific, real, or personal property in the enforcement of the trust, he must show that it is the identical trust property, or that it is the fruit or product thereof in a new form. Id.

160. Relief in equity would be limited to the contract, and a sale could only be made by enforcing the trust.

Koch v. Briggs, 14 Cal. 256.

161. From sales under such trusts there is no equity of redemption, for there is no forfeiture. Performance of the trust carries out the contract of the parties. Id.

162. The bill can not be maintained on the ground of a trust; for, assuming that the municipal lands within the city of San Francisco were conveyed by the city to the fund commissioners, in trust for her creditors, and that this trust was a portion of a contract, or so connected with the obligation of a contract as that the property was unalterably fixed by that disposition of it, the city would still have the equity of redemption at least, and could dispose of the subject of the trust with the assent of the legislature, subject only to the rights of the creditors or their trustees; or the legislature, as the paramount political authority, could authorize or make such disposition. But the title thus disposed of would go to the grantee, who would hold the land, subject only to the trust. The city could enjoin a sale of the property by the grantee, or interfere with his use or possession of it until it became necessary to enforce the trust.

San Francisco v. Beilman, 17 Cal. 443.

163. This court has not decided that a voluntary appropriation by public act, of property or its proceeds by a municipal body, when such appropriation is not associated with a contract, as part of its obligation or sanction, removes such property, or proceeds from the control of the municipal body or the legislature, or that the terms of the act making the appropriation are unalterable. Id.

164. If the the confirmee, in presenting his claim, acted as agent, or trustee, or guardian, or in any other fiduciary capacity, a court of equity, upon a proper proceeding, will compel a transfer of the legal title to the principal, cestui que trust, ward, other party equitably entitled to the same, or subject it to the proper trusts in the confirmee's hands. It matters not whether the presentation were made by the confirmee in his own name in good faith, or with intent to defraud the actual owner of the claim; a court of equity will control the legal title in his hands so as to protect the just rights of others. But in ejectment the legal title must control. Estrada v. Murphy, 19 Cal. 248.

165. M. and C. were both residing on an unsurveyed quarter section of public land, and agreed that it should be purchased from the state in the name of C., and that each should furnish one half the money to make the purchase, and pay one half the expense, and own one half the land, and that when the purchase was made from the state, C. should convey one half to M. C. afterwards pre-empted the land, and received a patent for it from the United States: Held, that before M. could have C. declared his trustee, and compel him to convey to him one half the land, he must show that the land could have been purchased from the state by one of them; that is, that the state had held the title, and would have sold and conveyed it.

McCreary v. Casey, 50 Cal. 349.

166. If a person, who desires to procure an insurance on his life for the benefit of his children makes a parol contract with another, by which the former is to pay the premiums, and the policy is to be made payable to the latter, who is to hold it in trust for the children, and collect and hold the proceeds in trust for them, a court of equity will enforce the trust; and if the trustee is an improper person to receive the money and execute the trust, will remove him and appoint another.

Silvey v. Hodgdon, 52 Cal. 363.

167. Such trust should be clearly and distinctly proved; but may be proved by parol evidence. Id.

168. A court of equity will lend no assistance towards perfecting a voluntary contract, for the creation of a trust, nor regard it as binding, so long as it remains executory. Estate of Webb, 49 Cal. 541.

170. If such contract is executed by a conveyance of the property in trust, so that nothing remains to be done by the grantor or donor, to complete the transfer of title, the relation of trustee and cestui que trust is deemed to be established, even if there was no consideration, and a court of equity will enforce the trust. Id.

171. If one who has had his life insured writes to his father and sisters that the insurance was made for their benefit, but makes no assignment or delivery of the policy to them, it amounts only to an executory agreement to create a trust in future, and can not be enforced in equity. Id.

172. If the administrator of an estate makes a sale of land belonging to the estate, under an order of the probate court procured by him, and at the sale becomes the purchaser, through another person, who takes and holds the legal title in trust for the administrator, and afterwards conveys it to him, the heir retains such an equitable interest in the land as is assignable, and the assignee may maintain an action against the administrator to enforce a trust.

Boyd v. Bankman, 29 Cal. 19.

BREACH OF TRUST.

173. In case the execution of a valid conveyance can not be decreed, the beneficiaries of the trust are entitled to recover its value from those by whose wrongful acts it was lost. Price v. Reeves, 38 Cal. 457.

174. In such case the value of the property at the time of the commencement of the suit is the measure of damages. Id.

UNITED STATES.

1. The government of the United States is one of delegated powers; the right to decide ultimately upon the extent of powers granted has not been delegated to the United States, nor prohibited to the states, and is reserved to the states by the provisions of the tenth amendment to the constitution; and therefore the decision of the supreme court of the United States on such questions is not binding in the state courts.

Ferris v. Coover, 11 Cal. 175.

2. The United States have the right to acquire foreign territory by treaty, and, after its acquisition, congress may pass laws to protect the private rights of the inhabitants of the ceded territory, guaranteed to them by the treaty, and such laws are beyond the interference of state authority.

Gardiner v. Miller, 47 Cal. 570.

3. A person who has been convicted of a crime against the United States by a federal court, and confined in the prison of the state with the consent of the state, is deemed to be in the custody of the federal authorities.

Kilburn v. Ritchie, 2 Cal. 145.

2. The right to recover for use and occupation is founded alone on contract.

O'Conner v. Corbitt, 3 Cal. 370.

3. No action for use and occupation will lie where possession is adverse and tortious, for such possession excludes the idea of a contract, which in all cases of this action must be either express or implied.

Sampson v. Shaeffer, 3 Cal. 166.

4. No action for rent will lie where the possession is adverse and tortious, for such possession excludes all idea of a contract.

Ramirez v. Murray, 5 Cal. 222.

5. In an action for use and occupation the court was asked to instruct the jury "that it was necessary, to enable the plaintiff to recover, that he should show that the defendant used and occupied the premises by the permission of the plaintiff; and if the jury believed defendant used and occupied the same against the will of the plaintiff, that they must find a verdict for the defendant;" which the court refused: Hehl, that in this the court erred.

VALUE.

1. The universal standard of value is the amount of money which can be realized by a sale of the property, and this will apply as well to mining claims as other lands.

State v. Moore, 12 Cal. 56.

2. In ascertaining whether an adequate price was paid for a piece of property at the time of its sale, the evidence should be restricted to the question of what its market value was at that time.

Henry v. Everts, 29 Cal. 610.

3. The estate of such street railroad company in the streets of the city is property capable of being enhanced in value by the widening of the street, and by such widening a substantial benefit may accrue to the railroad company.

Appeal of N. B. & M. R. Co., 32 Cal. 499.

4. In the absence of a contrary showing, the value of property at a given time will be presumed to be what it was then worth in the market. The rental of property is not an unerring criterion of its value, even in case the title be perfect, and it is less certain if the title be doubtful. It may be considered for the purpose of ascertaining the value of the property rented, but should not outweigh other and direct evidence to the same point.

Kisling v. Shaw, 33 Cal. 425.

VAN NESS ORDINANCE.

1. THEORY AND EFFECT.
13. POSSESSION UNDER.
39. TITLE UNDER.
55. EFFECT OF LEGISLATION.
59. ESTOPPEL UNDER.

ITS THEORY AND EFFECT.

1. The Van Ness ordinance was framed upon the theory that the better right to the bounty of the city vested with the first possessor, provided his possession was actual, and had not been voluntarily abandoned, and such prior actual possessor is entitled to the benefits of the ordinance, notwithstanding an interruption of his possession by the intrusion or trespass of others.

Hubbard v. Barry, 21 Cal. 321.

2. The object of the Van Ness ordinance was to protect actual possessors—parties seeking, by settlement, to build up homes within the city limits.

Wolf v. Baldwin, 19 Cal. 306.

3. The effect of the Van Ness ordinance was to release to actual possessors, who were such on the first of January, 1855, the title and interest of the land so possessed. This interest was only the equity—in other words, the title subject to the trusts in favor of the city's creditors—of such property as was conveyed by the deeds to the commissioners of the sinking fund and the commissioners of the funded debt; and parties holding under the ordinance hold, as to the property conveyed in these deeds, in subordination to this trust, just as the city itself holds.

Board of Education v. Fowler, 19 Cal. 11.

4. The decisions in this court affirming the validity of the act of 1858, giving effect to the Van Ness ordinance, affirmed.

San Francisco v. Beideman, 17 Cal. 443.

5. This reservation of the lots for school purposes was not a sale or disposition of them so as to pass to third persons the interest of the city, but was simply a reservation of the lots for a particular town purpose.

Board of Education v. Fowler, 19 Cal. 11.

6. If such reservation were an attempted sale, then there would be great force in the argument that such sale could only be by ordinance in the form of a law, and not by mere resolution.

Id.

7. The lots so set apart or reserved by the city for its own uses did not pass, under the Van Ness ordinance, to a person in actual possession of the same on the first of January, 1855.

Id.

8. Whatever right or title, if any, the United States had in the lands embraced within the Van Ness ordinance, by the act of congress of July 1, 1864, passed to the city of San Francisco, for the use and benefit of the persons in whom vested the Van Ness ordinance title.

Pickett v. Hastings, 47 Cal. 269.

9. The act of the legislature passed May 11, 1858, ratifying and confirming the ordinance of the common council of San Francisco, approved June 20, 1855, by which the city relinquished the pueblo lands within its corporate limits to the possessors thereof, made said ordinance take effect by relation, at the date of its passage.

Id.

10. By the words "legal process," used in the Van Ness ordinance, passed by the common council of San Francisco, and afterwards ratified by the legislature, is meant an action brought in a court of competent jurisdiction.

Id.

11. The words "may be recovered," in the phrase "may be recovered by legal process," used in the Van Ness ordinance, mean "shall be recovered."

Id.

12. The right or interest which the city of San Francisco had in its pueblo lands, it held subject to the control of the legislature of the state, and congress could not control the city in any manner whatever in respect to the disposition of such pueblo land.

Id.

POSSESSION UNDER.

13. The actual possession, by virtue of which parties obtain the title of the city of San Francisco to the pueblo lands under the second section of the Van Ness ordinance, means a possession accompanied with the real and effectual enjoyment of the property; that possession which follows the subjection of the property to the will and dominion of the claimant, to the exclusion of others; and this possession must be evidenced by occupation or cultivation, or other appropriate use, according to the locality and character of the particular premises. An inclosure by an ordinary fence, of the premises, without residence thereon, or improvements, or cultivation, or other acts of ownership, is of itself insufficient.

14. A mere inclosure by a fence is of itself only the declaration of an intention to appropriate and possess the premises; but does not, unaccompanied with any other acts, constitute the actual possession contemplated by the ordinance.

Id.

15. The proof of actual possession in this case is insufficient to enable plaintiffs to recover.

Id.

16. The nature of the possession required by the Van Ness ordinance discussed.

Id.

17. The nature of the possession in this case stated, and the conclusion reached that such possession brings defendant within the ordinance.

Id.

18. The proviso in the Van Ness ordinance, "provided that such possession has been continued up to the time of the introduction of the ordinance; or, if interrupted by an intruder or trespasser, has been or may be recovered by legal process," only determines the right under the ordinance as between the actual possessor and a former possessor whom the first had forfeited, and does not apply to the case of the city resuming possession of her own property, or, what is the same thing, a possession held by her license and permission, and does not operate to exclude her from her rights, and to deny her the benefits of her present lawful possession from the mere fact that a long while before the passage of the ordinance some one else was in unlawful possession of her property, and was put out unlawfully by a succeeding trespasser having no better title.

Hubbard v. Sullivan, 18 Cal. 508.

19. The court can not say that a fence built in San Francisco in 1850, and made of posts and boards, two boards and a cap high, was not a substantial fence, or that this in connection with building and occupying a house within it, and exercising control over the land, did not constitute an actual possession within the meaning of the Van Ness ordinance. The testimony was sufficient to require its submission to the jury.

Satterlee v. Bliss, 36 Cal. 489.

20. It was not the possession mentioned in the Van Ness ordinance that conferred title, but the legislative confirmation of the ordinance.

Valentine v. Mahoney, 37 Cal. 389.

21. The title under the Van Ness ordinance dates, not from the time possession of the land was taken, but from the time of the passage of the act confirming the ordinance. Id.

22. It can not be said that one person acquired a better title than another under the Van Ness ordinance. The one having the requisite possession took the title; the other took nothing. Id.

23. The Van Ness ordinance vested the title in a person not in possession by himself or tenant on the first day of January, 1855, provided such person had been in possession before that time, and his possession had been interrupted by an intruder, and could be recovered by legal process. Id.

24. The court are inclined to consider the word "tenant," as used in the Van Ness ordinance, as meaning a conventional tenant.

Brooks v. Hyde, 37 Cal. 366.

25. The word "tenant," as used in the Van Ness ordinance, is not restricted in its meaning to a mere conventional tenant, as was intimated in Brooks v. Hyde, 37 Cal. 366, but applies to any party who holds the actual possession in subordination to another party, under or by virtue of an agreement, either express or implied.

Irvine v. Adler, 44 Cal. 559.

26. The actual possession of land in San Francisco within the boundaries of the Van Ness ordinance, by a tenant, was the possession of the landlord, so as to entitle him to the benefits of that ordinance, and the same result followed if the tenant assigned the lease, and his assignee took possession.

McLeran v. Benton, 43 Cal. 467.

27. If, on the first day of January, 1855, a person was in possession of land in San Francisco, within the limits of the Van Ness ordinance, as the tenant of another, or, as against such person, an intruder who could have been evicted by legal process, the person thus in possession did not acquire title by the Van Ness ordinance, but the title vested in the landlord, or the person who could have recovered possession.

Brooks v. Hyde, 37 Cal. 366.

28. A title under the Van Ness ordinance does not accrue unless there is an actual possession of the premises.

Judson v. Malloy, 40 Cal. 299.

29. Occasional and casual acts of dominion exercised over land in San Francisco, without cultivating it or surrounding it with a fence, are not sufficient to establish title under the Van Ness ordinance.

Pattee v. Moyle, 44 Cal. 363.

30. If a quitclaim deed of a homestead within the limits of the Van Ness ordinance, in San Francisco, was made before January 1, 1855, by the husband alone, and he remained in possession until after said date, the title to the land by virtue of said ordinance vested in the grantor.

Brooks v. Hyde, 37 Cal. 366.

31. A defendant in ejectment for a lot in San Francisco, who had possession of the premises on the first day of January, 1855, and thence up to the introduction of the Van Ness ordinance, can not invoke the protection of that ordinance when the issue in the action is whether his possession was acquired by an intrusion upon the prior rights of the plaintiff.

Keane v. Cannovan, 21 Cal. 291.

32. There is no limit as to the quantity of land to which parties in possession become entitled under the Van Ness ordinance. All that a claimant of lands within the limits of the city of San Francisco need show, to entitle him to hold as against the city, is that he was in actual possession of such lands on the first day of January, 1855.

San Francisco v. Beideman, 17 Cal. 443.

33. The Van Ness ordinance does not limit the quantity of land to which the actual possessor acquires the title of the city; and the courts can not annex any limitation, but can only hold parties to clear proof of their actual possession. Id.

Wolf v. Baldwin, 19 Cal. 306.

34. The amount of land in San Francisco which, under the Van Ness ordinance, passed to a person in the actual possession, was not limited to one block.

Davis v. Perley, 30 Cal. 630.

35. Possession of a lot in San Francisco within the limits covered by the Van Ness ordinance, by a fence of posts and wires, four wires passing through each post, the fence being sufficient to turn cattle, but not goats and hogs, is sufficient to entitle the possessor to the benefit of the Van Ness ordinance. Howell v. Rogers, 47 Cal. 291.

36. One who was in possession of land in San Francisco, embraced within the area of the Van Ness ordinance, and who was ousted by an intruder before the ordinance took effect, in order to have acquired the Van Ness ordinance title, must have recovered possession from the intruder by virtue of his prior possession, in a suit commenced before his right of action on his prior possession was barred by the statute of limitations. He could not recover from such intruder by virtue of any title vested in him by the ordinance, but the recovery upon the prior possession vested in him the Van Ness ordinance title. Pickett v. Hastings, 47 Cal. 269.

37. A party who, on the first day of January, 1855, was in the actual possession of land in San Francisco, within the area covered by the Van Ness ordinance, claiming the same adversely to another party, and who continued in such possession up to the twentieth of June, 1855, and up to the commencement of an action by such other, is prima facie entitled to the title conveyed by the Van Ness ordinance, and it devolves on the other party to show, not only that he was ousted from the possession, but also that his possession was such as within the language of the ordinance, may be recovered by legal process. Id.

38. Persons who, before the passage of the Van Ness ordinance, had been in possession of land embraced within the area covered by it, and who had been ousted by intruders, and who had no other right or title than such as proceeded from prior possession, must have commenced their actions within the time prescribed by the statute of limitations; and the statute commenced running, as to such persons, on the eleventh day of April, 1855. Id.

TITLE UNDER.

39. The Van Ness ordinance, and the act of the legislature confirming the same, vested in the possessors described in the ordinance, a title to the lands therein mentioned, as against the city of San Francisco.

Carleton v. Townsend, 28 Cal. 219.

40. One claiming title to land in San Francisco under the Van Ness ordinance must show that either he or his grantors were in the actual possession of the land on the first of January, 1855, and thence next ensuing to the twentieth of June, 1855.

Borel v. Rollins, 30 Cal. 408.

41. One who entered on a tract of land in San Francisco, claiming the whole under a deed describing it by metes and bounds, and took actual possession of a part only, there being no adverse possession of the rest, acquired title under the Van Ness ordinance only to the extent of his actual and not of his constructive possession.

Davis v. Perley, 30 Cal. 630.

42. City and county of San Francisco v. Beideman, 17 Cal. 462, and Wolf v. Baldwin, 19 Id. 314, as to amount of land donated to each person in possession by the Van Ness ordinance, and as to the possession required by the ordinance. Id.

43. After the facts tending to prove actual possession are in evidence, it becomes a question of law whether those facts establish such actual possession as to confer title under the Van Ness ordinance. Id.

44. The inclosure of a lot in San Francisco by building a fence around it made of posts eight feet apart and five feet high, with two boards nailed on the same, without actual occupation or cultivation of the lot, did not give such possession of the same to the person inclosing as to pass the title to him under the Van Ness ordinance.

Polack v. McGrath, 32 Cal. 15.

45. The statute of March 11, 1858, ratifying the Van Ness ordinance, gave to those claiming under the ordinance no new or additional ground of recovery not embraced in the ordinance itself.

Pickett v. Hastings, 47 Cal. 269.

46. The persons entitled to the benefit of the Van Ness ordinance consist of four classes: First, those who hold title by virtue of the grants and conveyances enumerated in the ordinance; second, those who were in the actual possession by themselves, or by their tenants, on the first day of January, 1855, and so continued up to the twentieth day of June, 1855; third, those whose possession had been "interrupted by an intruder or a trespasser," and "had been recovered by legal process;" and, fourth, those whose possession had been "interrupted by an intruder or trespasser," and "may be recovered by legal process." Id.

47. The persons embraced in such fourth class are such as might thereafter recover possession from such intruder, and such recovery was not one which might be had on one of the grants or conveyances mentioned in the ordinance, but a recovery upon some right or title other than such grants or conveyances. Id.

48. Where a Mexican grant to land situated within the limits of the city and county of San Francisco was confirmed by the board of United States land commissioners, and, together with the survey thereof, was in 1863 affirmed by the United States district court, and on appeal said survey was confirmed by the supreme court of the United States: Hell, that under the provisions of the act of congress approved June 14, 1860, as against those claiming under the party who contested said survey in the district court and on said appeal, and who claimed title thereto under the Van Ness ordinance, the successors in interest of the grantee of said land acquired thereby such title thereto, without a patent from the United States, as to maintain an action of ejectment therefor.

Bernal v. Lynch, 36 Cal. 135.

49. In such case, the decree confirming the survey was an adjudication that said land mentioned in the decree confirming the claim was properly located and correctly surveyed; and the contestant of said survey having made himself a party to the proceeding for its confirmation, neither he nor those claiming under him can be permitted to collaterally question the decree. Id.

50. Conceding that said contestant acquired to said land, by virtue of the Van Ness ordinance, all the title which the city of San Francisco held to it as pueblo land, yet, as under said act of congress of 1860, said decree of confirmation was made the equivalent of a patent issued by the United States, the confirmer thereby acquired the title of the United States, and his title so acquired was unaffected by the act of congress of 1864, entitled "an act to expedite the settlement of titles to lands in the state of California." The claim of the confirmer was, by the decree of confirmation, established as a bona fide claim, and was therefore within the protection accorded to bona fide claims by the fifth section of said last-named act. Id.

51. If, as plaintiff contends in this case, the act of 1851 passed the title of the lot on which the marine hospital in San Francisco stands to the commissioners of the funded debt, then plaintiff can not maintain his action, because, even conceding that the legislature had power to divest this title by the act of 1858 confirming the Van Ness ordinance, still that ordinance and that act only give the occupants the right, title and interest of the city in the land so held.

Hubbard v. Sullivan, 18 Cal. 508.

52. Assuming that the title to the lot in San Francisco, on which the United States marine hospital stands, was in said city at the time of the passage of the Van Ness ordinance, then a deed in 1852 by the mayor of said city, in pursuance of an order of the common council thereof, conveying said lot to the United States, was effectual as a license from the city to the United States to enter upon and hold the lot, even if the deed was not operative to pass the title. Id.

53. Assuming that this deed did not pass the title to the United States, then by and upon the passage of the Van Ness ordinance of 1855 and the act of 1858 confirming it, the United States, holding the lot under the city through this deed as a license, and having actual possession, may be considered as in possession for the city, and entitled to protection against the antecedent possession of the plaintiff or his predecessor. Id.

54. Semble, that the deed to the commissioners of the funded debt of San Francisco under the act of 1851, for the payment of the city debts, is a conveyance in trust for the purposes for which it was executed, leaving the residuary interest, after satisfying or discharging the trust, in the city, and that, subject to this right of the commissioners—supposing it to exist—the city could still, without objection from third persons, control the subject of the trust. Id.

LEGISLATION UPON, EFFECT OF.

55. The act of the legislature of 1858, validating the alcalde grants, mentioned in the proviso to the second section of the Van Ness ordinance, is effectual for that purpose, whether the grants were originally valid or not, or whether the title of the city of San Francisco came by grant to the old pueblo, or had its origin, by presumption or grant, in the act of congress.

Payne v. Treadwell, 16 Cal. 220.

56. The act of the state legislature of March, 1858, confirming the so-called Van Ness ordinance, was a legal and proper exercise of this sovereign power; and this act gave full effect to the provisions of that ordinance, and vests in the possessors therein described, as against said city and state, a title to the lands in said ordinance mentioned.

Hart v. Burnett, 15 Cal. 530.

57. It is not clear that the order of the board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco, repealing the Van Ness ordinance, before the passage of the act of 1858, confirming it, destroyed the power of the legislature to give due effect to the provisions of that ordinance. Id.

58. Assuming that this repealing order was effectual to defeat the rights claimed to have vested under the ordinance, then the property claimed would belong to the city, and plaintiff here could not recover. Id.

ESTOPPEL UNDER.

59. Plaintiff here, claiming, through the Van Ness ordinance, the right and title of the city, is not in a position to say that the city had, at the time of the passage of the ordinance, no title or claim to the premises. Hubbard v. Sullivan, 18 Cal. 508.

EVIDENCE, 394.

VARIANCE

1. The rule that the allegata and probata must correspond is not abrogated by the civil practice act. The plaintiff must prove his contract as alleged in his complaint, or he is not entitled to recover.

Stout v. Coffin, 28 Cal. 65.

Hathaway v. Ryan, 35 Id. 188.

2. If the answer denies the contract as alleged in the complaint, the plaintiff must prove it substantially as alleged.

Tomlinson v. Monroe, 41 Cal. 94.

3. If the complaint avers that the defendant accepted a horse with an agreement to sell him and account for the proceeds, proof that the price of sale was limited to three hundred dollars is also a variance. Id.

4. If the complaint alleges that the defendant accepted a horse, upon an agreement to sell him for a price not less than three hundred dollars, testimony that the horse was left with the defendant with authority to sell him at not less than three hundred dollars is no proof that the defendant bound himself to sell at not less than three hundred dollars, and there is a variance. Id.

5. A material variance between the contract as alleged and proved, is a ground of nonsuit, unless the plaintiff obtains leave to amend his complaint, so as to make it conform to the proofs. Id.

6. It is sufficient, where the complaint alleged an express promise to pay a debt which was barred by the statute, to prove an acknowledgment of the debt from which a promise to pay is implied.

Farrell v. Palmer, 36 Cal. 187.

7. Where the complaint in an action on a bill of exchange describes it as payable to the order of A., whereas the bill offered in evidence is drawn payable to B., it is a variance to be taken advantage of by objecting to the evidence, or by a motion of nonsuit.

Farmer v. Cram, 7 Cal. 135.

8. In a foreclosure suit on bond and mortgage, the fact that the bond offered in proof on the trial does not answer the description of the bond as recited in the mortgage, is matter of identity merely and not properly matter of variance, the bond offered answering to the description given in the complaint.

Blankman v. Vallejo, 15 Cal. 638.

9. When the case made by plaintiff's proof differs from the averments of the complaint, and defendant makes no objection to the introduction of the evidence on this ground, the supreme court will not reverse the judgment on account of the variance.

Marshall v. Ferguson, 23 Cal. 65.

10. If in the progress of a trial evidence is offered by the plaintiff at variance with the allegations of the complaint, and the counsel for the defense does not object to it at the time, nor move to strike it out upon the ground of variance, the error is waived, and the court may instruct the jury in relation to the whole field of inquiry covered by the evidence.

Boyce v. Cal. Stage Co., 25 Cal. 460.

11. In an action against a common carrier for not complying with a contract to carry and deliver a draft the complaint alleged that it was signed "John Q. Jackson;" the proof showed that it was signed "John Q. Jackson, agent;" Held, that the variance was immaterial.

Zeigler v. Wells, 28 Cal. 263.

12. If the complaint charges that the defendant received goods as a common carrier and warehouseman, to be stored by him, and by the next boat to be by him shipped and carried and conveyed to the place of destination, and to be by him there safely delivered to the plaintiffs, proof that defendant received the goods in his warehouse as bailee, and shipped them according to plaintiffs' directions, does not entitle plaintiffs to recover.

Stout v. Coffin, 28 Cal. 65.

13. In such case plaintiffs can not recover without proof that the defendant contracted to convey the goods. Id.

14. If the complaint alleges a promise to pay money to a corporation, and the promise proved was made to a committee of a church, there is a fatal variance between the complaint and proof.

Christian Coll. v. Hendley, 49 Cal. 347.

15. If the original note offered in evidence contains an abbreviation for the word "administratrix," and specifies the rate of interest in figures only, and the copy in the complaint gives the word in full and states the rate of interest in words as well as figures, the variance is immaterial.

Corcoran v. Doll, 32 Cal. 82.

16. Where the plaintiff declared upon a note made by one M'Kinley and one Campbell, and gave in evidence a note signed by H. C. M'Kinley and C. Campbell & Co.; Held, that the variance was important and substantial, and that the district court erred in admitting it in evidence.

Cotes v. Campbell, 3 Cal. 191.

17. Where, in suit for a mining claim, plaintiff in his complaint states the particular facts constituting his title, and on that title seeks a recovery, and the answer denies such title, plaintiff must prove his title as averred, at least in substance, and he can not, against defendant's objection, recover on another and different title.

Eagan v. Delaney, 16 Cal. 85.

18. And where, in such case, plaintiffs were permitted to prove and recover on a title other than the one so set up, it was error in the court below to refuse a new trial, the motion for which was based on affidavit of defendant that he was taken by surprise arising out of the frame of the pleadings, and that he could have rebutted plaintiff's case but for that surprise. Id.

19. Plaintiff sues to enjoin the enforcement of a judgment recovered by defendant T. against plaintiff G.; and avers that G. paid T. the amount of the judgment and procured an assignment of it to defendant V., who seeks to enforce it against plaintiff: Hell, that on the trial, plaintiff could not be permitted to show that G. paid the judgment with the joint funds of himself and plaintiff, because the complaint avers the payment to have been made by G.

Coffee v. Tevis, 17 Cal. 239.

20. Where the complaint avers that the note and mortgage sued on were made to E., a married woman, and by her assigned to plaintiff, he can not recover because the right to assign was in the husband; and this, too, where the proof was that both husband and wife assigned the note and mortgage. In chancery cases the party must recover according to the pleadings, and not the proof, where there is a variance.

Tryon v. Sutton, 13 Cal. 490.

21. A joint contract can not be given in evidence where the pleadings set up a several contract alone. Stearns v. Martin, 4 Cal. 227.

22. The plaintiff can not recover against "the corporation of Bradley, Berdan & Co." upon a written contract entered into between himself and "Bradley & Co.," as the contract was not made by the corporation.

Morrison v. Bradley, 5 Cal. 503.

23. The party making an allegation in a pleading that the sale of a mining claim under which he claims title was in writing is not thereby precluded from proving that the sale was a verbal one.

Patterson v. Keystone Co., 30 Cal. 360.

24. An allegation of actual fraud is not sustained by proof of a mistake.

Mercier v. Lewis, 39 Cal. 532.

Bell v. Knowles, 45 Cal. 193.

26. If the answer sets up as a defense, in an action on a bill of exchange, a total failure of consideration, and the proof shows a partial failure only, the variance is not an available one under our practice.

Plato v. Vega, 31 Cal. 383.

27. A judgment will not be reversed on the ground of variance between the pleadings and proofs when the variance does not mislead the appellant to his prejudice.

Began v. O'Rielly, 32 Cal. 11.

28. The seventy-first section of the practice act, requiring immaterial variances between the pleadings and proofs to be disregarded, is a most beneficial provision, and should be literally construed and carried out.

Id.

29. In an action under the statute for causing, by wrongful act, the death of a person where the allegation of the complaint was that defendants owned, as tenants in common, the entire block in front of which the accident occurred, and the proof was that they owned it in distinct parcels in severalty, the variance was immaterial.

VENDOR AND PUR-

CHASER, 50.

VENDITIONI EXPNAS.

1. There is a distinction between cases where a venditioni expnas is issued for the sale of personal property, and where it is issued for the sale of land. A venditioni issued in the former case must go to the officer who made the seizure.

Clark v. Sawyer, 43 Cal. 133.

2. When a sheriff, who levies a feri facias on land, goes out of office before having sold, the court may, by an order, direct his successor to sell the property levied on, and a venditioni expnas may be issued to such successor, and he may then sell and execute a deed to the purchaser. Id.

3. In cases where a sheriff who has received a feri facias, and made a levy on land, goes out of office without having sold, if a venditioni expnas is issued for the enforcement of the lien, no reason is perceived why it must necessarily be executed by the retiring sheriff who made the levy, and not by his successor in office. Id.

VENDOR AND PURCHASER OF REAL PROPERTY.

1. GENERALLY.

13. PURCHASER WITHOUT NOTICE.

23. PURCHASER WITH NOTICE.
 41. CONTRACT TO CONVEY LAND.
 50. MISCELLANEOUS CASES.

GENERALLY.

1. Under a verbal contract of sale of real estate, the delivery of the title deeds is equivalent to a symbolical delivery of, and admission into, possession of the property, as between vendor and vendee, whatever might be its effect in conferring actual possession, in case the rights of third persons were concerned. Tohler v. Folsom, 1 Cal. 207.

2. A failure on the part of the vendee to pay the purchase money for two years and more does not forfeit his right under the contract, as the vendor may proceed to enforce the payment of the debt at any time after it becomes due.

Gouldin v. Buckelew, 4 Cal. 107.

3. When the vendor of real estate under a power of sale, reserved in the contract of sale, sells the property either at public or private sale, the surplus, beyond the purchase money due, belongs to the vendee, and the payment of it may be decreed by judgment of the court against the vendor.

Id.

4. The title of a purchaser under a sale on a decree of foreclosure can not be impeached in a collateral action for irregularity in the proceedings on the sale.

Nagle v. Macy, 9 Cal. 426.

5. One Clark, being in the occupation of certain premises, conveyed them to one Baker, who executed a mortgage back to Clark as security for the purchase money. The conveyance and mortgage were simultaneous acts, and both were of the premises in fee. The legal title was not at the time in Clark, and Baker afterward purchased it in, and then executed a mortgage to one Touchard: Held, that the title subsequently acquired by Baker inured to the benefit of his mortgagee, Clark, and that a purchaser under the decree foreclosing Touchard's mortgage could only claim in subordination to Clark.

Clark v. Baker, 14 Cal. 612.

6. One who buys land during the pendency of an action to recover possession of it, in which his grantor is a defendant, may thereafter continue the defense in the name of his grantor, or may cause himself to be substituted in his place.

Mastick v. Thorp, 29 Cal. 444.

7. The strict rule which applies at common law between heir and executor applies equally between vendor and vendee, and between mortgagor and mortgagee.

Sands v. Pfeiffer, 10 Cal. 258.

8. The doctrine of Gaven v. Hagen, 15 Cal. 208, that a vendee of real estate under a contract of purchase, which is silent as to the possession, has no right to the possession until a performance of the conditions prescribed by the contract to entitle him to a deed, commented upon and questioned.

Willis v. Wozencraft, 22 Cal. 607.

9. The equitable lien held by the vendor of real estate after absolute conveyance thereof, is not subject to levy and sale on execution, nor is it the subject of private transfer.

Ross v. Heintzen, 36 Cal. 313.

10. Where a tenant in possession by deed of bargain and sale conveys the premises occupied by him, for a valuable consideration, and his vendee is subsequently ejected by the landlord, in the absence of warranty, or with only special warranty against the acts of the vendor, the vendee is not entitled to relief, either in law or equity, against his vendor. Hastings v. O'Donnell, 40 Cal. 148.

11. The statute does not run against a vendee in possession under an executory contract, so long as he remains in possession with the acquiescence of the vendor.

Love v. Watkins, 40 Cal. 547.

12. It is a general rule, applicable alike to conditional and absolute sales, that a second vendee is not entitled to stand in any better situation than his vendor in regard to the title of personal property, other than negotiable instruments, and whatever comes under the general denomination of currency. Whether a further exception to the rule exists in favor of bona fide purchasers from the purchaser at a conditional sale, is not decided. Putnam v. Lamphier, 36 Cal. 151.

PURCHASER WITHOUT NOTICE.

13. A subsequent purchaser who seeks to avoid a prior deed of the same premises, made by his grantor, on the ground that he is a purchaser in good faith and without notice, must show affirmatively that he paid a good and valuable consideration.

Colton v. Seavey, 22 Cal. 496.

14. In a suit to try the title to land between two who are purchasers from the same grantor, where the oldest deed is neither acknowledged nor recorded, the one claiming under the prior unacknowledged and unrecorded deed will prevail, unless the fact appears that the second purchaser bought without notice for a valuable consideration. It is not sufficient for the second purchaser that there is no finding of the fact or evidence on the subject, but the fact must be made to appear affirmatively.

Landers v. Bolton, 26 Cal. 303.

15. If the apparent possession of land is consistent with the title appearing of record, it is not the duty of the purchaser to make an inquiry concerning the title beyond what the recording office shows.

Smith v. Yule, 31 Cal. 180.

16. If at the time of the sale of land the record title is in the vendor and the vendor is in possession, and another person is also in possession, there is no presumption of title out of the vendor, and no inquiry need be made of the other person as to his right or title. Id.

17. If the owner of a lot in a city occupies part of a house on the same, and another person occupies the remainder of the house, and while this occupation of both continues, the owner conveys to this other person whose deed is not recorded, and then conveys to a third person whose deed is first recorded, the possession of the one having the unrecorded deed is not sufficient to give notice to the subsequent purchaser. Id.

18. The possession of a vendee with an unrecorded conveyance will not give notice to a subsequent purchaser whose conveyance is first recorded, unless such possession is open, notorious and exclusive. Id.

19. A vendee of land, holding an unrecorded deed, in order to protect himself against a subsequent bona fide purchaser, without further notice than is implied from possession by such vendee, must show a possessio pedis—an actual bona fide possession consistent with his written title; and this possession must be evidenced by an actual inclosure, or something equivalent, as showing the extent and the fact of the dominion and control of the premises.

Havens v. Dale, 18 Cal. 359.

20. If the purchasers from parties alleged to have been insolvent bought in good faith, it is immaterial how many valid prior liens may have attached on the property; they are entitled to what remains after the liens are satisfied; or they would have a right to pay the liens and keep the property; and a court of equity would not interfere in such a case. The prior liens, to the extent of their amount, diminish the value of the property, and meet so far the objection of inadequacy of price.

Kinder v. Macy, 7 Cal. 206.

21. The rule that a subsequent purchaser in good faith and for a valuable consideration, and whose deed is first recorded, will hold the land conveyed, as against a prior purchaser, only applies where both parties claim under the same grantor.

Long v. Dollarhide, 24 Cal. 218.

22. The burden of showing that he is a purchaser in good faith and for a valuable consideration is cast upon the one claiming under a second deed but recorded first in point of time, and the deed itself is not evidence of these facts, but they must be shown by other testimony. Id.

PURCHASER WITH NOTICE.

23. The actual adverse possession of land by another party, at the time of the conveyance, will be notice to the purchaser, whose grantors only claim by a possession short of the period fixed by the statute of limitations.

Partridge v. McKinney, 10 Cal. 181.

24. The purchaser of an equitable title takes the property, subject to all existent equities. He is not within the rule which protects a bona fide purchaser for value, and without notice of the real or apparent title.

Dupont v. Wertheman, 10 Cal. 354.

25. A vendor's lien for the unpaid purchase price of land may be enforced against the vendee and his grantees who have notice of the vendor's equities.

Pell v. McElroy, 36 Cal. 268.

26. Where the vendee's agent, in the purchase of a tract of land, has actual notice of a mortgage on the premises at the time of purchase, the vendee will be presumed to have taken the property subject to the mortgage. May v. Borel, 12 Cal. 91.

27. A purchaser of land subsequent to a suit brought against his vendors to quiet title, and to a notice of his pendens filed in the county recorder's office, is a mere volunteer, who takes subject to any decree in the suit.

Gregory v. Haynes, 13 Cal. 591.

28. In the absence of any statutory regulation, a purchase made of property actually in litigation, pendente lite, for a valuable consideration, and without any express or implied notice, in point of fact affects the purchaser in the same manner as if he had such notice, and he will accordingly be bound by the judgment.

Sampson v. Ohleyer, 22 Cal. 200.

29. Instruments, in the acknowledgment or certificate of acknowledgment to which there was a defect or omission, and which were copied into the proper book of record, in the proper county, prior to the thirtieth day of April, 1860, impart to purchasers and incumbancers, becoming such after said date, notice of their contents, the same as though the acknowledgment and certificate had been in due form of law.

Landers v. Bolton, 26 Cal. 393.

30. A person purchasing land in the possession of a person other than the grantor is charged by the law with the duty of inquiring by what right or title he holds.

Smith v. Yule, 31 Cal. 180.

31. January 26, 1855, a judgment against C. became a lien on his land. May 7, 1855, R. purchased the land at sheriff's sale made on an execution issued on the judgment, and received a certificate, and a duplicate was filed in the office of the recorder. A judgment in favor of H. against C. became a lien on the same land March 1, 1855. November 17, 1855, H. purchased at sheriff's sale, made on an execution issued on his judgment, the same land, and a certificate of sale was made to him, and a duplicate also filed. July 7, 1858, H. received and recorded a sheriff's deed. November 15, 1861, P., the assignee of R.'s certificate, received and recorded a sheriff's deed. H. had no actual notice of the sale to R. H. was in possession under his purchase, and November 6, 1861, P. sued to recover possession. Held, that H. had constructive notice of the prior sale, and that P. was entitled to recover.

32. Great inadequacy of consideration paid for land, as compared with its actual value, is sufficient to put the purchaser upon notice of a fraud by his vendor, in the purchase thereof, at a constable's sale.

Argenti v. San Francisco, 6 Cal. 677.

33. A party is not bound by a judgment rendered in an action of ejectment where he has not received legal notice of the action. Such judgment is not evidence against him of paramount title in the plaintiff in ejectment. Mere cognizance of the existence of the action is not legal notice. To be available, the notice must apprise the party whose rights are to be affected, of what is required of him, and the consequences which may follow if he neglects to defend the action.

Peabody v. Phelps, 9 Cal. 213.

34. Where a person purchasing land has actual notice of a former conveyance of the same land, he is not entitled to protection as a purchaser for value without notice; nor are his partners in the purchase, although they at the time knew nothing of such purchase.

Stanley v. Green, 12 Cal. 148.

35. A party in taking a conveyance in the name of his associates must be considered as having acted as their agent, and notice to him is equally notice to them. Id.

36. In an action to recover the value of certain buildings standing on certain lots, proof that one C., through whom plaintiff claimed, on the day of his entry, applied to one of the defendants for his consent to the erection of the buildings, is sufficient evidence to authorize the jury to infer knowledge on the part of C. of defendant's title at the time of such entry.

Kneeland v. Wilson, 12 Cal. 241.

37. Possession of land, claiming title, and having an equitable title, is notice to purchaser, from one holding the legal title, sufficient to put him on inquiry as to the possessor's right.

Killey v. Wilson, 33 Cal. 691.

38. If one who buys without paying a valuable consideration, and with notice of a prior unrecorded deed given by his grantor to another person, records his deed before the record of such prior deed, and after the record of such prior deed sells to another, who pays a valuable consideration, and buys without actual notice of the prior deed, such last purchaser has constructive notice of the prior deed, and it will take precedence over his own. Clark v. Sawyer, 48 Cal. 133.

39. Where the whole title of all the parties rests upon possession only, and A. sells land to B. by conveyance not recorded, and afterwards, while B. is in possession, claiming the entire property as his own, A. sells to another party by deed, duly acknowledged and recorded, the second purchaser will be deemed to have purchased with notice, and will not, therefore, be considered a subsequent purchaser in good faith.

Partridge v. McKinney, 10 Cal. 181.

40. In such case, B. will be permitted to show the real state of the case as against the second vendee of A. But where B. has left his possession, and at the time when he is out of possession, A. sells to another, it is otherwise. Then such second vendee becomes an innocent purchaser for value. Id.

CONTRACTS TO CONVEY LAND.

41. An action will not lie to recover damages for the breach of a verbal contract to reconvey real estate formerly conveyed by the plaintiff to the defendant.

Bartlett v. Aitkin, 48 Cal. 405.

42. A contract, by which the Western Pacific railroad company sells a quarter section of the land, granted by congress to the Central Pacific company, to aid in the construction of a railroad, and agrees to execute to the purchaser a deed when the company receives a patent, vests in the purchaser a perfect equity, with an absolute right to a conveyance as soon as the company receives the patent. Baldwin v. Morgan, 50 Cal. 585.

43. If the owner of land contracts to sell the same to another upon the payment of a fixed sum in installments, and the owner dies before the last installment falls due, and the purchaser petitions the probate court for an order requiring his executor to make a conveyance of the land, and the court decrees such conveyance on the payment of the last installment and the expenses of procuring the decree and making the deed, the purchaser must pay such expenses before he can claim a deed.

Smith v. George, 52 Cal. 341.

44. P. and K. were partners in the business of carriage-making, and the firm owned, among other property, an interest in certain real estate evidenced by a contract of sale, in accordance with which most of the purchase money had been paid. P. agreed to sell out his interest in the firm to K. and tendered a written bill of sale of all his interest in the firm property, but did not offer a deed specially to convey his interest in the real estate: Held, in assumpsit by P. against K. for the sum agreed to be paid by K., that the evidence would not support a finding that a sufficient tender had been made to P.

Plath v. Kitzmuller, 52 Cal. 491.

45. In such a case it is not necessary to plead the statute of frauds. Id.

46. The Central Pacific railroad company issued and distributed a circular inviting people to settle and make improvements upon its lands, and promising those that should do so that they should be preferred as purchasers when the lands should be offered for sale. The defendant settled upon the land and filed his application to purchase the same in the office of the company as directed by the circular, and made valuable improvements thereon. The company, without notifying the defendant that the price of the lands had been fixed, and without giving him the option to purchase, sold the land to the plaintiff, who took with notice of the defendant's equities: Held, in an action of ejectment, wherein the defendant filed a cross-complaint, setting up the above facts and praying that the plaintiff be compelled to convey to him, that the offer of the company, and the acceptance by the defendant, created a valid contract, and that the plaintiff took the legal title impressed with a trust in favor of the defendant, and should be compelled to convey the same to the defendant. Boyd v. Brinckin, 55 Cal. 427.

47. An agreement to sell land, and, upon the payment of the purchase money, to execute a good and sufficient deed therefor, requires of the vendor to convey to the vendee the title to the land, and is not satisfied by the tender of a deed sufficient in form, when the vendor has, in fact, no title to convey. Haynes v. White, 55 Cal. 38.

48. A vendee can not maintain an action to recover his purchase money from a vendor, who has failed to perform his contract, until he has been evicted, or has surrendered, or offered to surrender the possession. Id.

49. If an attorney in fact, who is not authorized by the power to execute an absolute deed of the land of his principal, but who is authorized by the power to execute a contract for the sale of the land, sells the land, receives the purchase money, places the purchaser in possession, and executes an absolute deed for it, the transaction amounts to a valid verbal sale, and creates a valid equitable title in the purchaser and his successors in interest. Jones v. Marks, 47 Cal. 242.

MISCELLANEOUS CASES.

50. Where, in suit to enforce a verbal contract for the sale of land, the complaint averring a balance of four hundred dollars to be due defendant when he should make a deed, and describing the land by its position with reference to adjoining tracts, a demurrer was put in, and being overruled, and defendant not answering, final judgment, by default, was entered for plaintiff—evidence being taken as to the contract before a referee—that plaintiff pay defendant three hundred dollars, the latter to make a deed of the land, which was described in the judgment by metes and bounds: Held, that the judgment is erroneous, both as to the amount adjudged due defendant and in describing the land by metes and bounds; that the judgment should have followed the complaint in both these particulars, and that the departure is material and fatal. The judgment must be reversed, even though the evidence taken before the referee shows the land described in the complaint and judgment to be the same. The evidence was taken ex parte, and the defendant has a right to be heard, the subject-matter being the establishment of the actual boundaries of land. On the return of the cause, plaintiff can either take judgment in accordance with the allegations of the complaint, or amend by inserting a more specific description of the property. Holman v. Vallejo, 19 Cal. 498.

51. C. purchased certain lots, and borrowed the purchase money from M., to whom, as security for the loan, C. caused a deed, in form absolute, to be made by the seller, upon the agreement that when payment should be made of the money loaned, and interest, together with certain additional advances made to C. by M., the latter should convey the lots to C. To discharge this indebtedness C. negotiated a loan of C. I. Co. of a sum sufficient to liquidate M.'s demands, and one thousand five hundred dollars in addition, upon the agreements, which were fully executed, that C. should pay M., and receive from him the promised conveyance, and simultaneously execute a mortgage of the lots to C. I. Co., to secure said last loan. Subsequently C. I. Co. assigned an unpaid balance of its demand, together with said mortgage, to plaintiff, who brought suit to foreclose, and make K. a party defendant, to whom C. being indebted at the time of said purchase, and by reason thereof, had promised K. to buy for her a lot and thereon build a house, which should become her property. While said lots stood in M.'s name, C. pointed out to K. one of them as the one intended, built a house thereon, and K. went into possession, and so continued until said suit. There never was, however, any accounting between C. and K. at any time, or any price agreed or fixed on said lot: Held, that this transaction created no equitable title in K. which could have been enforced in a court of equity, as against C., if the title had been in him, and is void as a defense to plaintiff's said action.

Doe v. Culverwell, 35 Cal. 291.

52. M. sold to H. a tract of land in a city, divided into lots, and was to receive ninety thousand dollars therefor, together with one half of the profits over ninety thousand dollars which H. might receive from a sale of the lots. The agreement was in writing, which recited that the legal title to the lots was outstanding in S., and H. was to purchase it from S. M. afterwards assigned this contract to Moore, as security for his debt to Smith, and also conveyed the land to Moore, to be held by Moore in trust, subject to the agreement with H. M. died leaving a will, and after his death, Moore, out of money belonging to the estate, paid S. and obtained his deed for a part of the lots, and H. and Moore then conveyed these lots to N.: Held, that the executor of the will of M. could not maintain an action for a reconveyance, to the estate, of the lots sold to N., but must sue H. and Moore for an accounting, and that, in a proper case, the balance due the estate might be decreed to be a lien on the lots sold N.

Stewart v. Nevins, 50 Cal. 276.

53. A vendor of real estate made a conveyance of it to the vendee, leaving a balance of the purchase money unpaid. The vendee afterwards mortgaged the same property to a third party, who knew of the vendor's claim for unpaid purchase money. The vendor brought an action at law against the vendee, obtained judgment for the balance due, issued execution, and sold the interest of the vendee in the property. The mortgage afterwards foreclosed his mortgage, and was about to sell the property. The purchaser, at the previous sale, obtained an injunction to stay the sale, which was afterwards dissolved by the court, on the ground that he had purchased merely the vendee's equity of redemption, as the sale was subject to the rights of the mortgagee: Held, that this judgment, of the court below, was correct, and that the claim of the purchaser to be subrogated to the equitable lien of the vendor, if available at all, must be asserted in a separate equitable action.

Allen v. Phelps, 4 Cal. 256.

54. If A., being in possession of land, contracts in writing with B., to sell and convey the land to B. and to deliver him possession at any time within five years upon the payment of the price agreed on, and C., with notice of this contract, obtains from A. a deed of the land before B. has paid the agreed price, B. may pay the agreed price to C. and equity will compel C. to convey the land to B. and to deliver him possession of the same.

Hildreth v. Shelton, 46 Cal. 382.

54a. The fact that such land is public land, held by A. under the possessory act of this state, is no defense. Id.

55. The breach of a bond for title does not discharge the debt due for the purchase money; and the plaintiff, on such breach, can either resort to a court of equity to enforce its performance or maintain an action at law.

Bagley v. Eaton, 5 Cal. 407.

56. The commencement of this action was a sufficient demand for a conveyance, and from that time the plaintiff is entitled to rents and profits.

Heinlin v. Martin, 53 Cal. 321.

57. In the view of a court of equity, in the case of an agreement to sell land, the title being retained by the vendor as security for the balance of the purchase money, if the vendor obtains his money and interest, he gets all he expected when he entered into the contract. Keller v. Lewis, 53 Cal. 113.

58. The remedy of the vendor in equity for the persistent default of the vendee is to institute proceedings to foreclose the right of the vendee to purchase, the decree usually giving the latter a definite time within which to perform. Id.

59. Under a lease from C. to D., the latter had the election to purchase the leased premises for the sum of six thousand dollars, payable at any time during the term, with interest from the date of the lease at the rate of one per cent. a month, previous payments of rent to be credited on the interest, the interest falling due after the election to be paid semi-annually on specified days, and if not paid when due, to be compounded at the rate of two per cent. a month, the lessee also to pay the taxes on the land imposed during the term. D., during the term, notified C. of his election to purchase, and tendered him the sum of six thousand dollars, and also offered to pay the taxes, but did not tender or offer to pay the interest then due; C. declined the tender, and denied the right of D. to purchase. In an action by D. for a specific performance, the complaint containing an offer "to comply with all the terms and conditions of the contract:" Held, that the denial by the defendant of the plaintiff's right to purchase was a waiver of the necessity of a tender before the suit was brought, and that the plaintiff was entitled to a specific performance upon the terms of paying to the defendant, besides the taxes, the sum of six thousand dollars, agreed upon, with interest from the date of the lease at the rate of one per cent. a month, after deducting the amounts paid for rent.

VENDOR'S LIEN.

WARRANTY, 1-13.

VENDOR'S LIEN.

1. A vendor has a lien on the land sold, for the purchase money, unless he has taken security for his payment, though he has executed the conveyance.

Salmon v. Hoffmann, 2 Cal. 138.

2. When the vendor of real estate has not fully conveyed the title, his position is analogous to that of a mortgagee, and he may enforce his rights in the same manner. Id.

3. The vendor of real estate has a lien on the same for the unpaid purchase money, and such lien attaches to the land equally whether it has been conveyed to the vendee or is only contracted to be conveyed.

Hill v. Grigsby, 32 Cal. 53.

4. This lien is not a specific, absolute charge upon the property, but merely a personal privilege of the vendor, and does not pass by a transfer of his claim for the purchase money.

Baum v. Grigsby, 21 Cal. 172.

5. The lien which the vendor of real property retains, after an absolute conveyance, for the unpaid purchase money, is not a specific and absolute charge upon the property, but a mere equitable right to resort to it upon failure of payment by the vendee.

Sparks v. Hess, 15 Cal. 186.

6. It is a right which can only be asserted by one who has parted with his property. It is the personal privilege of the vendor, given solely for his security, and is in its nature unassignable.

Williams v. Young, 21 Cal. 227.

7. Equity raises no lien in respect to real estate, except that of a vendor for the purchase money.

Ellison v. Jackson W. Co., 12 Cal. 542.

8. This equitable right may be enforced in the first instance, and before the vendor has exhausted his legal remedy against the personal estate of the vendee. The court, after determining the amount of the lien, can, by its decree, either direct a sale of the property for its satisfaction, and execution for any deficiency, or award an execution in the first place, and a sale only in the event of its return unsatisfied, as the justice of the case may require. Sparks v. Hess, 15 Cal. 186.

9. Where a party purchases a bridge, toll-houses, stables, and out-houses appurtenant, with the right and privilege of his vendor in and to a "dug road" made on each side of the bridge, neither the purchaser, nor those claiming under him with notice, can object to a decree enforcing the vendor's lien against the premises, that the "dug road" is public land, and that therefore nothing would pass under a sale upon the decree. Id.

10. Where the contract of sale of real property is unexecuted, the vendor retaining the legal title for security until all the purchase money is paid, the vendor's lien retained is different from the ordinary lien of a vendor after conveyance executed. In the latter case, the vendor has parted with the legal and equitable title, and possesses only a bare right, which is of no operative force or effect until established by the decree of the court. In the former case, the vendor's position is somewhat similar to that of a party executing a conveyance and taking a mortgage back. He may sue at law for the balance of his purchase money, or file his bill in equity for the specific performance of the contract, and take an alternative decree, that if the purchaser will not accept a conveyance and pay the purchase money, the premises be sold to raise such money, and that the vendee pay any deficiency remaining after the application of the proceeds arising upon such sale. Id.

11. The distinction between the lien of a vendor, after absolute conveyance, and the lien of a vendor when the contract of sale is unexecuted, stated. In the latter case, the vendor holds the legal estate as security for the purchase money, and can assign his contract with the conveyance of the title, and in that event his assignee acquires the same rights and is subject to the same liabilities as himself. In the former case, the vendor retains a mere equity, which, to become of any force or effect, must be established by the decree of the court.

Baum v. Grigsby, 21 Cal. 172.

12. A vendor of real estate has a lien on the same in the hands of the administrator of the purchaser, for the unpaid purchase money.

Cahoon v. Robinson, 6 Cal. 225.

13. If one sells land to another, and executes an absolute conveyance, and does not receive payment, the grantee holds the land in trust for the grantor to the extent of the purchase money, which trust descends to the representatives and heirs of the grantee, against whom a lien for the purchase money will be enforced. Burt v. Wilson, 28 Cal. 632.

14. The term within which payment may be made by the vendee, to extinguish the lien, is limited, and ends after a sale under a judgment for the purchase money.

Truebody v. Jacobson, 2 Cal. 269.

15. If a bond be given for the purchase money, and the time for payment be extended beyond the period named in the bond, this does not release the lien. Id.

16. The lien which springs out of a title bond, predicated upon the covenants for the purchase money, attaches upon the land, unless expressly reserved; and if such reservation be made, it lies upon the purchaser to show it. Id.

17. A vendor of real estate who makes no conveyance, but gives a bond, conditioned for the execution of a conveyance, on payment of the purchase money by the vendee, has an equitable lien on the land for the purchase money, and holds the legal title as a security for the enforcement of his lien.

Gouldin v. Buckelew, 4 Cal. 107.

18. It is not the vendee's duty to hunt up the assignees; they must look after their interest when the vendor sues for his money. The only protection is payment of the money; this alone will release the bond. Id.

19. Taking a note for the purchase money does not affect the lien; and if part be paid the lien is good for the residue, and the vendee becomes a trustee for all that remains unpaid. So the lien attaching to the land, an assignment, with or without notice, can not affect the rights of the vendor. Id.

20. Where a vendor of land has taken the notes of the purchaser in payment, and brings his action thereon at law, he should in that action, if at all, unite his equitable claim for a foreclosure of his lien, the same tribunal administering both law and equity. Walker v. Sedgwick, 8 Cal. 393.

21. But in a case where the party brought his separate actions, first at law on the notes and then in equity for a foreclosure, before the adoption of this rule: Held, that he be allowed both his legal and equitable remedies, on payment of the costs of the latter suit. Id.

22. And if the defendant has a legal offset to the notes: Held, that he may plead it in the latter suit. Id.

23. The objection that the proceedings may become too complex by permitting different questions of law and equity to be settled in one suit, is not sufficiently strong to overcome the plain provisions of the statute and the substantial dictates of justice. Id.

24. The vendor's lien on the land conveyed is not lost by his taking the notes of the purchaser for the purchase money. And the lien equally exists, whether the instrument amounts to a conveyance or merely to an executory contract. Id.

25. Plaintiff conveyed to Mrs. B., with the consent of her husband, a tract of land in trust for certain children of Mrs. B. by a former marriage. The conveyance acknowledged the payment of a consideration of twelve thousand dollars, but no part of the sum was actually paid. To secure its payment, together with other indebtedness, Mrs. B. and her husband executed their promissory notes and a mortgage upon other property also held by her in trust for her children. By a subsequent arrangement between the parties, these securities were given up and canceled, and other notes of the same character executed, with a mortgage upon both pieces of property to secure their payment. Plaintiff seeks to enforce a lien against the property for the amount of these notes: Held, that as the plaintiff had actual notice of the trust, no equity was created in his favor by the execution of the mortgage, and the mortgage as such was void; that his lien as vendor was waived by the acceptance of the personal security of Mrs. B.

and her husband, and his only remedy is personal action on the notes.

Griffin v. Blanchar, 17 Cal. 70.

26. The lien of the vendor is not waived in the absence of express agreement to that effect, by the taking of the note or other personal security of the vendee for the purchase money, but is waived by the taking of a distinct and independent security, unless there is at the time an express agreement for its retention.

Baum v. Grigsby, 21 Cal. 172.

27. The equitable lien which a vendor of real estate, after an absolute conveyance, has, for the unpaid purchase money, is waived by the taking of a mortgage to secure the same, although the mortgage is void and can not be enforced.

Camden v. Vail, 23 Cal. 633.

28. The fact that such mortgage is defective does not revive the lien, as it is the intention of the vendor which controls, and this is as well shown by an informal act as one properly done.

Hunt v. Waterman, 12 Cal. 301.

29. A vendor's lien does not exist in this state where a mortgage security is taken for the purchase money. The silent lien of the vendor is extinguished whenever he manifests an intention to abandon or not to look to it. And this intention is manifested by taking other and independent security upon the same land, or a portion of it, or upon other land. Id.

30. P. conveyed lands to M. by deed, which was immediately recorded, without receiving any portion of the purchase money, although it was in said deed recited as having been fully paid. Subsequently M. conveyed said lands to K. and H. for a sound price. From a time long prior to said conveyance from P. to M., to and including said conveyance by M. to K. and H., P. had been in the actual and notorious possession of said lands. At the time of said conveyances, M. was in insolvent circumstances. Subsequently, P. brought action against M., K., and H. to recover personal judgment for said purchase money against M., and to enforce therefor as against K. and H. a vendor's lien on said lands. At the trial P. failed to prove any notice of his equities to K. and H. (who defended on the ground that they were purchasers in good faith, without notice), except such as was imparted to them by P.'s said continued possession of the lands: Held, that the judgment, which was for P., as demanded, against K. and H., was properly rendered. Pell v. McElroy, 36 Cal. 268.

31. Where the lien of the vendor for the purchase money has attached to property before it acquired its character of homestead, neither husband nor wife can hold the property except in subordination to the lien. But this lien gives no right of entry or title; it is a mere right to subject the property to sale, the title and right of possession remaining with the debtors until such sale.

Williams v. Young, 17 Cal. 403.

32. The title to the property in such case can not be acquired by a sale under execution on a judgment at law for the purchase money in the usual form, because such a sale is not an enforcement of the lien. The title, which comes from an enforcement of the lien, can only inure after chancery proceedings to settle the sum due and have the lien declared and a sale decreed. Id.

33. In a bill in equity to enforce the lien, it is not necessary to allege the issuance of execution under a judgment at law previously obtained by the vendor against the purchaser for the amount due, and return of nulla bona to sustain the allegation of insolvency. Walker v. Sedgwick, 8 Cal. 398.

34. Any conduct which shows an intention on the part of a vendor of real estate to give up his lien for the purchase money, will be a bar to its assertion, and the acceptance of collateral security raises the presumption of such intention, though this presumption may be rebutted by evidence.

Griffin v. Blanchard, 17 Cal. 70.

35. If the mortgage was void, this fact does not invalidate the debt intended to be secured by the mortgage.

Shaver v. B. R. & A. Co., 10 Cal. 396.

36. A verbal agreement by the vendee to reconvey the land to the vendor if he does not pay the purchase price does not prevent the enforcement of a vendor's lien.

Gallagher v. Mars, 50 Cal. 23.

37. If the vendor sells and conveys land, with a verbal agreement that the vendee shall pay the purchase price when demanded, the bringing of an action to enforce a vendor's lien is a sufficient demand, and the plaintiff is entitled to have his lien enforced. Id.

38. In 1854, Weber sold certain lands in San Joaquin county to Meroux, who paid part of the purchase price and gave his note for the balance. In 1858, Meroux died intestate, leaving a widow and two sons aged three and five years respectively. The estate was never administered upon. A year afterwards Weber, in an action against the widow and the children, the latter appearing by their guardian ad litem, obtained a decree of the district court enforcing a vendor's lien upon the land, in pursuance of which the land was subsequently sold to Weber: Held, that the decree, so far as it affected the title of the children by succession, was valid, and they could not, after attaining majority, maintain ejectment for the land.

Meroux v. Weber, 53 Cal. 130.

39. The acceptance of a distinct and separate security for the purchase money is, prima facie, a waiver of the vendor's lien, but it is only prima facie, and may be rebutted. In this case the plaintiff manifested throughout an intention to rely upon the land as security for the purchase money, and his vendor's lien was therefore not waived.

WHERE ACTIONS TO BE TRIED.

3. Mining claims are real estate within the meaning of, and are governed by the provisions of this section.

Watts v. White, 13 Cal. 321; 23 Id. 506.

4. Where a suit for real estate is brought in the wrong county, a motion to change the venue, and not demurrer, is the proper remedy; and in such case there is no discretion in the court, the change being matter of right. Id.

5. Defendant has a right to have the action tried in the county of his residence, except in certain cases specified in the statute.

Loehr v. Latham, 15 Cal. 418.

6. Under the act of congress of 1789 and the statute of this state of 1855, respecting the transfer of actions from a state to a United States court, the court to whom the application is made must, before granting it, be satisfied that the application is founded upon facts which entitle the applicant to the order, and for this purpose has the right to inquire into the truth of the facts set forth in the petition, as well as to investigate the sufficiency of the security.

Orosco v. Gagliardo, 22 Cal. 83.

7. To entitle a defendant, sued in the wrong county, to a change of place of trial, demand in writing must be made, as required by the code of civil procedure, section 396. Notice of a motion to change the place of trial is not such a demand.

Estrada v. Oreña, 54 Cal. 407.

8. Upon a motion to change the place of trial, in an action against a sheriff and his sureties, on the ground that the action was not brought in the proper county: Held, that the affidavit of merits (quoted in the opinion) was sufficient; and also that it was not necessary for affidavits to be filed by the other defendants.

Rowland v. Coyne, 55 Cal. 1.

RESIDENCE OF PARTIES.

9. The act of 1858 authorizes suit to be brought in any county designated in the complaint, when the residence of defendant is unknown. But to resist the application of defendant to change the place of trial, on the ground that he resides in a different county, plaintiff must show that he used all due diligence to ascertain the residence.

Loehr v. Latham, 15 Cal. 418.

10. The principal place of business of a corporation is its residence within the meaning of that term, as used in section 20 of the practice act, fixing the place of trial.

Jenkins v. California S. Co., 22 Cal. 537.

Prejudice.

11. Where one hundred citizens united in employing counsel to prosecute the defendant: Held, to be a sufficient ground for a change of venue. People v. Lee, 5 Cal. 353.

12. The granting or refusing of a change of venue, by reason of the bias and prejudice of the citizens of the county, is discretionary with the court, subject to revision only in cases of abuse.

Watson v. Whitney, 23 Cal. 375.

13. The right to move for a change of place of trial is not waived, if the notice of the motion is given at the same time at which the answer and demurrer are filed and served.

Mahe v. Reynolds, 38 Cal. 560.

Convenience of Witnesses.

15. If the action is brought in a county other than that in which the defendant resides, and he moves for a change of venue on this ground, the plaintiff, if he wishes to have the action tried in the county where the action was brought, on account of the convenience of witnesses, must make a counter motion to have it retained. He can not permit the venue to be changed, and then move to return the case to another county.

Edwards v. S. P. R. Co., 48 Cal. 400.

16. When a defendant moves to change the place of trial to the county where he resides, the court should deny the motion, if it appears that the convenience of witnesses requires the cause to be tried in the county where it is pending.

Hall v. C. P. R. Co., 49 Cal. 454.

17. When the action is brought in a county other than that in which the defendant resides, he has a prima facie right to have the venue changed to the county of his residence, but this right is subject to the power of the court to retain the cause for trial in the county in which it was brought, if the convenience of witnesses and ends of justice require it. Hanchett v. Finch, 47 Cal. 192.

18. The court below may exercise its discretion on an application to change the place of trial on account of the convenience of witnesses, and where there is a conflict in the affidavits its ruling will not be disturbed, unless it appears that this discretion has been abused. Id.

19. The mere preponderance in number of witnesses on one side is not necessarily decisive of the application. Id.

INCAPACITY OR BIAS OF JUDGE.

People v. De la Guerra, 24 Cal. 73.

De la Guerra v. Barton, 23 Id. 592.

21. Probate judge who has a power of attorney from any of the persons claiming to be heirs of the deceased, authorizing him to receive for them any money or property to which they might be entitled from the estate, and also letters offering him a percentage upon said proceeds coming to said alleged heir, is interested in the estate, and can not act as judge in any matter pertaining to such estate, except to arrange the calendar or change the venue.

Estate of White, 37 Cal. 190.

22. When the probate judge is interested in an estate, or in money coming to the heirs therefrom, he has jurisdiction to act as judge therein, and should grant a change of venue. It is no excuse for refusing a change of venue in such case to say that the judge decided correctly upon the matter before him, after refusing such change of venue. Id.

23. The exhibition by a judge of partisan feeling, or the unnecessary expression of an opinion upon the justice or merits of a controversy, though exceedingly indecorous, improper, and reprehensible, as calculated to throw suspicion upon the judgment of the court, and bring the administration of justice into contempt, are not, under our statute, sufficient to authorize a change of venue, on the ground that the judge was disqualified from sitting. The law establishes a different rule for determining the qualification of judges from that applied to jurors.

McCauley v. Weller, 12 Cal. 500.

24. Bias or prejudice on part of the judge constitutes no legal incapacity to sit on trial of a cause, nor is it a sufficient ground to authorize a change of place of trial.

People v. Williams, 24 Cal. 31.

25. The fact alone, that the judge on a previous trial of the same cause made an erroneous ruling, is no evidence of the existence of bias or prejudice in his mind. Id.

26. An affidavit made on application to change the place of trial, which states "that the judge, as the affiant is informed, and verily believes, has frequently stated that he believes the affiant guilty of the crime charged in the indictment, and has frequently expressed himself against and adversely to the affiant in connection with said charge," does not merit consideration, as it contains a mere charge upon information and belief, and does not show how the information was obtained, or upon what the belief was based. Id.

PRACTICE.

Motion, When Made.

27. The motion should be made before or at the time of filing a demurrer, when the grounds are apparent on the face of the complaint (Pearkes v. Freer, 9 Cal. 642); or before, as in the answer. It comes too late after an answer to the merits.

Tooms v. Randall, 3 Cal. 438.
Reys v. Sanford, 5 Id. 117.

28. It is not error in the court, on a trial for murder, to postpone the consideration of a motion on the part of the defendant, for a change of venue, until an attempt is made to impanel a jury.

People v. Plummer, 9 Cal. 298.

29. Where a motion is thus postponed, and counsel for prisoner afterwards declines, on the intimation of the court, to renew the motion, he can not take advantage, on appeal, of the failure of the court to order a change of venue. Id.

30. Where a motion was made to change the venue, on the ground that neither of the parties resided in the district; where no objection was made in the answer, and after nearly six months had elapsed before the objection was taken: Held, that the motion came too late, and was properly rejected.

Tooms v. Randall, 3 Cal. 438.

31. Under the provisions of title IV, part II, code of civil procedure, in an action to determine rights to real estate against several parties, each defendant is entitled as a matter of right to have the action tried in the county in which the real estate is situated, and it is not necessary that all the defendants should join in claiming such right. O'Neil v. O'Neil, 54 Cal. 187.

Plaintiff's Counter Motion.

Convenience of Witnesses.

Loehr v. Latham, 15 Cal. 418.

33. On motion by defendant to change the place of trial, on ground that he is sued in the county in which he does not reside, if plaintiff resist the motion because of the convenience of witnesses, the evidence as to the convenience should be as full and particular as that which is required upon application for this cause to transfer the trial to another county. The affidavit must state the names of the witnesses. Id.

34. The practice upon this subject being unsettled, the parties, on the return of the cause, should have an opportunity of fully presenting the merits of the motion. Id.

35. It will operate against the application for a change of venue where the affidavit of the party shows that all the witnesses of his adversary reside in the place from whence he applies to move the trial.

Sloan v. Smith, 3 Cal. 410.

36. The affidavit on motion for change of venue should state the facts in such a manner as to enable the court to draw its own inference whether or not an impartial trial could be had in the particular case. If it fail in this, it will not warrant the court in changing the venue. Id.

37. On application by defendant to change the place of trial on the ground of residence, the plaintiff may resist by showing that the convenience of witnesses and the ends of justice will be promoted by the retention of the cause, and the court may, on a proper showing of such facts, refuse to change the venue.

Jenkins v. California S. Co., 22 Cal. 537.

38. Where a change of venue is asked by defendant on the ground of his residence, if the convenience of witnesses requires that the action should be retained for trial in the court where it was commenced, the plaintiff should present that fact in opposition to the motion, and if he neglects to do so, it is doubtful whether he can afterwards apply to the court to which it has thus been removed to have it sent back again.

Pierson v. McCahill, 22 Cal. 127.

39. Time to file counter affidavits, on a motion to change the place of trial, is a matter of discretion in the lower court, and will not be reviewed on appeal. Id.

Motion may be Waived.

40. The right is one which a party may waive, either expressly or by implication.

Pearkes v. Freer, 9 Cal. 642.

41. It is a mere privilege which may be waived. It is not matter in abatement of the writ. The privilege must be claimed by motion to change the venue at the proper time and place. Watt v. White, 13 Cal. 321.

Overruling Vallejo v. Randall, 5 Cal. 462.

Pearkes v. Freer, 9 Cal. 642.

43. If a defendant, sued in a county where he does not reside, demurs to the complaint, and the demurrer is sustained, and he there demurs to an amended complaint before giving notice of a motion for change of venue, he waives the right to have the case tried in the county where he resides.

Jones v. Frost, 28 Cal. 245.

Granting Motion Discretionary.

44. The granting of a change of venue is discretionary with the court below, subject to review only in the cases of gross abuse.

People v. Fisher, 6 Cal. 154.

Sloan v. Smith, 3 Id. 410.

45. The granting or refusing of a motion to change the venue on the ground of convenience of witnesses is discretionary with the trial court, and subject to review only in cases of abuse.

Pierson v. McCahill, 22 Cal. 127.

46. Although the affidavit upon which the application to change the venue of an action is made may not show any legal cause for such change, still if the court grants the application, it has acted judicially upon a matter within its cognizance and where it was clothed with discretion, and by the order the place of trial becomes changed.

People v. Sexton, 24 Cal. 78.

47. An order refusing a change of venue on the application of defendant in a criminal prosecution will only be reviewed in cases of gross abuse of discretion.

People v. Fisher, 6 Cal. 154.

When Imperative.

48. Where a suit for real estate is brought in the wrong county, a motion to change the venue, and not demurrer, is the proper remedy. And in such case, there is no discretion in the court, the change being a matter of right.

Watts v. White, 13 Cal. 321.

49. Where the same fraudulent debtor confesses several fraudulent judgments in several courts, it would not be necessary for a creditor to bring a different suit in each different court. And where there is an exception to the general rule, it is the business of the plaintiff to show in his complaint that he comes within it.

Uhlfelder v. Levy, 9 Cal. 607.

50. The court is not bound by its own motion, to change the venue.

Vallejo v. Randall, 5 Cal. 461.

Overruled so far as it conflicts with Watts v. White, 13 Cal. 321.

Brooks v. Douglass, 32 Cal. 208.

52. When two motions are pending in an action at the same time, one to change the venue, and one to dismiss, an entry of a judgment of dismissal, without any formal order denying the motion to change the venue, is a virtual denial of the same.

People v. De la Guerra, 24 Cal. 73.

53. The court acts judicially upon a matter within its own cognizance, in making the order changing the venue.

People v. Sexton, 24 Cal. 83.

Appeal from Order.

54. An appeal from an order refusing to change the venue of an action operates as a stay of all further proceedings in the case in the court below until such an appeal is determined. Pierson v. McCahill, 23 Cal. 249.

55. It is error in the court to refuse to change the place of trial upon a proper showing. Grewell v. Walden, 23 Cal. 165.

56. This court having complete appellate power over the right to grant a change of venue, it is not to be supposed that it will trust implicitly in the discretion of inferior courts.

People v. Lee, 5 Cal. 353.

Removing to the Federal Courts.

57. To authorize a transfer of an action, in which there are several defendants, from a state court to a United States court, under the provisions of the judiciary act of 1789, on the ground of the alienage of parties defendant, all of the defendants must be within the description of the persons entitled to a transfer, and all must join in the application.

Calderwood v. Hager, 20 Cal. 167.

58. Thus, where in an action of ejectment commenced in a state court against several defendants, some of whom were citizens of the United States and of this state, and one of whom was an alien residing in the state, an application was made by the alien defendant for a transfer of the case to the United States circuit court under the provisions of said act, which was denied: Held, that the denial was proper.

Id.

59. All defendants in an action in a state court must be aliens or citizens of another state to authorize the removal of the cause to a federal court for trial.

Calderwood v. Braly, 28 Cal. 97.

60. An appeal from the supreme court of this state to the supreme court of the United States is taken within ten days "after rendering the judgment" within the meaning of these terms, as used in the act of congress, and operates as a superior, if the writ of error is sued out and lodged with the clerk and the proper security given, within ten days from the time a petition for rehearing is denied.

Magraw v. McGlynn, 32 Cal. 257.

61. C. being one of four defendants in ejectment, moved to transfer the action to a United States court on the ground of his alienage, and an order was made staying all proceedings until motion could be heard. Before the hearing of the motion plaintiffs dismissed the action as to C. and one other defendant, and took judgment against the other two, who had made default. C. afterwards insisted upon his motion, and filed affidavits tending to show that the defaulting defendants were occupying the premises as his tenants, and were colluding with the plaintiff. The motion was denied, and C. having appealed from that order and from the judgment: Held, that the denial of the motion was proper, as after C.'s dismissal it could not properly be entertained.

Reed v. Calderwood, 22 Cal. 463.

62. One of several parties, defendants to a cause pending in one of the courts of this state, filed his affidavit for its removal to the United States district court, on the ground that he was an alien: Held, that it must appear that the contest was between a citizen of this state, and a citizen of a foreign state.

Welch v. Tennent, 4 Cal. 203.

Greely v. Townsend, 25 Id. 604.

PROBATE PROCEEDINGS.

63. Proceedings for the settlement of an estate, and matters connected therewith, are not civil actions within the meaning of title II of the practice act, so as to transfer them from one county to another.

Estate of Scott, 15 Cal. 220.

64. The probate court of a county has jurisdiction to change the place of trial of an issue of fact to the probate court of another county.

People v. Almy, 46 Cal. 245.

65. When the place of trial of an issue of fact in the probate court is changed to another county, the clerk of the court to which the case is sent can certify a transcript of the proceedings and result of the trial back, and the court from which the case was sent can enter the appropriate judgment.

Id.

66. When an issue of fact is joined in a probate court, as to the competency of a testator to make a will, and three trials, had at great expense, in which the juries disagree, have shown that an impartial jury can not be obtained, it is not error to change the venue.

Id.

TRANSFER.

67. The plaintiff commenced an action of forcible entry and detainer against the defendant, in a justice's court. The justice, instead of trying the case, certified it to the district court: Held, that the transfer was illegal, and could not defeat the plaintiff's rights by operating a discontinuance.

VERDICT.

1. GENERALLY.
53. SPECIAL VERDICT.
70. MONEY VERDICT.
73. CHANCE VERDICT.
79. ENTRY OF VERDICT.
90. IMPEACHING VERDICT.
97. SETTING ASIDE VERDICT.

GENERALLY.

1. A general verdict will conclude all parties who do not answer separately or demand separate verdicts.

Winans v. Christy, 4 Cal. 70.

Ellis v. Jeans, 7 Id. 409.

2. Where a verdict is general, its effect will be limited to such issues as necessarily controlled the action of the jury.

Id.

3. A general verdict does not operate as an estoppel, except as to such matters as were necessarily considered and determined by the jury. A verdict is never conclusive upon immaterial or collateral issues.

McDonald v. B. R. & A. Co., 15 Cal. 145.

4. A verdict found on any fact or title distinctly put in issue is conclusive in another action between the same parties or their privies in respect of the same fact or title.

Kidd v. Laird, 15 Cal. 161.

5. But the fact or title must be material and relevant; must be distinctly in issue; must be tried by the jury, and constitute the basis of their verdict; and, unless specially found, must have been necessarily passed upon by the jury. Id.

6. Where the complaint alleges a trespass on a dam site and dam in the process of erection, and on the site for a canal and the canal thereon surveyed and commenced, that the defendant, with force and arms, expelled the plaintiff from said property, and has since kept him thus expelled, and demands a judgment for damages only, a verdict for the plaintiff for damages does not necessarily find all the facts averred in the complaint. Such verdict does not necessarily find a continual withholding of possession, or other facts entitling plaintiff to an injunction.

N. C. & S. C. Co. v. Kidd, 37 Cal. 282.

7. A joint verdict against the defendants answering and a defaulting defendant is conclusive against all the defendants, when a separate verdict has not been demanded.

Anderson v. Parker, 6 Cal. 197.

Ellis v. Jeans, 7 Id. 409.

8. When several persons whose possessions are not joint, but separate, are joined as defendants in an action to recover land, and no demand is made at the close of the trial for separate verdicts, and no objection or exception is taken to the verdict on that ground, in time to afford an opportunity to correct it, the defendants can not afterwards object to a joint verdict and judgment.

Hicks v. Coleman, 25 Cal. 122.

9. When no damages are claimed in an action to recover real estate, no injury can result from a joint verdict. Id.

10. In an action to recover possession of land the jury rendered the following verdict: "We, the jury in this cause, find a verdict in favor of the plaintiff against defendants, for the possession of the premises described in the complaint herein, and the sum of one hundred and sixty-five dollars damages." Held, to be substantially a general verdict, covering all the issues, and that it does not limit the finding to any particular fact or single issue. Hutton v. Reel, 25 Cal. 478.

See Leese v. Clark, 28 Cal. 26.

11. Where several defendants in ejectment unite in an answer amounting to a general denial, a joint verdict is proper, though the answer concludes with a prayer for separate verdicts. To entitle defendants to separate verdicts they should set forth, with specific description, the parcels which they severally occupy or claim, and thus direct the attention of plaintiff to the course of defense upon which they will separately insist. Patterson v. Ely, 19 Cal. 28.

12. The finding of a jury, or of the court below, acting as a jury, upon a question of fact, is final and conclusive.

Perry v. Cochran, 1 Cal. 180.

Duff v. Fisher, 15 Id. 380.

13. Where the form of the verdict agreed upon in open court, by the respective counsel, was a general verdict as to the whole property, after the jury has found such a verdict for the defendant, it is too late for the plaintiff to insist upon a verdict in a different form, or to assert a right to a portion of the property upon principles not applicable alike to all the property.

Sexey v. Adkison, 40 Cal. 408.

14. The verdict of a jury which finds the plaintiff to be entitled to a certain amount of money, is not void for uncertainty; it is equivalent to saying that they find the issues in favor of the plaintiff and assess his damages at that sum.

Mendelson v. Anaheim L. Co., 40 Cal. 657.

15. If a verdict is so defective that it can not serve as the basis of a judgment, the waiver of the defect, by the other party, and consent that a certain construction thereof should be taken as the verdict, is as irregular and ineffectual as the verdict itself.

Campbell v. Jones, 38 Cal. 507.

16. If a verdict be fatally informal, but before the jury are discharged the party against whom it was given agreed to such an interpretation thereof as would sustain a judgment, such agreement should be held to cure the defects in the verdict. Id.

17. Plaintiff takes up two hundred and twelve acres of land under the possessory act of this state, incloses it, and plants it with fruit and ornamental trees and shrubbery. Defendants enter upon a portion of the tract for mining purposes, dig up and destroy the trees and shrubbery, and threaten to continue such trespasses, claiming the right to do so by paying to plaintiff the money value of the trees, etc. Plaintiff sues for damages for the trespasses committed and asks a perpetual injunction against future trespasses; verdict: "We, the jury, award the plaintiff forty-two dollars damages." Judgment accordingly, the court refusing to perpetuate the injunction. Plaintiff had recovered a similar verdict in a previous suit: Held, that the verdict is conclusive of the rights of the parties, and that perpetual injunction against the trespasses should issue; that the nature of the property destroyed and threatened to be destroyed is such that the injury is irreparable; that plaintiff is not bound to take the mere money value of the trees, as they may possess a peculiar value to him.

Daubenspeck v. Grear, 18 Cal. 443.

18. If the court, instead of having the verdict corrected by the jury, attempted to correct it by the judgment, and go beyond the verdict, it is error.

Ross v. Austill, 2 Cal. 183.

19. The verdict must be confined to the matters put in issue by the pleadings.

Benedict v. Bray, 2 Cal. 251.

Truebody v. Jacobson, Id. 285.

20. When the jury found the only issues involved in the controversy, an exception to the verdict, that no verdict was found upon the issues presented by the pleadings, will not be sustained.

Burritt v. Gibson, 3 Cal. 306.

21. The jury have no right to find a verdict in favor of a party which is contrary to or inconsistent with the pleadings.

Tevie v. Hicks, 41 Cal. 123.

Winans v. Christy, 4 Cal. 70.

23. In ejectment, the verdict may be joint against several defendants, without specifying their respective lots in a whole tract, where they file a joint answer which contains no averment as to the particular portion of land occupied by each, no proof being offered on the point, no damages being claimed, and the defendants being in possession.

McGarvey v. Little, 15 Cal. 27.

24. The verdict of a jury in a chancery case is only advisory to the chancellor or this court.

Still v. Saunders, 8 Cal. 281.

25. In chancery cases, the court below may disregard the verdict of a jury.

Goode v. Smith, 13 Cal. 84.

26. The mere fact that a verdict is entitled in the name of the plaintiff and one of the defendants, is immaterial. It need not be entitled at all.

McGarrity v. Byington, 12 Cal. 426.

27. The mere fact that the pleader had used terms of expression in stating his case which were under the old system of practice used in particular kinds of action, will not necessarily give character to, or determine the effect or meaning of, the verdict.

McLaughlin v. Kelly, 22 Cal. 211.

28. The court may amend the verdict of a jury when it is defective in something merely formal, and which has no connection with the merits of the cause, where the amendment in no respect changes the rights of the parties.

Perkins v. Wilson, 3 Cal. 139.

29. A recovery, if had, must be grounded upon the facts which are averred in the complaint, and not upon those which are denied.

Gregory v. Haworth, 23 Cal. 653.

30. A stipulation that a verdict should be entered in favor of the defendant, saving to the plaintiff the same rights which he would have had in case a jury had actually rendered a verdict for the defendant, should be regarded in precisely the same light as a verdict, and be followed by the same legal results.

Suñol v. Hepburn, 1 Cal. 258.

31. A defective allegation of a fact may be cured by default or verdict, but not so the entire absence of any allegation whatsoever.

Hentsch v. Porter, 10 Cal. 555.

32. Where a declaration states a condition precedent, and fails to aver performance, the defect must be urged on demurrer; it comes too late after verdict.

Happe v. Stout, 2 Cal. 461.

33. An omission to allege delivery, in an action on a bond, can be taken advantage of only on demurrer, and not after verdict.

Garcia v. Satrustegui, 4 Cal. 244.

Wilkins v. Stidger, 22 Id. 231.

34. A verified complaint, which, in stating a special demand essential to the cause of action, contains only the general averment that "defendants, though often requested, have refused," etc., is sufficient in this respect, unless demurred to for want of certainty. If not demurred to, the defective averment is cured by verdict and judgment, and the objections can not be raised for the first time in the appellate court.

Mills v. Barney, 22 Cal. 240.

Jones v. Block, 30 Id. 227.

35. When a complaint contains the substantial averments of a cause of action, though defective in form and certainty, the defect is cured by a verdict or default.

People v. Rains, 23 Cal. 127.

36. Where several defenses are pleaded, either of which is good in law, and the verdict is for the defendants, and the court errs in its instructions to the jury as to one of the defenses, the judgment will be reversed, unless it is made to appear that the verdict was rendered on one of the defenses, in relation to which no error was committed.

Wiseman v. McNulty, 25 Cal. 230.

37. The general rule as to the effect of a verdict upon defects in pleading is that wherever facts are not expressly stated which are so essential to a recovery that, without proof of them on the trial, a verdict could not have been rendered under the direction of the court, there the want of the express statement is cured by the verdict, provided the complaint contain terms sufficiently general to comprehend the facts in fair and reasonable intentment.

Garner v. Marshall, 9 Cal. 268.

38. Where there is enough in the verdict to ascertain the intention of the jury, the court may instruct the jury to amend it as to form, not affecting the substance, so as to make it good in law, and it is error in the court not to give effect to the verdict where such intention can be ascertained.

Truebody v. Jacobson, 2 Cal. 269.

39. If the statement discloses no refusal on the part of the judge of the court below to charge the jury on any matter submitted, nor is any erroneous charge assigned as error, the verdict of the jury must be considered as having settled all the facts of the case.

George v. Law, 1 Cal. 364.

40. The court in this case having instructed the jury that, if they found that plaintiffs were entitled to the mining ground, they must find a verdict for one thousand dollars damages upon the admissions of the answer: Held, that because the jury brought in a verdict for one instead of one thousand dollars damages, it was not therefore to be concluded, in direct opposition to their general verdict, that they did not find the title in the plaintiffs. The damages being admitted by the pleadings were not in issue, and the verdict in that respect was immaterial.

McLaughlin v. Kelly, 22 Cal. 211.

41. Where a jury are instructed to bring in a sealed verdict, and they retire, and after agreeing upon the verdict, seal it up and give it to the officer in charge of them, the clerk being absent, and request him to give it to the clerk, which is done; and after the meeting of the court the following morning, the verdict is opened, in the presence of the jury, and read by the clerk, without exception: Held, that this is not an error sufficient to warrant a new trial. The possession by such officer left the verdict as much in the possession of the court itself as if it had been directly delivered to the clerk.

Paige v. O'Neal, 12 Cal. 483.

42. Nor will it make any difference when the names of the jurors were not called and they were not asked whether they had agreed upon their verdict, where the parties were present and took no exception at the time; and where it is not pretended that the verdict entered differs from the one sealed up, or that the result is in any respect affected by the omission. Id.

43. In ejectment for a tract of land, plaintiff under a deed from one McDowell, the case turned upon the question whether plaintiff, at the time of his purchase from McDowell, had notice of a prior verbal sale of the land from McDowell to defendant. The jury to whom this question had been submitted in special issues, returned a verdict, "if possession was notice, he had:" Held, that this finding is insufficient, because equivocal, neither finding directly the fact of possession, nor the time of it, nor the kind of possession. Woodson v. McCune, 17 Cal. 298.

44. This court refused in this case to render judgment in favor of defendants upon the findings, on the ground that the verdict does not find the facts in issue with sufficient distinctness. Id.

45. Where the point on which the case hinged was whether Kappelman & Co., who employed plaintiff to do work, acted as contractors in their individual capacity or as agents of defendants, and the jury found a special verdict that "the work and labor done by plaintiff in the construction of the dam was done at the instance and request of Kappelman & Co., who were the agents of the corporation defendant:" Held, that this verdict does not support a judgment for plaintiff, because it does not show in and of itself a legal conclusion of liability, not finding whether K. & Co. acted as agents or otherwise.

Garfield v. K. F. & T. M. Co., 17 Cal. 510.

46. The jury under a general submission found "a verdict in favor of plaintiffs, with one dollar damages:" Held, that the verdict decided the question of title in favor of plaintiffs, and that upon it they were entitled to a decree perpetually enjoining defendants from working upon the ground claimed in the complaint; that this equitable relief was a matter of right, the denial of which by the district court was error.

McLaughlin v. Kelly, 22 Cal. 211.

47. Courts may impose, as a condition of allowing a verdict to stand in other respects, the remission of damages in cases where there was no evidence on the subject of damages, or where the evidence was entirely incompetent, or where the court differs from the jury as to the effect of the evidence. But where, as in this case, the verdict for the damages was based entirely upon an admission by the record, it must stand. The admission, if good for anything, is good for the entire amount specified.

Patterson v. Ely, 19 Cal. 28.

48. The verdict of a jury is a matter of record, and copies thereof may be sufficiently authenticated by the certificate of the clerk.

Reynolds v. Harris, 8 Cal. 618.

49. It is the office of a trial jury, by their verdict, to find the facts in issue, whether general or special, and with the legal effect of those facts they have no concern.

Fitzpatrick v. Himmelmänn, 48 Cal. 588.

50. A verdict of guilty of an "unlawful entry and forcible detainer" is proper in form, under the second section of the forcible entry and detainer act of April 2, 1866. The third section of the act applies to a different class of detainers.

Conroy v. Duane, 45 Cal. 597.

51. In an action for a forcible and unlawful entry and detainer of a mine, against a corporation and C. and V., the jury returned a verdict of guilty as to C. and V., and not guilty as to the corporation: Held, that such verdict is conclusive that the plaintiff was peaceably in actual possession of the premises at the time of the entry; that unlawful and forcible entry on his possession was made by the defendants C. and V., and that the corporation did not participate in the trespass. Fremont v. Crippen, 10 Cal. 211.

52. The peaceable and actual possession of the plaintiff is incompatible with the lawful possession of another, and such a verdict is conclusive against the possession of the corporation. Id.

SPECIAL VERDICT.

53. The practice act confers express authority upon the courts below to direct a special verdict. Burritt v. Gibson, 3 Cal. 396.

54. The court may direct a special verdict to be entered in the action. Id.

55. Where special issues are submitted to a jury, they should include all questions of fact raised by the pleadings and necessary to determine the case, and should be separately and distinctly stated, so that each question should relate only to one fact.

Phoenix W. Co. v. Fletcher, 23 Cal. 492.

56. A special verdict settles the facts, and the court, by its judgment, pronounces the conclusions of law upon the facts found. If the court errs in this respect, the error may be reviewed without any motion for new trial; but the right to correct the verdict does not depend upon the judgment, and the steps necessary for that purpose must be taken within the statutory time.

Allen v. Hill, 16 Cal. 113.

57. A special verdict must, under section 174 of the practice act, find the facts expressly and specially, and not generally or impliedly. Breeze v. Doyle, 19 Cal. 101.

58. It is the province of the court to determine as to what particular facts the jury shall find specially, and neither party has the right to dictate the terms of any particular question to be submitted to the jury. American Co. v. Bradford, 27 Cal. 360.

59. In an action to recover a quartz ledge, when the defendants deny plaintiffs' title and ouster, and set up title in themselves to a part only of the ledge, a special verdict awarding defendants that portion of the ledge they claim without a general verdict, if accepted by plaintiffs, is a finding in favor of defendants, and entitles them to costs.

Gonzales v. Leon, 31 Cal. 98.

60. The acceptance by the plaintiff of a special verdict which gives defendant part of the property in dispute, without a finding on the other issues, is a withdrawal from the consideration of the court of all that property in relation to which there is no finding. Id.

61. A special verdict that defendants are entitled to all of a quartz ledge between their notices, being three hundred and fifty feet more or less, gives defendants all between the notices, if more than three hundred and fifty feet. Id.

62. The party in whose favor a judgment is rendered on a special verdict must move for a new trial, if he is not satisfied with the verdict, as the latter must otherwise be conclusive upon the facts in the appellate court. Garwood v. Simpson, 8 Cal. 101.

Duff v. Fisher, 15 Id. 389.

63. Where in an action against a steamer for setting fire to plaintiff's fence, the jury was instructed, among other things, to find specially as to the negligence of the captain or crew of the steamer, and they found generally for plaintiff, four hundred dollars damages; and, also, that the steamer's spark-catcher was not sufficient to prevent the sparks from communicating with the shore and endangering property, the verdict was held good in the absence of any objection at the time of its rendition, that it was not responsive to the special direction.

Algier v. Steamer Maria, 14 Cal. 167.

64. Probably the finding, apart from the general verdict, was a finding of negligence, for an insufficient spark-catcher is hardly distinguishable from none at all; and this is proof of negligence. Id.

65. When the jury are directed by the court to find a general verdict, and also to make a special finding of facts upon questions submitted to them, and a general verdict is returned in favor of one party, while the finding upon the special issues is in favor of the other party, the court should render judgment in accordance with the special finding, if they embrace all the issues raised in the pleadings. If, however, there is any one in issue in the pleadings, not covered by the special findings, the judgment should be rendered on the general verdict.

McDermott v. Higby, 23 Cal. 489.

66. When a jury renders a general verdict and also special findings, the latter will control the former if there is any inconsistency between them; and the court will direct judgment to be entered in accordance with the special findings.

Leese v. Clark, 20 Cal. 387.

67. Where special issues are submitted to a jury, and they announce that they can not agree upon the special issues, but can agree upon a general verdict, and by consent of the counsel on both sides the special issues are withdrawn, and a general verdict received by the court, no error is committed.

Mitchell v. Hockett, 25 Cal. 539.

Leese v. Clark, 20 Id. 387.

68. When the jury are directed by the court to find a general verdict, and also to make a special finding of facts upon questions submitted to them—and a general verdict is returned in favor of one party, while the findings upon the special issues are in favor of the other party—the court should render judgment in accordance with the special findings, if they embrace all the issues raised in the pleadings. If, however, there is any one issue in the pleadings not covered by the special findings, the judgment should be rendered on the general verdict.

McDermott v. Higby, 23 Cal. 489.

69. If the jury have special issues submitted to them, and find on these issues, and also find a general verdict for the plaintiff, and when the verdict is read, the court declares that on the findings the defendant must have judgment, and some of the jury then dissent from the special verdict, and the court sends them out for further deliberation, and they then return with general verdict, but are unable to agree on the special verdict, the court should not accept the general verdict. Fitzpatrick v. Himmelmann, 48 Cal. 588.

MONEY VERDICT.

70. The theory of the law is, not that the party recover the particular note or chose in action, as is commonly imagined, but that he recover damages for the non-performance of the contract; and in case of failure to pay money due, the true damage is the amount of money owing, and the interest which was agreed upon. Guy v. Franklin, 5 Cal. 417.

71. An action on an appeal bond, in which defendants claim the right to offset the balance of a decree in a foreclosure suit, which they have purchased and now hold against James R. Duff and James T. Ryan; and eleven other defendants in that suit, upon the ground that James R. Duff and James T. Ryan are the parties beneficially interested in the claim in suit in this action, and that they and the other eleven defendants in the decree sought to be offset are insolvent; Held, that the set-off can not be allowed, as well because of the provisions of section 47 of the practice act, which require a counter claim to be between parties to the record between whom a several judgment might be had in this action, as of the provisions of sections 176 and 199, which would require a judgment for the excess to be given against the plaintiff, although as against him it is not claimed that defendants have any demand. Duff v. Hobbs, 19 Cal. 646.

72. A verdict for the recovery of money must be certain as to the amount.

Watson v. Damon, 54 Cal. 278.

CHANCE VERDICT.

73. When jurors agree each one to mark down the sum he thinks proper to find as damages, and then to divide the total amount of those sums by the number of persons composing the jury, which result should be their verdict, a verdict thus found is irregular, and will be set aside.

Wilson v. Berryman, 5 Cal. 44.

74. But if such means be adopted merely to arrive at a proper result for the purpose of determining what the verdict shall be, without any being bound thereby, and afterwards the jury agree upon such sum as their verdict, the court will not disturb it. Id.

75. Such verdicts are regarded in the same light as gambling verdicts. Id.

76. The jury entered into an agreement that each should mark down upon a separate piece of paper the amount which he thought the plaintiffs were justly entitled to recover, and that the several sums thus marked should be added together and the total amount divided by twelve, and that the quotient, whatever it might be, should be their verdict without further consultation or discussion: Held, that this was not a chance verdict, within the meaning of the second subdivision of the one hundred and ninety-third section of the practice act; held, further, that such verdict was vicious, and should be set aside if the facts were proved by competent testimony.

Turner v. Tuolumne W. Co., 25 Cal. 397.

77. A verdict which is arrived at by each one of the jurymen marking such sum as he thinks proper, and then adding the several sums together and dividing the total by twelve and making the quotient the verdict, is not a chance verdict within the meaning of the second subdivision of section 193 of the practice act.

Boyce v. Cal. Stage Co., 25 Cal. 460.

People v. Hughes, 29 Id. 257.

78. A verdict to which the assent of any of the jurors was obtained by a resort to chance will be set aside.

Donner v. Palmer, 23 Cal. 40.

ENTRY OF VERDICT.

79. Where an informal verdict is received and recorded by the consent of the plaintiffs, and judgment in form is afterwards entered thereon, on appeal, the informality will not be considered.

Treadwell v. Wells, 4 Cal. 260.

80. The court should direct the verdict of a jury to be recorded as rendered by it. That will be treated as the verdict which the jury actually brings in.

Moody v. McDonald, 4 Cal. 297.

81. Before a verdict is recorded it should be declared by the foreman of the jury, or if sealed, read by the clerk, so that the parties may be distinctly informed of its purport. It is irregular to record the verdict before it is thus announced, but the irregularity must be objected to at the time, or it will not be noticed on the appeal.

Blum v. Pate, 29 Cal. 69.

82. Assent to a recorded verdict, expressed by the foreman, is conclusive upon all the jury, unless a disagreement is expressed at the time. Id.

83. If the jury fails to find the fact of a lien, the court can not render a judgment essentially different from the verdict, and the judgment so far will be reversed.

Walker v. Hauss-Hijo, 1 Cal. 186.

84. If the court, instead of having the verdict corrected by the jury, attempt to correct it by the judgment, and go beyond the verdict, it is error.

Kilburn v. Ritchie, 2 Cal. 145.

85. Where there is no question as to the proper judgment to be entered on a verdict, the judgment should be entered at once, without waiting for a motion for a new trial.

Hutchinson v. Bours, 13 Cal. 50.

86. A court may, in term time or vacation, order verdict on a judgment rendered and recorded, if the motion for a new trial were taken under advisement. Id.

87. The judgment in pursuance of the verdict is the act of law upon record facts, and follows as a matter of course, unless the court intervene. Id.

88. Counsel, in the trial of a cause, can not object that the court did not render judgment on the special verdict of the jury, where they have stipulated that such additional facts may be found by the judge as would, in his judgment, be sufficient to present all the questions raised by the pleadings.

Marius v. Bicknell, 10 Cal. 224.

89. If the verdict of a jury goes beyond the issues raised by the pleadings, and passes upon an extraneous fact not embraced therein, it is void pro tanto, and the surplus matter may be disregarded in entering the judgment.

Marquard v. Wheeler, 52 Cal. 445.

IMPEACHING VERDICT.

People v. Baker, 1 Cal. 403.

91. The affidavit of jurors will not be allowed to contradict their verdict.

Castro v. Gill, 5 Cal. 40.

Amsby v. Dickhouse, 4 Id. 102.

Wilson v. Berryman, 5 Id. 44.

Boyce v. Cal. Stage Co., 25 Id. 475.

92. It seems that the testimony of the sheriff is competent to disclose what transpires in the jury-room.

Wilson v. Berryman, 5 Cal. 44.

93. The appellate court must infer in favor of the verdict below, unless error is clearly manifest.

Allen v. Phelps, 4 Cal. 259.

94. The amendment of 1862 to section 193 of the practice act, allowing the affidavits of jurors to be received to impeach their own verdict, relates merely to the remedy, and governs in all applications for new trial made after its passage, although the verdict and judgment sought to be set aside were rendered previously.

Donner v. Palmer, 23 Cal. 40.

95. The affidavits of jurors can not be received for the purpose of impeaching their verdict, unless it is a chance verdict within the meaning of the second subdivision of the one hundred and ninety-third section of the practice act.

Turner v. Tuolumne W. Co., 25 Cal. 397.

Boyce v. Cal. Stage Co., 25 Id. 460.

96. The affidavits, of the jurymen who rendered a verdict, that they misunderstood its effect, can not be received to impeach or defeat it.

Polhemus v. Heiman, 50 Cal. 438.

SETTING ASIDE VERDICT.

97. A general objection to the form of a verdict, without any specification of the particulars in which it is alleged to be defective, will not be considered.

Mahoney v. Van Winkle, 21 Cal. 552.

98. Where the law declares certain facts conclusive evidence of fraud, a verdict against such conclusion will be set aside; but where the facts are declared merely presumptive evidence of fraud, the jury may find against such presumption.

Billings v. Billings, 2 Cal. 107.

99. The admission of improper testimony is no ground for disturbing a verdict, where it is evident by the verdict itself that no injury was done thereby to the party objecting to its admission.

Priest v. Union Canal Co., 6 Cal. 170.

100. Where there are several separate defenses, each of which is sufficient to defeat the action, and these defenses are submitted to the jury, with evidence in support of each, and the verdict is general for the defendants, it can not be set aside, if it be right as to any one issue, though wrong as to all the others.

Kidd v. Laird, 15 Cal. 161.

101. The practice act applies as well to legal as equitable actions, so far as its provisions are consistent with the rights and remedies administered in courts of equity. And the only way in which the verdict of a jury on issues submitted can be reviewed is by motion for new trial—except, probably, that the court, whether sitting in equity or on the trial of a common law action, may, of its own motion, set aside the verdict of a jury when clearly and palpably against the evidence.

Duff v. Fisher, 15 Cal. 375.

102. Verdict on contradictory proof not interfered with by the supreme court.

Baker v. Joseph, 16 Cal. 173.

103. A verdict obtained upon incompetent evidence may be set aside; but this can not be done if the evidence were admitted without objection, nor can it be done upon the ground that effect was given to the evidence by the jury, even if objected to.

McCloud v. O'Neill, 16 Cal. 392.

104. In such cases, that which vitiates the verdict, is the error of the court in admitting the evidence, and if the party seeking to set aside the verdict be not in a position to take advantage of this error, he can not object that the evidence was improperly admitted.

Id.

105. When the verdict returned by the jury is informal, it is the duty of the court to explain to them its defects, and direct them to put it in proper form.

People v. Dick, 34 Cal. 663.

106. Where a case is tried by a jury, if the judge is not satisfied with the verdict, and is convinced that it is clearly against the weight of the evidence, it is his duty to set it aside, even though there may have been some conflict in the testimony.

Dickey v. Davis, 39 Cal. 565.

107. A verdict will not be set aside as contrary to the evidence, where there were but two parties to the transaction, and one of them is dead, and the survivor, the only witness, is contradicted on other matters, and does not testify positively as to the existence of the fact on which the jury found.

VERIFICATION.

1. The verification prescribed by sections 55 and 113 of the practice act, though differing in form, is the same in substance. A party who swears to the truth of a pleading thereby affirms a knowledge of its contents, even though his affidavit does not contain the statement that he has read or heard it read, and knows the contents thereof.

Patterson v. Ely, 19 Cal. 28.

2. The object of the verification is to insure good faith in the averments of the party. If he aver matters positively, the verification will be sufficient if his affidavit states that the pleading is true of his own knowledge; if he aver matters "upon information and belief," or "upon information or belief," the verification will be sufficient if his affidavit state, that as to the matters thus averred, he believes the pleading to be true.

Id.

3. The omission of the words "when it is verified," in the act of 1860, amending the sixty-fifth section of the practice act, is a mere clerical misprision. The amendment by the act of 1860 to this section, and also to section 46, was not designed to change the character of answers or to abolish any distinction between those verified and those not verified.

Skirm v. Farrand, 18 Cal. 314.

4. Held, that the exhibits attached to the answer, consisting of copies of the pleadings and proceedings in the action in the United States circuit court, needed no further verification than what arises from the statement in the answer that they are such copies; that no distinct verification of them was requisite; and that were it otherwise, then the certificate of the United States circuit court clerk was sufficient.

Ely v. Frisbie, 17 Cal. 250.

5. The word "belief" is to be taken in its ordinary sense, and means the actual conclusion of the party drawn from information. Positive knowledge and mere belief can not exist together.

Humphreys v. McCall, 9 Cal. 59.

6. Where in ejectment, the verification to the complaint made by one of the plaintiffs is, that "the foregoing complaint is true of his own knowledge, except as to the matters therein stated on the information and belief of plaintiffs, and as to those matters he believes it to be true:" Held, that the verification is sufficient, although the person making the oath does not state that he "has read the complaint, or heard the complaint read, and knows the contents thereof."

Patterson v. Ely, 19 Cal. 28.

7. Defendants in this case, in answer to a rule to show cause why an injunction should not issue, filed their answer denying fully the allegations of the complaint, and verified in substance thus: "Wm. H. P., one of the defendants, being sworn, says his co-defendant F. left this state for the state of New York before the complaint herein was filed, and is not in this state; that the foregoing answer is true, of this defendant's own knowledge, except as to the matters therein stated to be upon the information and belief of defendants, and as to those matters, he, this defendant, believes the same to be true:" Held, that the verification of the answer, though not complying in form with the exact language of the statute, is sufficient to entitle the answer to be used as an affidavit.

Ely v. Frisbie, 17 Cal. 250.

8. No expression of belief in a verification is necessary, if a pleading does not contain a statement of any matters on information and belief. Patterson v. Ely, 19 Cal. 28.

9. The attorney of plaintiff being a notary public, may take the affidavit verifying the complaint.

Kuhland v. Sedgwick, 17 Cal. 123.

10. A jurat to an answer is in form and substance an affidavit, and may be taken before a county recorder.

Pfeiffer v. Riehn, 13 Cal. 643.

11. A verification to a complaint is sufficient, though made by only one of the plaintiffs. Patterson v. Ely, 19 Cal. 28.

12. By verification of the complaint the plaintiff can prevent the defendant from interposing a general denial in suits on promissory notes or bills of exchange, by requiring a sworn answer.

Brooks v. Chilton, 9 Cal. 640.

13. The verification of an answer may be omitted whenever the defendant would be excused from testifying as a witness to the truth of any matter denied by such answer.

25. MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS.

OWNERSHIP OF.

1. The transfer of a minority interest in a vessel by virtue of a sale under execution, does not confer on the purchaser any more extensive control than the execution debtor himself enjoyed; and, as a general rule, the majority of owners can control not only the employment and destination of a vessel, but also the appointment of a person to take charge of her as master. It does not alter the case, that the debtor was the master of the vessel, for his right to the possession and command is not the subject of sale on execution.

Loring v. Illsley, 1 Cal. 24.

2. Where the master of a vessel was one-third owner, and all his right, title and interest in the vessel had been sold under execution against him: Held, that the purchaser of his one-third interest was not entitled to supersede the master in the command of the vessel, nor deprive him of the possession thereof. Id.

3. The owner of a ship, chartered by and in the name of his agent, may, although he is not mentioned in the charter party, be shown by intrinsic evidence to be the principal in the contract, and will be allowed to avail himself of its provisions.

Brooks v. Minturn, 1 Cal. 481.

4. The rule of law that possession of personal property is prima facie evidence of ownership, is uniform in its application. The question of the ownership of a vessel forms no exception to the rule.

Bailey v. New World, 2 Cal. 370.

5. When the master of the vessel was in possession, and the record did not disclose any other owner, the admissions of the master were admissible in evidence with the same effect as if the suit had been against the master himself. Id.

6. If a vessel is chartered in the usual way, either for a particular voyage or for a period of time, the charterer having authority to appoint the master, and undertaking to victual, man, and navigate her at his own expense, he will be deemed the owner pro hac vice, and the general owner will not be personally liable on contracts of affreightment or for supplies.

Oakland C. M. Co. v. Jennings, 46 Cal. 175.

7. If the owner charters the hold of his vessel, but appoints her master and sails her at his own expense, he will be liable on contracts of affreightment made by the master with shippers who have no notice of the charter party. Id.

8. If the registered owner of a vessel appoints her master, with an agreement that the master is to have the entire control of the vessel, and victual and man her, and make contracts of affreightment, and divide the gross earnings with the owner, the owner is liable on contracts of affreightment made by the master with shippers who have no notice of the arrangement between the master and owner.

Tomlinson v. Holt, 49 Cal. 310.

9. The master of a vessel is presumed, even at a home port, to have authority to contract for such articles for the use of the vessel as come under the general appellation of ship's stores, and the owner of the vessel is liable for the value of the same, unless he shows that the master had not such power.

Crawford v. Roberts, 50 Cal. 235.

10. If supplies for a vessel are purchased at a home port, by the captain, with the knowledge and consent of the ship's husband, the owners are, prima facie, liable for the same. Id.

11. In such case the owners are liable, even if credit is given to the ship's husband, unless exclusive credit was given to him. Id.

LIEN UPON.

12. One part owner of a vessel has no lien on the shares of the other part owners for his advances and disbursements.

Sterling v. Hanson, 1 Cal. 478.

13. Where it appears clearly from a charter party, that the intention of the owner of the ship and the charterer is that the former shall have no lien on the freight, but shall give a personal credit to the charterer, the former loses his right of lien on the cargo, and can look only to the personal responsibility of the charterer for the payment of the hire of the vessel.

Brown v. Howard, 1 Cal. 423.

14. Thus, where it was agreed in a charter party that a vessel should be chartered for fifteen months, at two thousand dollars per month, to be employed in the Pacific trade, and that the payments for the hire of the vessel should be made semi-annually in the city of New York: Held, that the owner of the vessel had lost his right of lien on the cargo for the non-payment of the sum stipulated in the charter party. Id.

15. Where A., the owner of a sea-going vessel, executes to B. a mortgage thereon, which is recorded in the custom-house of her home port, B. commences suit to foreclose the mortgage, and makes C. a party defendant thereto, on the ground that he has purchased the vessel, subject to the lien of plaintiff's mortgage. C., in his defense, avers that the mortgage was void under our statute of frauds, and that he now held the vessel discharged from the same: Held, that the mortgage was a valid lien, and that the record of the mortgage was sufficient notice thereof to C. Mitchell v. Steelman, 8 Cal. 363.

16. If a credit is given for supplies and materials furnished a vessel, the lien of the person furnishing the same, for the price thereof, continues on the vessel for the period of one year from the time the demand falls due.

Edgerly v. Schr. San Lorenzo, 29 Cal. 418.

PROCEEDINGS AGAINST.

17. An act of the legislature authorized the issuing of attachments against boats and vessels "used in navigating the waters of this state;" and held, that the Sea Witch, which belonged to the port of New York, was intended for the New York and China trade, had been in the harbor of San Francisco but a few days, and was never otherwise used in navigating the waters of this state than by sailing into the harbor of San Francisco from the ocean, was not, within the meaning of the statute, a boat or vessel used in navigating the waters of this state.

Souter v. Sea Witch, 1 Cal. 162.

18. Where a bond was given in pursuance of section 8 of the act passed April 10, 1850, providing for the collection of demands against boats and vessels, for the discharge of the vessel, in a case where the vessel was not liable to be attached under the act: Held, that judgment rendered against the principal and sureties in the bond was erroneous, on the ground that a bond given for the release of a vessel, when the vessel was not liable to seizure under that act, was invalid. McQueen v. Ship Russell, 1 Cal. 165.

19. The fact that a vessel, lost while being towed out to sea, is insured, does not divest the owner of the right of action for damages for her loss, especially in the case of a mere partial insurance, for in such a case the abandonment by the owner only transfers his interest so far as that interest is covered by the policy. White v. Mary Ann, 6 Cal. 462.

20. A recovery by the owner in such an action will bar another action for the same cause, and therefore the defendant can not raise the objection that the action is not brought by the real party in interest. Id.

21. In actions against boats and vessels, it is not necessary that the vessel should be attached in order to acquire a lien, as against subsequent purchasers.

Meiggs v. Scannell, 7 Cal. 405.

22. In an action against boats and vessels under the statute, the service of process in the manner prescribed by statute is equivalent to an actual seizure. Id.

23. It seems, that where a chartered vessel is seized and detained by a revenue officer of the United States, the charterer can not be made liable for demurrage during the period of such detention.

Brooks v. Minturn, 1 Cal. 481.

24. In actions against boats and vessels, under the statute, the lien attaches only when service is had in the suit. It was not the intention of the legislature to make the lien attach when the liability was incurred.

Fisher v. White, 8 Cal. 418.

MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS.

25. In order to authorize the captain of a vessel to pledge or sell the property of his owners for necessities, certain facts must be established: The vessel must be in a foreign port; the voyage must be unfinished; the pledge or sale must be indispensable to enable the ship to complete her voyage.

Marziou v. Pioche, 8 Cal. 522.

26. Vessels plying between San Francisco and Sacramento, and San Francisco and Stockton, are liable to the payment of harbor dues to the city and county of San Francisco.

San Francisco v. S. N. Co., 10 Cal. 504.

27. A sale of a vessel of the United States, at sea, forfeits her national character, unless the new owner pursues all the requisites of the law to obtain a new registry within five days after her arrival in a port of the United States. Davidson v. Gorham, 6 Cal. 343.

28. The responsibility of taking a position or berth for a vessel in port rests upon the master of the vessel or the harbor master; therefore the owner is not exempt from liability for injuries committed by taking an improper berth, although such berth may have been selected by the pilot who brought the vessel into port.

Griswold v. Sharpe, 2 Cal. 17.

29. The registry of the bill of sale and mortgage at the expected port of arrival before her arrival, it seems, in no way affects the question of the national character of the vessel. Davidson v. Gorham, 6 Cal. 343.

30. Where the new owner under such a sale mortgaged the vessel while still at sea, neither the bill of sale nor the mortgage being registered at the port of departure where the vessel was registered: Held, that the mortgage was good against attaching creditors of the new owner, who levied immediately on her arrival, neither party taking the requisite steps to obtain a new registry; as the vessel had lost her national character, and was therefore not subject to the provisions of the law requiring the registry of sales and mortgages. Id.

31. The registration of vessels is not compulsory upon their owners, it being a privilege and advantage, of which they may or may not avail themselves, as they choose. Id.

32. Where a sale of a vessel is made, part cash, and the balance of the purchase money to be paid upon delivery by the vendor to the vendee of a good title and register of the vessel, to recover the balance the vendor must show an offer on his part to comply with the agreement.

Fowler v. Fisk, 12 Cal. 112.

2. A party placing money in the hands of another for the purpose of making a bet on an election, in the name of the bailee, but for the benefit of the bailor, may retract the illegal act of making the bet, and does not forfeit the money by reason of the illegality of the purpose for which it was deposited.

Hardy v. Hunt, 11 Cal. 343.

3. The bailor does not part with the ownership by allowing it to be used for his benefit, though in the name of another. The money in the hands of the agent remains, as between him and the principal, the money of the principal. Id.

4. Upon the retraction of the wager, the right to the possession of the money is in the agent or bailee, and he may maintain an action for it where the bailor interposes no objection. Id.

5. At common law, wagers made in respect to matters not affecting the feelings, interest, or character of third persons, or the public peace or good morals, or public policy, are legal contracts, which may be enforced by action. Johnston v. Russell, 37 Cal. 670.

6. Wagers upon the result of elections are against public policy, and are therefore void; and hence, money put up in the hands of a stakeholder may be recovered if the wager be repudiated and a return of the money be demanded at any time before the election has taken place, and the result has become generally known, but not thereafter.

Id.

7. J. made a wager with F. that Seymour would receive a majority of the votes cast in this state at the presidential election in 1868, and F. made a wager with J. that Grant would receive a majority of said votes. The money was put in the hands of R. as stakeholder. After the election had taken place and the result had become known, J., having lost his wager, notified R. that he repudiated the wager, and demanded his money, but R., notwithstanding, paid the money to F., according to the terms of the wager. In an action by J. against R. to recover his stake, it was held that a recovery could not be had.

Id.

8. Wagers upon the result of public elections are illegal and void upon grounds of public policy. Hill v. Kidd, 43 Cal. 615.

9. An action to obtain affirmative relief, upon a contract of wager made upon the result of a public election, can not be maintained. Id.

WAR.

1. The passage by the legislature of an act creating a debt for the purpose of repelling invasion or suppressing a rebellion, without a submission of the question to a vote of the people, which act recites in its preamble the existence of war, and refers in the body of the act to such recital for the reasons which operated upon that body to induce the passage of the act, is evidence of a determination by the legislature that the exigency justifying its action in creating the debt has arisen.

WAREHOUSE.

1. When a warehouseman, who has goods in charge, states to one who is about to take possession of the same, by a legal process, that he has no charges on the goods, this is a waiver of the warehouseman's lien for charges, if any he had.

Blackman v. Pierce, 23 Cal. 508.

2. The transfer of a warehouse receipt, in good faith and in the ordinary course of business, operates to transfer to the holder the title to the goods covered by the receipt.

WARRANT (ARREST).

CRIMINAL LAW, 476.

WARRANT (TREASURY).

1. In the absence of an unexhausted specific appropriation to meet a warrant of the controller on the state treasurer, a warrant on the treasurer is absolutely void.

Butler v. Bates, 7 Cal. 136.

2. Warrants drawn by the controller of state, delivered to the payees thereof, and by them indorsed in blank, were presented by the holders to the state treasurer, and on payment were delivered to him. They were afterwards stolen from the office of the treasurer. The warrants, on their face indicating a just and legal claim against the state, came into the hands of defendants, ignorant that they had been stolen. Defendants present them to the treasurer, and in lieu thereof, receive state bonds payable to bearer, under the funding act of 1857, and part with them. The state sues for the bonds or their value: Held, that the action does not lie; that defendants having received the bonds bona fide, and without fraud, for warrants apparently good against the state, are not liable in this form of action.

State vs. Wells, 15 Cal. 336.

3. Where the order for the allowance of a county warrant is assailed by the county, in a court of equity, for fraud, the circumstances must be set out, and it must be shown how and why the county made no defense to the claim while the proceedings to establish it were before the supervisors. The mere fact that a party made an unjust claim, and supported it by unjust practices, is not sufficient to authorize the interposition of equity.

El Dorado Co. v. Elstner, 18 Cal. 144.

4. A warrant issued by the auditor of a county, and which had been duly presented by the holder to the treasurer, for payment, and indorsed by him "not paid for the want of funds," prior to the passage of the act, and the holder having elected not to present his warrant to said commissioners, and it was therefore never funded, is, nevertheless, a valid claim against the county, and it is the duty of the treasurer of the county to pay the same from the first moneys in the treasury, applicable to such payment. Rose v. Estudillo, 39 Cal. 270.

5. If there were funds in the treasury of the county, applicable to such payment at the time the demand was made by the holder of the warrant, which were raised under the law as it stood before the passage of the act, and the warrant was first in the order of outstanding, unfunded debt of the county, which existed prior to the act in question, he had a right to be paid from these funds, which the legislature could not deprive him of, without his consent. Id.

6. The act having provided what taxes may be imposed by the county, for county purposes, and designated the purpose to which each fund shall be devoted, no provision being made for that class of indebtedness to which the claim of the holder of the warrant belongs, except the funding provisions contained in the act, and there being no funds in the treasury of the county applicable to that purpose, at the time he made his demand on the treasurer, he has no remedy, except to apply to the legislature to provide the means of paying his debt. WARRANTY.

1. OF REAL ESTATE.

14. OF CHATTELS.

OF REAL ESTATE.

1. Where there is a covenant of warranty the payment of the purchase money can not be resisted as long as the grantee remains in possession. Nor under the same circumstances can the purchase money be reduced. Norton v. Jackson, 5 Cal. 262.

2. A covenant of the grantor, warranting the title of the land sold as "indisputable and satisfactory," is not broken if the title is good and valid.

Winter v. Stock, 29 Cal. 407.

3. W. entered into a contract in writing with S., agreeing to convey to him a lot of land, and in the contract warranted the title to be "indisputable and satisfactory, or no sale." S., at the same time, let W. have a sum of money on account of the purchase: Held, that if the title was good and valid, W. could not recover back the money from S. Id.

4. If a deed conveys a tract of land by metes and bounds, excepting therefrom such portion of such land as may have before been conveyed by the grantor to other persons, and contains a general covenant of warranty of the land thereby intended to be conveyed, and also a covenant that if any portion of the land has been before conveyed to other persons, the grantor will convey to the grantee other lands of like quantity and quality, the former covenant relates to lands which the deed purports to convey, and not to the land which the grantor covenanted to convey in the latter covenant.

Vance v. Peña, 33 Cal. 631.

5. Where land is sold with covenant of warranty, accompanied with a delivery of possession, for which the purchaser gives a note for the purchase money, the promise to pay, and the warranty, are independent covenants, and the enforcement of the one is not dependent upon the performance of the other. Norton v. Jackson, 5 Cal. 262.

6. Eviction by process of law is requisite to enable an action to be maintained on the covenant. Id.

7. In the common law as well as the civil law, the defendant can not avoid the payment of the purchase money on the ground that the title existed elsewhere than in the grantor. In order to constitute a breach of warranty or quiet enjoyment, there must be an eviction under the judgment of a competent court on a paramount title.

Fowler v. Smith, 2 Cal. 44.

8. An action for false and fraudulent representation as to the naked fact of title in the vendor of real estate can not be maintained by the purchaser, who has taken possession of the premises sold, under a conveyance with express covenants.

Peabody v. Phelps, 9 Cal. 226.

9. If a party takes a conveyance without covenants, he is without remedy in case of failure of title; if he takes a conveyance with covenants, his remedy, upon failure of title, is confined to them. Id.

10. Generally a vendor with warranty of title is not a competent witness for the vendee in a controversy concerning the title. In real estate, the covenant of warranty runs with the land, and the vendor is liable directly to the person evicted, and is not a competent witness for plaintiff.

Blackwell v. Atkinson, 14 Cal. 470.

11. A covenant of non-claim in a deed amounts to the ordinary covenant of warranty, and operates equally as an estoppel.

Gee v. Moore, 14 Cal. 472.

12. But this covenant is confined to the estate granted, and where that is "the right, title and interest" of the grantor, instead of the land itself, the covenant does not estop him from setting up an after-acquired interest. Id.

13. When a purchaser of land does not obtain the title which the deed purported to convey, and the covenants embrace, and he goes into and retains possession under the deed; and the failure of the title goes to the entire consideration paid, or to be paid, for the land, then he must seek his remedy by a rescission of the contract, alleging a paramount title in another, and offering to redeliver possession, and account for the rents and profits.

Walker v. Sedgwick, 8 Cal. 398.

OF CHATTELS.

14. The use in a sale note of a given name for the goods sold is a warranty that they bear that name. Flint v. Lyon, 4 Cal. 17.

15. There is no warranty in the following words of a sale note: "We have this day sold you two shipments of seeds, for arrival."

Moore v. McKinlay, 5 Cal. 471.

16. To constitute a warranty no precise words are necessary; it will be sufficient if the intention clearly appear. Id.

17. A warranty will not be implied except in cases where goods are sold at sea, where the party has no opportunity to examine them, or in case of a sale by sample, or of provisions for domestic use. Id.

18. Where the plaintiff inspects the goods before purchasing, the case is taken from the operation of the rule of implied warranty. Id.

19. Where the vendor of chattels in his possession gives a written bill of sale to the vendee containing no covenant of warranty, there is an implied warranty, the same as though the sale was by parol; and the warranty arising by implication may be rebutted by parol evidence, the same as it could be if the sale was a verbal one.

Miller v. Van Tassel, 24 Cal. 458.

20. The vendor of chattels in his possession warrants the same by implication. The warranty is a presumption of law arising from the possession of the vendor and the sale. Id.

21. This presumption may be rebutted by proof on the part of the defendant that he refused to give a warranty title, and that the plaintiff agreed to take the property at his own risk. Id.

22. There is no breach of an express warranty of title to chattels sold until the vendee's possession is disturbed by the true owner. Gross v. Kierski, 41 Cal. 111.

23. When goods are in possession of a vendor, who, dealing with them as owner, sells and delivers them to the purchaser, nothing being said as to the title, the law implies that he warrants the title to the property sold. Id.

24. No particular words are necessary to constitute a warranty as to the character, condition, or quality of goods sold, but if the vendor, at the time of sale, affirms a fact as to the essential qualities of his goods, and the purchaser buys on the faith of such affirmation, it is an express warranty.

Polhemus v. Herman, 45 Cal. 573.

25. There may be an express or implied warranty when the contract for the sale of goods is executory, as well as when it is executed. Id.

26. If the vendee accepts the goods sold when delivered by the vendor, and renders the vendor an account, it does not prevent the vendee from recovering damages for a breach of a warranty made by the vendor as to their quality, if the vendee thus accepted and rendered the account in ignorance of the true condition of the goods. Id.

27. If the vendor warrants the goods sold, and the vendee discovers after they are delivered that there has been a breach of the warranty, he is not compelled to return the goods, although he may do so and rescind the contract, but he is at liberty to retain them, and bring an action for the breach of the warranty, or he may plead the breach in reduction of damages in an action brought by the vendor for the purchase money. Id.

28. If one party contracts to deliver to the other wool, "in good order," and the latter agrees to accept and pay for it, the clause, "in good order," is an express warranty. Polhemus v. Heiman, 50 Cal. 435.

29. A mere praise of personal property, indulged in by the owner when offering it for sale, does not, under the rule of the common law, amount to an express warranty of its quality or marketable condition.

Byrne v. Jansen, 50 Cal. 624.

30. A mere praise of personal property, such as wool, indulged in by the owner when offering it for sale, does not amount to an implied warranty of its quality or condition, if the buyer has an opportunity to examine it and fails to do so, and no artifice is used by the seller to prevent him from making an examination. Id.

31. A covenant not to sue, made to a portion only of joint debtors, does not release any of them. Matthey v. Gally, 4 Cal. 62.

WASTE.

1. At common law there is no forfeiture of an estate for years for the commission of waste, but it was made so by the statute of 6 Edward I, and it was expressly confined to the place wherein the waste was committed; but the statute of California confines the remedy to triple damages.

Chipman v. Emeric, 3 Cal. 273.

2. In an action for waste, when triple damages are given by statute, the demand for such damages must be expressly inserted in the declaration, which must either cite the statute or conclude to the damage of the plaintiff against the form of the statute.

Id., 5 Cal. 239.

3. Injunctions to restrain injuries in the nature of waste should not be issued before the hearing of the merits, except in cases of urgent necessity, or when the subject-matter of the complaint is free from controversy, or irreparable mischief will be produced by its continuance. But in all cases where the right is doubtful, the court should direct a trial at law, and in the mean time grant a temporary injunction to restrain all injurious proceedings if there be danger of irreparable mischief.

Hicks v. Michael, 15 Cal. 107.

4. In cases of waste, if anything is about to be abstracted from the land which can not be restored in specie, it is no objection to the injunction that the party making it may possibly recover what others may deem an equivalent in money. Id.

5. On application for injunction to restrain waste or mischief analogous to waste, plaintiff may read affidavits contradicting the answer upon all matters in controversy, including questions of title. Id.

6. In a case where the judgment directs a sale of real property, the undertaking on appeal, in order to stay a sale, need only provide security against waste, unless there is a provision in the judgment for the payment of a deficiency, in which case it must provide for the payment thereof.

Englund v. Lewis, 25 Cal. 337.

WATER RIGHTS.

1. RIPARIAN RIGHTS—TITLE TO WATER.
19. APPROPRIATION.
43. RIGHTS TO USE OF.
89. DIVERSION OF.
95. ACTIONS FOR DIVERSION.
112. COMMISSIONERS AND OVERSEERS TO REGULATE WATER-COURSES.
115. WATER COMPANIES.
135. MINING WATER RIGHTS.

RIPARIAN RIGHTS—TITLE TO WATER.

1. The right to water must be treated in this state as a right running with the land, and as a corporeal privilege bestowed upon the occupier or appropriator of the soil; and, as such, has none of the characteristics of mere personality. Hill v. Newman, 5 Cal. 445.

2. Running water, so long as it continues to flow in its natural course, can not be made the subject of private ownership. A right may be acquired to its use, which will be regarded and protected as property, but this right carries with it no specific property in the water itself.

Kidd v. Laird, 15 Cal. 161.

3. When the water of a stream leaves the possession of a party, all his right to, and interest in it, is gone.

Eddy v. Simpson, 3 Cal. 249.

4. The riparian proprietor, to whom water first comes, has not the right to erect dams across the stream and spread out the water, so that it is lost by absorption and evaporation to an extent that prevents it from flowing to another riparian proprietor as it would have done but for the dams.

Ferreira v. Knipe, 28 Cal. 340.

5. It is not a reasonable use of water for a riparian proprietor, who desires to use the same for watering cattle and for domestic purposes, to erect dams across the stream, by which the water is spread out and lost by evaporation and absorption so as to injure another riparian proprietor below. Id.

6. Under settled principles, both of the civil and common law, a riparian proprietor has a usufruct in the stream as it passes over his land. Pope v. Kinman, 54 Cal. 3.

7. Where underground currents of water, flowing in the defined channels, are shown to exist, the rules of law which govern the use of similar streams flowing upon the surface of the earth are applicable to them. Hanson v. McCue, 42 Cal. 303.

8. In a controversy respecting the use of the waters of a spring, where there was nothing to show that it was supplied by any defined flowing stream: Held, that it must be presumed to be formed by the ordinary percolations of water in the soil. Id.

9. Waters filtrating or percolating in the soil belong to the owner of the freehold, like the rocks and minerals found there; and he may use them as he chooses, free from any usufructuary rights of others. Id.

10. Where the owner of a spring of living water, supplied by percolation only, and having no natural channel or outlet, constructed an artificial channel, by means of which he conducted the water over certain intermediate vacant lands to his residence, and a subsequent occupant of a portion of the intermediate land enjoyed the use of water flowing through the channel for fifteen years: Held, that such occupant acquired no rights as against the owner of the spring, and could not prevent him from tapping such spring and using all its waters for his own profit. Id.

11. The bed of a river is a public highway of the state, and within its absolute control, subject only to the rights of commerce. Green v. Swift, 47 Cal. 536.

13. On the facts of this case, as admitted by the pleadings or found by the court, the defendant could, at most, exercise no greater rights in respect to the diversion or use of the waters of the subterranean stream flowing across his land to the spring of the plaintiff, than if he had been an upper and the plaintiff a lower riparian owner on a surface stream flowing across their respective lands. Hale v. McLean, 53 Cal. 578.

14. On the facts admitted or found, the defendant was not entitled to divert the whole body of the stream. Id.

15. Whether the upper proprietor on a subterranean stream can exercise the same rights as against a lower proprietor in respect to the diversion and use of the water, as though it was a surface stream, not decided. Id.

16. Whether the incidental obstruction or diversion of a subterranean stream, in the prosecution by an upper proprietor of a mining or other legitimate enterprise beneath the surface, can be made the foundation of an action by a lower proprietor, not decided. Id.

17. The right of a riparian owner to have the water of a stream run through his land is a vested right, and any interference with it imports at least nominal damages, even though there be no actual damage. Creighton v. Evans, 53 Cal. 55.

18. A judgment determining the rights of parties as riparian proprietors on the same stream of water is conclusive when the conditions remain unchanged. Los Angeles v. Baldwin, 53 Cal. 460.

APPROPRIATION.

19. The natural water in a ravine belongs to the first appropriator thereof, and for either a diversion or appropriation thereof an action will lie. Hoffman v. Stone, 7 Cal. 49.

20. A notice of intention to appropriate the waters of a certain stream is evidence of possession, but of itself alone is not sufficient. Taken with other acts, it amounts to sufficient evidence. Thompson v. Lee, 8 Cal. 275.

21. An appropriation of water for mill purposes, stands on the same footing as an appropriation for the use of miners. McDonald v. Bear River Co., 13 Cal. 220.

22. The erection of a dam across a natural water-course is an actual appropriation of the water at that point, but not below it, even though the water flowing over the dam is brought into the water-course by canals constructed by the owners of the dam. Kelly v. Natoma W. Co., 6 Cal. 105.

23. Possession or actual appropriation must be the test of priority in all claims to the use of water, wherever such claims are not dependent on the ownership of the land through which the water flows. Id.

24. Such appropriation can not be constructive. Id.

25. To render valid a claim of water by appropriation, the claim must be for some useful or beneficial purpose, or in contemplation of a future appropriation for such purpose by the parties claiming it. A claim for mere speculation will not answer. Weaver v. Eureka Lake Co., 15 Cal. 271.

26. Whether plaintiffs, who had posted notices claiming the water of a certain river, and stating their intention to construct a ditch or flume, and appropriate the water for mining purposes, began their surveys, etc., and prosecuted their work to completion with due diligence, as against parties attempting subsequently to appropriate the water, is a question for the jury, and their verdict, on conflicting testimony, will be conclusive. Id.

27. The notice of the intention to appropriate the water must be sufficient to put a prudent man on inquiry. Kimball v. Gearhart, 12 Cal. 27.

28. The doctrine of relation in the appropriation of water only applies when the first acts, from which the party appropriating seeks to date his right, indicate the intention of appropriating such water. Id.

29. Where parties projecting a ditch to convey water give notice to the world of their intention to dig such ditch and appropriate such water, in the usual manner, and mark out and designate the line of such ditch by the usual marks and indications, and pursue the work on the ditch with a reasonable degree of diligence until the same is completed so as to receive the water, they are entitled to such water as against all persons subsequently claiming or locating it. Id.

30. In appropriating unclaimed water on the public lands, only such acts are necessary, and such indications and evidences of appropriation required, as the nature of the case and the face of the country will admit of, and are under the circumstances and at the time practicable; surveys, notices, stakes, and blazing of trees, followed by work and actual labor, without abandonment, will, in every case, where the work is completed, give title to the water over subsequent claimants. Id.

31. The title to the water conveyed through a ditch constructed in such manner will, on completion of the work, date back from the beginning of the work as against subsequent appropriators. Id.

32. In determining the question of diligence in the construction of such a work, the jury have a right to take into consideration the circumstances surrounding the parties at the date of the appropriation, such as the nature and climate of the country traversed by such ditch, together with the difficulties of procuring labor and materials. Id.

33. The diversion of the waters of a stream with the object of drainage simply, or without the intention of applying them to some useful purpose, does not constitute an appropriation.

McKiuney v. Smith, 21 Cal. 374.

34. The taking up of the waters of a stream for a special limited purpose, is an appropriation of only so much of the water as is necessary for that particular purpose. The surplus may be the subject of a new appropriation, which will give to the second locator a paramount right to the use of all the waters of the stream not required for the specific purpose of the first appropriation. Id.

35. If a tract of land in the mineral region, bordering on a natural stream, is inclosed and appropriated for garden or orchard purposes, and the waters of the stream are afterwards appropriated for mining purposes at a point above the inclosed land, the water thus appropriated must be so used as not to materially injure the fruit trees or garden.

Wixon v. B. R. & A. Co., 24 Cal. 367.

36. One who appropriates for mining purposes the waters of a ravine or stream, upon the public lands in the mineral region, must take and use the same in such manner as not to injure or destroy orchards or gardens bordering on the stream, which have been inclosed and planted before the water was appropriated. Id.

38. If the first appropriator of water takes only a part of the quantity flowing in a stream, another may afterward appropriate the remainder, and if the first appropriates the water only during certain days in the week, another may afterward take during the remaining days of the week.

Smith v. O'Hara, 43 Cal. 371.

39. One who enters into the possession of a ditch used for appropriating water, under a verbal sale made to him of the same, does not succeed to the rights of the seller, so as to claim the benefit of the seller's prior appropriation of the water flowing in the same, but must date his appropriation from the time he enters into possession. Id.

40. While the dam and canal of the party claiming the water are in process of construction, but are not yet in a condition to appropriate the water, the use of the water by other parties is no injury, and such use affords no ground for relief, legal or equitable. N. C. & S. C. Co. v. Kidd, 37 Cal. 282.

41. If a party claiming water is constructing his dam and canal, but has not yet diverted the water, an action for damages and to recover the possession of the dam site and dam, and of the canal site and canal, will afford an adequate remedy for the trespass upon the ouster from their possession. Id.

42. H. constructed a water ditch, by which he appropriated three hundred inches of water from a running stream, but not all of the stream. B. appropriated the remainder of the water. Subsequently H. made a new ditch, appropriating water from the same stream. In a suit to enjoin B. from interfering with H. in the use of the water, H. obtained a verdict that the second ditch did not diminish the quantity appropriated by B., and judgment was rendered enjoining B. from disturbing H. in the use of three hundred inches of water: Held, that the judgment was consistent with the verdict and with justice.

Higgins v. Barker, 42 Cal. 233.

RIGHT TO USE OF WATER.

43. The foundation of a right to water is the first possession; and this right is usufructuary, and consists not so much in the fluid itself, as in its use. The owner of land over which it flows has the right to its use during its passage. This right is not in the corpus of the water, and only continues with its possession. Eddy v. Simpson, 3 Cal. 240.

44. Rights to the use of water become fixed after five years' adverse enjoyment of the same. Crandall v. Woods, 8 Cal. 136.

45. The use of water in any particular way for a period corresponding to the time limited by statute within which an action must be commenced to determine the right to it, raises a presumption of title to the same, in the person enjoying the same, as against a right in any other person, which might have been, but was not asserted; but in order that this presumption of title may be conclusive, the right to the use of the water must have been asserted under a claim of title, with the knowledge and acquiescence of the person having a prior right, and must have been uninterrupted.

American Co. v. Bradford, 27 Cal. 360.

46. The burden of proving an adverse uninterrupted use of water for five years, with the knowledge and acquiescence of the person having a prior right, is cast on the party claiming it; and if he leaves it doubtful whether the use was adverse, known to the owner, and uninterrupted, it is not conclusive in his favor. Id.

47. Possession of public land gives the right to the use of water flowing through it for natural wants, but does not confer the right to divert it, and prevent its running upon the adjoining land of another who has taken the same up subsequently, but before the attempt to change the course of the water. Id.

48. The owner of a ditch has the exclusive and absolute power of control, and right of enjoyment, of the water diverted by and flowing in his ditch, but whether such water be his private property is not necessary to decide. Kidd v. Laird, 15 Cal. 161.

49. No distinction can be drawn between a mill owner and a miner as to their rights in appropriating water.

Ortman v. Dixon, 13 Cal. 34.

50. The line upon which a ditch is actually intended to be dug should be run within a reasonable time after the line of preliminary survey has been run, in order to make the right of the ditch-owners date back to the survey. What is a reasonable time must depend upon the circumstances of the case. Parke v. Kilham, 8 Cal. 77.

51. Where a party takes up a mill seat on public agricultural land, erects a saw-mill, dwelling, etc., and appropriates the water of the stream for the use of the mill, he may use the water for a grist-mill erected at the same place years afterwards.

McDonald v. Bear R. Co., 13 Cal. 220.

52. From the policy of our laws it has been held in this state that the right to water exists without private ownership of the soil; upon the ground of prior location upon the land, or prior appropriation and use of the water. Hill v. Newman, 5 Cal. 445.

53. The mere act of commencing a ditch with the intention of appropriating the water is not sufficient of itself to give a party an exclusive right to the water of such stream.

Kimball v. Gearhart, 12 Cal. 27.

54. The interest in water acquired by one who locates on the bank of a stream, and appropriates the waters of the same for machinery, is not property in the water as such, but the right to the momentum of its fall at the point of location and to the flow of the water in its natural course above.

McDonald v. Askew, 29 Cal. 200.

55. Right to water acquired by appropriation may be transferred like other property. McDonald v. Bear R. Co., 13 Cal. 220.

56. If by the erection of a mill and the possessory right of land on a stream, the water be acquired, a transfer of the possession of the property to a vendee, as owner, passes the water right. Id.

57. Where plaintiff appropriated a portion of the waters of a stream, and diverted it by means of a dam and ditch, sufficient for the purpose in the natural condition of the stream as it then existed, it does not necessarily follow that he thereby acquires the right to raise his dam higher and higher, as occasion might require, to obviate the obstructions to its use, in the manner of its said original appropriation, occasioned by physical changes in the condition of the stream, not anticipated, whether arising from natural or artificial causes.

Nevada W. Co. v. Powell, 34 Cal. 109.

58. The question, What is the extent of the right originally acquired by plaintiff in such a case to which all subsequently acquired rights must be subordinate? is one of fact for the jury. Id.

59. If the plaintiff appropriated a portion of the waters of a stream, and constructed a ditch and dam, amply sufficient, under the conditions of the stream and the country as they then existed, to make the appropriation available, and thereby acquire the right to appropriate and use said portion of said waters in said manner only, this would not prevent or impair the right of other parties to acquire a right to the surplus waters of the stream or to its bed and banks, or the adjacent land, to any extent that should not interfere with rights previously acquired. And when the right of the subsequent appropriators once attach, the prior appropriator can not encroach upon them, by extending his rights beyond the first appropriation. Id.

60. In such case, when the right has once vested in the subsequent appropriator tor, the prior appropriator would be no more justified in extending his claim, or changing the means of his appropriation, to the prejudice of the second appropriator, than the latter would be in encroaching upon the prior rights of the first. In such case, each appropriator is, in respect to the particular thing appropriated by him, prior in time and exclusive in his right. Id.

61. Where the plaintiff, by means of a dam of a certain height and dimensions, constructed at a certain point on Shady creek, and the excavation of a ditch extending therefrom, which at the time of their construction were held adapted to and ample for the purpose, appropriated a portion of the waters of said creek, whatever was left unappropriated, either of the waters of said creek or mining ground therein, was open to be appropriated by defendants; and if the defendants by first appropriation, acquired the right to work their mining claims, located in the bed and banks in said stream above plaintiff's dam, in their condition at that time, the plaintiff was not authorized, by subsequently erecting a higher dam, to interfere with said right; and this, although by subsequent changes not wrought by defendants, occurring in the bed of the stream at the point chosen for its diversion, without so raising said dam. Id.

62. When plaintiff appropriated the waters of Shady creek, and before other conflicting interests had vested, the right to the water carried with it the right to construct such works as were necessary to the full enjoyment of the water. But when he established his works and fully appropriated the water by means sufficient for the purpose, and used it for a term of years in a particular mode, then, unless there was something manifesting a more extended right, other parties had a right to suppose he had thereby defined the limits of his right, and act accordingly. Id.

63. Where the court instructed the jury, in substance, that if plaintiff acquired the prior right to divert a portion of the water of Shady creek, by means of a dam and ditch, and the dam and stream should at any subsequent time, by reason of mining by strangers above, become filled up to such an extent as to make it necessary to raise the dam higher than it originally was, to enable the plaintiff to continue the diversion by means of said ditch, then the plaintiff is entitled to make additions to the height of the dam from time to time, as occasion requires, without limitation, and wholly irrespective of the effect of these additions upon the interests of other parties acquiring rights for mining and other purposes on the stream above, subsequent to said original appropriation of the waters of the stream: Hell, that the principle on which such instruction is founded is inadmissible, and the instruction erroneous. Id.

64. The appropriation of water by the defendant corporation prior to August, 1874, was of the waters of Old South Fork and not of Kern river.

Stein Co. v. Kern I. Co., 53 Cal. 563.

65. The right of the defendant corporation to divert the waters of Kern river, based upon its appropriation in August, 1874, is subordinate to that of the several corporations which are joined as plaintiffs—except the Goose lake canal company—to divert the several amounts by them respectively appropriated prior to August, 1874. Id.

66. The city of Los Angeles is not the owner of the corpus of the water in the Los Angeles river.

Los Angeles v. Baldwin, 53 Cal. 460.

67. Possession or actual appropriation is the test of priority in all claims to the use of water, where such claims are dependent upon the ownership of the land through which the water flows.

Kimball v. Gearhart, 12 Cal. 27.

68. An irrigating ditch, constructed, repaired, and controlled by two or more persons, does not cease to be private property because the several persons interested in it have not accurately defined their rights therein, or in the waters flowing in it, nor because they have, by election, selected a person to distribute the water among them.

Cate v. Sanford, 54 Cal. 35.

69. Such a mode of constructing and managing a ditch, though the irrigators be numerous, does not operate as a dedication to the public. Id.

70. Hell, accordingly, that such a ditch came under the exception in the sixth section of "an act to provide for and regulate irrigation in the township of Los Nietos, in the county of Los Angeles. (Stats. 1877-8, p. 374.) Id.

71. In this case the rights of both parties, as fixed by the priority and extent of their respective appropriations, though not founded on the legal title, are as perfect and absolute as if acquired by prescription, or express grant from the riparian owner.

Kidd v. Laird, 15 Cal. 161.

72. Where parties have appropriated the prior right to the use of the water of a stream, by the commencement and partial completion of a ditch and flume, they have the right to use so much of the waters of the stream as are necessary to preserve their flume from injury, while in the process of construction. Weaver v. Conger, 10 Cal. 233.

73. The first appropriator of the water of a stream passing through the public lands in the state has the right to insist that the water shall be subject to his use and enjoyment to the extent of his original appropriation, and that its quality shall not be impaired so as to defeat the purposes of its ap-appropriation. To this extent his rights go, and no further. In subordination to those rights, subsequent appropriators may make such use of the channel of the stream as they think proper, and they may mingle its waters with other waters, and divert an equal quantity, as often as they choose.

Butte Co. v. Vaughn, 11 Cal. 143.

74. The right of the first appropriator of water is equally protected from damage occasioned by subsequent locators above him, as well as below. Hill v. King, 8 Cal. 336.

75. If two persons, one prior in point of time to the other, appropriate water from the same stream, by means of ditches, and a third person turns water into the stream from his ditch starting out of another stream, without the intention of recapturing it, the water thus turned in becomes publici juris, and belongs to the persons who appropriated the stream, according to their priority of right. Davis v. Gale, 32 Cal. 26.

76. If two persons appropriate water from the same stream, one prior in point of time to the other, and a third person builds a flume in the stream so as to increase the flow of water, the prior appropriator is first entitled to the increased flow of water to the extent of his appropriation. Id.

77. If the water of stream A. be diverted from its natural channel by C. and used by him, and then flows from his works into stream B. by natural channels, it is lost to the first possessor, and he can not reclaim it on the ground that the water of stream B. was increased by his means.

Eddy v. Simpson, 3 Cal. 249.

78. If the water of stream B. be in the possession of another party, D., the addition made to it, flowing from the works of C., become a part of the body of water, and D. has the right to its possession and use, and C. has no right to withdraw it. Id.

79. Where a ditch was cut by the grantors of the plaintiffs, for the purpose of drainage simply, and not with the bona fide intention of appropriating the water thus diverted to some useful object, and the ditches of defendant were built for the express purpose of taking said water, and did do so: Held, that thereby they gained a priority over the grantors of plaintiffs, and all persons holding under them.

Maeris v. Bicknell, 7 Cal. 261.

80. Merely cutting a ditch for a drain and using the water for no useful purpose gives no priority. Id.

81. But where a ditch is made for the purpose of using the water, the right thereto dates from the commencement of the work. Id.

82. If one who has appropriated a part of the water of a stream to propel machinery at a point on the same, makes a conveyance of all his interest in the water of the stream to one who has a ditch above, he does not thereby lose his prior right to the water which flows down after the sale, as against one who appropriated the water of the stream below him after his appropriation, but before his sale.

McDonald v. Askew, 29 Cal. 200.

83. A person who has built a mill on a stream and appropriated a part of its water to propel machinery, does not lose his prior right over one who has claimed the water below him for mining purposes, by a sale of his interest in the water of the stream to be used in a ditch above. Id.

84. A prior appropriator of the water of a stream for mill purposes is entitled to it to the extent appropriated, and for those purposes to the exclusion of any subsequent appropriation of it for the same or any other purpose. But the extent of the right depends on the nature and uses of the appropriation. If he suffers a portion of the water, or the body of it, after running the mill, to go on down its accustomed course, persons below may appropriate this residuum so as to make it a vested right.

Ortman v. Dixon, 13 Cal. 33.

85. A person who has appropriated the water of a stream, and caused it to flow to a particular place by means of a ditch, for a special use, may afterwards change the use to which he first applied the water, and the place at which he used it, without losing his priority of right, as against one who has dug a ditch from the same stream before the change is made. Davis v. Gale, 32 Cal. 26.

86. One who has appropriated the water of a stream by means of a ditch for the purpose of working a particular mining claim, may, after he has worked out the claim and abandoned the same, extend his ditch and use the water at other points, and for a different purpose, without losing his priority of right as against one who afterwards dug a ditch from the same stream and appropriated water before the claim was worked out. Id.

87. Where water from an artificial ditch is turned into a natural water-course, and mingled with the natural waters of the stream, for the purpose of conducting it to another point to be there used, it is not thereby abandoned, but may be taken out and used by the party thus conducting it, so that he do not, in so doing, diminish the quantity of the natural waters of the stream, to the injury of those who have previously appropriated such natural waters.

Butte Co. v. Vaughn, 11 Cal. 143.

88. The burden of proof devolves on the party thus mingling the water belonging to him with that appropriated by others. He can only claim such quantity to which he establishes his right by decisive proof. The enforcement of his right must leave the opposite party in the use of the full quantity to which he was originally entitled. Id.

DIVERSION OF.

89. A person entitled to divert a given quantity of the water of a stream may take the same at any point on the stream, and may change the point of diversion at pleasure, if the rights of others be not injuriously affected by the change.

Kidd v. Laird, 15 Cal. 161.

90. This right so to change the point of diversion does not depend upon how the right to the use of the water was acquired, whether by express grant, or by prescription; or whether it rests in the parol license, or the presumed consent of the proprietor. The difference as to the source of right relates to the mode of determining its existence and extent, and not to the manner of its exercise and enjoyment. Id.

91. Where a party attempts to construct a dam on a creek, for the purpose of diverting the water at that point, and such diversion is illegal as against another party, who has a dam lower down, the latter may oust the former from the possession of the ground at that point, and prevent the construction of the dam.

Butte T. M. Co. v. Morgan, 19 Cal. 609.

92. A person appropriating and diverting the water of a stream at a given point can not afterwards change the point of diversion to the prejudice of a subsequent locator. Id.

93. Kidd v. Laird, 15 Cal. 161, does not hold that the first appropriator has an absolute and unqualified right to change the point of diversion, and the doctrine of that case is affirmed. Id.

94. If A. is the owner of a ditch, and of the right to divert and use the waters of a stream in the same, and B. diverts the waters of the stream at a point above A.'s ditch, and uses them for mining, but turns them back into A.'s ditch at another point before A. has use for them, A. has no cause of action against B. Union W. Co. v. Crary, 25 Cal. 504.

ACTIONS FOR WRONGFUL DIVERSION.

95. The gravamen of the action is the diversion of the water, and the fact that the diversion is accomplished by different means is not important enough to require several counts.

Gale v. Tuolumne W. Co., 14 Cal. 25.

96. A general allegation in a complaint for the diversion of water, that plaintiffs were entitled to all the water flowing into the canyon at the head of their ditch, entitles them to prove a diversion of water from the smaller branches of the canyon supplying water to that point.

Priest v. Union C. Co., 6 Cal. 170.

97. Where the complaint alleged that the defendants had dug a mining ditch above one previously constructed by defendants, and had thereby diverted the water of the stream from plaintiffs' ditch, but did not aver that the injury was continuing, or threatened to be continued, or likely to be continued: Held, that it was sufficient for the recovery of damages, but not to sustain an injunction. Coker v. Simpson, 7 Cal. 340.

98. No equitable remedy can be had for a mere past diversion of a water-course; but when the injury is continuing, relief may appropriately be sought in equity.

Tuolumne W. Co. v. Chapman, 8 Cal. 392.

99. Actions for the diversion of the waters of ditches are in the nature of actions for the abatement of nuisances, and may be maintained by tenants in common in a joint action.

Parke v. Kilham, 8 Cal. 77.

100. Where the defendants had constructed a ditch for mining purposes, and the plaintiffs had subsequently constructed another, taking its water from the same stream, and brought suit for damages sustained by reason of an enlargement of defendants' ditch, made after the commencement of plaintiffs' ditch, causing a diversion of a greater quantity of water, and praying for an injunction: Held, that defendants are not limited to the quantity of water turned into their ditch in the first instance, unless by the general plan, size, and grade of the ditch, it was not capable of carrying more water than was then diverted. If, by reason of obstructions in the ditch, or irregularity in the grade at that time, it was not capable of diverting as much water as its general size would indicate, the defendants would have a reasonable time to adjust the grade and remove such obstructions, and then fill the ditch to its capacity. But if they continued to divert only the original quantity of water long enough to indicate that they only intended to divert that amount, or failed for an unreasonable length of time to remove the obstructions or adjust the grade, they would be limited to the amount thus diverted, and plaintiffs would be entitled to the residue.

White v. Todd W. Co., 8 Cal. 443.

101. This court will require a case of very palpable mistake or error to be made out, before it will overrule the verdict of the jury on issue of fact, joined in an action for the diversion of water.

Brown v. Smith, 10 Cal. 508.

102. In an action for diverting water from plaintiffs' ditch, plaintiff and defendants both having ditches supplied from the same stream, the plaintiffs' rights being prior and paramount, defendants asked the court to instruct the jury, that if defendants had brought water from foreign sources, and emptied it into the stream with the intention of taking it out again, they had the right to divert the quantity thus emptied in, "less such amount as might be lost by evaporation, and other like causes." The instruction was given, with the explanation that they could not so reclaim the water as to diminish the quantity to which plaintiff was entitled as prior locator: Held, that the explanation was proper, the concluding words of the instruction being too general and indefinite.

Burnett v. Whitesides, 15 Cal. 35.

103. In an action to recover damages for the diversion of the waters of a stream from plaintiffs' mills, an averment as to the precise quantity of water required for the use of the mills, and to which plaintiffs claimed to be entitled, is an immaterial averment; and a recovery of damages would not establish plaintiffs' right to the exact quantity of water claimed, so as to be res judicata in a subsequent suit.

McDonald v. B. R. & A. Co., 15 Cal. 145.

104. In such action for damages, no issue could be taken upon the averment as to the particular quantity of water diverted. Id.

105. The owners of a ditch by which the waters of a stream have been first appropriated are entitled to recover damages for injury or loss sustained, caused by dams or other obstructions having been erected on the stream above the head of the ditch, by which the regularity of the flow of its waters is so disturbed as to cause actual injury or loss to the proprietors of the ditch.

Natoma Co. v. McCoy, 23 Cal. 490.

106. On the trial of an action to recover such damages, proof that in consequence of the irregularity of the flow of water the owners of the ditch have lost their customers, is competent evidence. Id.

107. In an action for the wrongful diversion of water, where the answer sets up more than five years' continuous adverse possession in the defendant, if the plaintiff before resting introduces evidence tending to show his possession during the five years, and the defendant then introduces evidence to sustain the answer, the plaintiff, in rebuttal, may introduce evidence to show that defendant's possession had not been continuous, or uninterrupted, or adverse, but he can not claim as a right to introduce evidence to prove the same facts that were proved in his opening.

Union W. Co. v. Crary, 25 Cal. 504.

108. A court of equity should not license a trespass upon ditch property in the mining regions, nor compel the owner to exchange the same for another means of conveyance for the water flowing therein.

Gregory v. Nelson, 41 Cal. 278.

109. If a plaintiff owns a ditch and right of way for same, by priority of location, a court of equity has no power, by its judgment, to allow the same to be washed away for mining purposes, provided an aqueduct of sufficient capacity to carry the water is previously built in its place. Id.

110. If one of two joint owners of a flume used for mining purposes brings an action to recover damages for an injury to the joint property, caused by opening a water ditch above the flume, it is error for the court to reject evidence that the other joint owner gave his consent to having the ditch opened.

Crary v. Campbell, 24 Cal. 634.

111. The clause of a decree enjoining the defendants "from in any manner interfering with the waters of said springs, so as to prevent the same, or any part thereof, from flowing into Lytle creek," only applies to defined streams, and does not restrain him from availing himself of percolations upon his own land, even though he might thereby diminish the water which would otherwise issue from the springs.

Hustan v. Leach, 53 Cal. 262.

COMMISSIONERS AND OVERSEERS TO REGULATE WATER-COURSES.

112. A water commissioner, appointed under the act of May 15, 1854, to regulate water-courses, etc., has no power, as such, to repair a water-course or to remove an obstruction from it.

Pico v. Colimas, 32 Cal. 517.

113. If an abutment to a bridge is wrongfully built in the channel of a stream, the remedy, if any exists, is against him by whom the injury was committed.

Crowell v. Sonoma Co., 25 Cal. 313.

114. The board of water commissioners for San Bernardino county, created under the act of February 18, 1864, are merely agents selected for the public convenience, to regulate the distribution of water according to the rights of the parties in interest; but their action in distributing water does not prevent the parties from applying to the court for, nor the court from granting, relief, if to any one is distributed more than his just proportion of water.

Daley v. Cox, 48 Cal. 127.

WATER COMPANIES.

115. Unincorporated ditch companies, organized for the sale of water to miners and others, the stock in which is bought and sold at the pleasure of the owners, without consulting the co-owners, differ from ordinary commercial partnerships. Some of the incidents of a partnership pertain to such companies, and some of mere tenancies in common likewise pertain to them.

McConnell v. Denver, 35 Cal. 365.

116. The superintendent or managing agent of such company has no authority to bind the company by a promissory note, given for materials used by the company, unless the authority to give such note is expressly conferred upon him by the company, or such authority may be implied from his acts recognized by the company with full knowledge of the acts at the time of the recognition. Id.

117. A member of such a company has no general authority by virtue of such membership to bind the company by his contracts. Id.

118. If an unincorporated ditch company duly authorizes its superintendent to give the company note for materials before then purchased by the company, all the members are bound by the note, whether they were such members when the materials were purchased or not. Id.

119. Where the bed of a water-course, extending through the farming lands of R., is used by K. as a channel to convey the waters discharged into it from his ditch, of which it forms a connecting link, such water-course will be considered as part of K.'s ditch; and where R.'s lands were injured by a deposit of sediment thereon, resulting from an overflow of the water-course, which was caused either by the failure of K. to have it properly cleared of impediments, or by turning into it a quantity of water which, added to the natural waters flowing therein, exceeded its capacity to carry the same, K. is liable in damages to R. for such injury.

Richardson v. Kier, 37 Cal. 263.

120. As to the liability of ditch-owners for damages done by water discharged or sold from ditches, Richardson v. Kier, 34 Cal. 63, is affirmed. Id.

120a. The sale of a ditch used for appropriating water can not be proved by parol evidence. Smith v. O'Hara, 43 Cal. 371.

121. In a lease from the defendant to the plaintiff of the Los Angeles water works, it was provided that the plaintiff should not dispose of water for purposes of irrigation, but should only take from the river the water necessary for domestic purposes. The defendant took water from the plaintiff's pipes for the purpose of sprinkling the streets of the city; but, during the period that this was done, the plaintiff had on hand of the waters of Los Angeles river more than sufficient for supplying the inhabitants of the city with water for domestic purposes. In an action by the plaintiff to recover from the defendant the value of the water taken, held, that the plaintiff was only entitled to receive pay for water furnished to the inhabitants of the city for domestic purposes, and that it had no right to the surplus.

L. A. W. Co. v. Los Angeles, 55 Cal. 176.

122. In San Francisco v. Spring Valley

Water Works, 48 Cal. 493, it was decided that the Spring Valley Water Works was formed under the general law of 1858, and that its rights, duties, and obligations were derived solely from that law.

S. V. W. W. v. San Francisco, 52 Cal. 111.

123. In San Francisco v. Spring Valley Water Works it was also decided that, by reason of the provisions of the general law of 1858, there are purposes for which water is furnished by the Spring Valley Water Works, for which the city and county is bound to pay the legal rates. Id.

124. Also, that the Spring Valley Water Works is bound to furnish water to the city and county free of charge "in case of fire or other great necessity." Id.

125. Primarily, it is the duty of the Spring Valley Water Works to furnish to all the inhabitants, the men, women, and children, of the city and county (the rates fixed according to law being paid) water for family uses; being water for drinking, lavation, for domestic animals, and for other like domestic uses. Id.

126. For water furnished for such "family uses" to those of the inhabitants to whom it is the duty of the city and county to provide all or some of the necessities of life, as prisoners and the occupants of charitable and educational institutions, the city and county is bound to pay the rates established in accordance with law. Id.

127. The Spring Valley Water Works are not bound to furnish water for any other purposes, unless the obligation is imposed upon that company by the clause of the statute which requires water companies to furnish water to the city and county "in case of fire or other great necessity, free of charge." Id.

128. It is the duty of the company to furnish water free of charge for fires, and this includes the furnishing of water free for engines and engine-houses. Id.

129. The water is to be furnished to the inhabitants for family uses on payment of rates; to the city and county government free for all purposes for which it may be necessary and proper in the exercise of its police and governmental functions, being for other purposes than the "family uses" of individuals to whom the city and county is under obligations to furnish water. Id.

130. The word "great" in the statute does not qualify the word "necessity," so as to limit the furnishing of water free to cases of rare and casual demands. Id.

131. Since, by the terms of the statute, the corporation is entitled to charge only for water supplied for "family uses," there is no hardship in compelling it to furnish the city and county, "to the extent of its means," free of charge, all water necessary for watering streets, public squares and parks, for flushing sewers, and for all like purposes beneficial to the public, and in aid of the health and good government of the people of the city and county. Id.

132. The power to charge tolls or rates for water is a franchise conferred on corporations formed under general laws for the formation of water companies, and can be exercised by a corporation only in the manner provided for in those laws.

S. V. W. W. v. Bryant, 52 Cal. 132.

133. The act of March 1, 1876, "to establish water rates in the city and county of San Francisco," and the supplemental act of April 3, 1876, are unconstitutional and void, in so far as they attempt to provide a mode of fixing rates to be charged by corporations in San Francisco, differing from the mode provided for other corporations by general laws. The S. V. W. W. v. Bryant, 52 Cal. 132, affirmed.

San Francisco v. S. V. W. W., 53 Cal. 608.

134. If a corporation contracts with a city to supply it with pure fresh water for all purposes, except the sprinkling of streets, and the contract contains a clause, that if any other corporation receives permission to furnish the city with water on more favorable terms, the same terms shall be extended to the corporation contracting; and if another corporation is granted more favorable terms, and then purchases the rights and franchises of the old corporation, it does not thereby become bound by the contract, but may supply the city on the terms it enjoyed before the purchase. Id.

MINING WATER RIGHTS.

135. Persons who, under the local customs and decisions of the courts in California, had acquired a right to the use of water in a ditch prior to the passage of the act of congress of July 26, 1866, acquired by said act a right of way and of the ditch through which the water was running, over the public lands, and the subsequent grantees of the United States take subject to the easement.

Broder v. Natoma W. Co., 50 Cal. 621.

136. The Pacific railroad companies, by virtue of the acts of congress of 1862 and 1864, granting them lands to aid in the construction of a railroad, did not acquire an equity in the land granted which state courts are bound to respect, until commissioners, appointed under the fourth section of the act, certified that the railroad and telegraph line had been completed on a subdivision examined by them. Id.

137. The Pacific railroad companies, by virtue of the acts of congress of 1862 and 1864, granting them lands, did not acquire a right to abate ditches on such lands as a nuisance, provided the ditch had acquired a right to the use of water which was recognized by the local customs and decisions of the courts prior to the passage of the act of congress of July 26, 1866, granting the right of way to ditch-owners over the public lands. Id.

138. If a ditch for the conveyance of water for sale in the mining regions receives its supply of water from a stream at its head in the mountains, and extends a number of miles down, the water flowing through it the whole distance, and the title of the owner to the upper half or section of the ditch afterwards passes to one person, and the title to the lower half to another, the person who acquires the upper half is entitled to the exclusive use of the water from the stream at the head of the ditch.

Reynolds v. Hosmer, 51 Cal. 205.

139. An adverse use must be open and as of right, and also peaceable; for if there is any act done by the other owners that operates as an interruption, however slight, it prevents the acquisition of the right by such use. Cave v. Crafts, 53 Cal. 135.

140. The act of congress of July 26, 1866, "granting the right of way to ditch and canal-owners over the public lands," conferred rights to waters appropriated for agricultural purposes, and operates to confirm such rights, initiated and maintained prior to the passage of the act. Id.

141. If a mining company owns a mining claim, and buys a water ditch, "and the water rights thereto appertaining," this purchase does not, of itself, constitute the ditch and water rights appurtenances of the mining claim. Quirk v. Falk, 47 Cal. 453.

142. If there is a ditch leading out of a creek, and a mining company owns the ditch, and also owns a mining claim, and uses a portion of the creek in working its claim, it does not follow that the ditch is an appurtenance of the mining claim. Id.

143. The party who buys a mining claim and its appurtenances, and who asserts that a ditch and its water rights passed to him by the conveyance, as appurtenances to the claim, must, in order to hold them as such, prove that they were appurtenances. Id.

144. A decree enjoining the owners of a mining claim, situated on a creek below a dam at the head of a ditch, from diverting any water from or in any manner interfering with the waters of the creek that rise above the dam, does not prevent the owners of the mining claim from using the waters of the creek which may flow down the same after the ditch is supplied.

American Co. v. Bradford, 27 Cal. 360.

145. The first appropriator of water for mining purposes is entitled to have the water flow without material interruption in its natural channel. He is entitled to the water so undiminished in quantity as to leave sufficient to fill his canal or ditch, as it existed at the time of subsequent appropriations of the stream above him. Any other rule would involve an absolute prohibition of the use of all water of a stream above any ditch supplied by it, in order to preserve the quality of a small portion taken therefrom.

B. R. & A. Co. v. N. Y. Co., 8 Cal. 327.

146. Appropriation and use for a beneficial purpose are the tests of right to water in the mineral regions, while the place and character of its use are not such tests.

Davis v. Gale, 32 Cal. 26.

147. The prior appropriator of a stream of water for mining purposes has a right to have the water flow down above the point of his appropriation, without interruption or diminution in quantity.

Phoenix W. Co. v. Fletcher, 23 Cal. 481.

148. One who enters upon a stream of water above the prior appropriator and erects hydraulic works must so construct them as not to impede the regularity of the flow of the water, if its irregular flow would injure the first appropriator. Id.

149. A mere temporary or trivial irregularity in the flow of the water, such as does not cause actual injury to the prior appropriator below, will not be actionable; but if a sensible or positive injury be caused, such as would diminish the value of the water right, an action will lie, not only to recover damages, but to enjoin the future commission of the wrong. Id.

150. The construction of a reservoir across the bed of a ravine, for the purpose of collecting the water flowing down the same, to be used in irrigating a garden, or fruit trees, gives to the party constructing the same a vested right of property in the reservoir, and the right to have the water flow into the same, of which he can not be divested by persons subsequently entering for mining purposes; and a court of equity will enjoin miners thus entering, from injuring the reservoir, or diverting the water therefrom.

Rupley v. Welch, 23 Cal. 452.

151. As between ditch-owners and miners using the waters of a stream in the mineral region for mining purposes, the law does not tolerate any injury by one to the prior rights of the other. Hill v. Smith, 27 Cal. 476.

152. In controversies in the mining regions between the prior and subsequent appropriators of water, the question to be determined is, Has the use and enjoyment of the water, for the purposes for which the first appropriator claims it, been impaired by the acts of the subsequent claimant? Id.

153. The mere change in the use of water from one mining locality to another does not forfeit the right.

Maeris v. Bicknell, 7 Cal. 261.

154. Plaintiffs constructed a dam across

Clear creek and dug a ditch for some distance along its bank, by means of which all the waters of the stream were diverted and returned to the creek at a point half a mile below. The object of the diversion was to drain the channel of the stream below the dam and supply water for working a tract of mining claims owned by plaintiffs in the bed of the stream. Subsequently defendants dug a ditch at a point above, through which they diverted the waters of the same stream for general mining purposes. Still later, plaintiffs extended their ditch to other mining points and to agricultural land below, and used the water for mining and irrigating at these latter places. In an action by plaintiffs to recover for injuries occasioned by the diversion of defendants to the use of the water at the latter points to which plaintiff's ditch had been extended: Held, that the prior right of plaintiffs was limited to the use of the water for working their original claims in the bed of the stream; that as to the surplus above what was required for that particular purpose, defendants' right was paramount; and that plaintiffs could not recover.

McKinney v. Smith, 21 Cal. 374.

155. In an action involving the right to and extent of a water privilege claimed by plaintiffs under an alleged appropriation by a number of copartners, defendants, to limit the extent of the appropriation, offered in evidence a paper, purporting to be a copy of the original locating notice of the copartners and without direct proof of its execution, showed that it was prepared with a knowledge of some of the partners, and was seen as a posted notice by a portion of them at the point of diversion and about the time the work was commenced, and that its position was such that it must probably have been seen by all: Held, that upon this proof the paper was admissible as part of the res gesta. Id.

MISCELLANEOUS DECISIONS.

156. The deterioration in the quality of the water, by reason of being used for mining purposes, before it reaches the ditch of the prior locator, must be deemed damnum absque injuria.

B. R. & A. Co. v. N. Y. Co., 8 Cal. 327.

157. Where a large number of persons are mining on a small stream, and each deteriorates the water a little, so that the combined acts of all render the water unfit for use, each can not successfully defend an action on the ground that his act alone did not materially affect the water.

Hill v. Smith, 32 Cal. 166.

158. Suit by plaintiffs as prior appropriators of the water of Middle Yuba river, for damming up and diverting the water of three lakes situated one above the other, opening into each other, and discharging their water into the Middle Yuba river through the same channel, which is about a mile long, and is called "lake stream." The quantity of water varies with the seasons. Sometimes the stream is a torrent, and sometimes it is almost or quite dry. Defendants, to create a supply for their ditch during the summer, erected a dam at the outlet of each lake, converting it into a sort of reservoir, from which the water was drawn as needed, contending that the circumstances justified the erection of the dams, and that the great value of the lakes as reservoirs justified the injuries resulting to plaintiffs: Held, that there is no law for such position; that if the injuries to plaintiffs were trivial, they would be damnum absque injuria, but that the legal superiority of conflicting rights can not be determined by a comparison of their value.

Weaver v. Eureka Lake Co., 15 Cal. 271.

159. Water, when collected in reservoirs or pipes, and thus separated from the original source of supply, is personal property, and is as much the subject of sale, an article of commerce, as ordinary goods and merchandise. Engaging in the business of furnishing it to the inhabitants of a city for equivalent considerations to be received is engaging in "a species of trade or commerce" within the meaning of the corporation act of 1853. Ice companies organized to furnish the inhabitants of a city with ice, and gas companies organized to furnish them with gas, and the company in question organized to supply them with water, all stand upon the same footing. They are engaged "in a species of trade or commerce," though not in the technical acceptance of the terms "trading" or "commercial corporations."

Heyneman v. Blake, 19 Cal. 579.

160. There is no doubt that the ditch-owners would be responsible for wanton injury or gross negligence, but they are not liable for a mere accidental injury, where no negligence is shown, to a miner locating along the line subsequent to the construction of the ditch.

Tenney v. Miner's Ditch Co., 7 Cal. 335.

161. The owner of a ditch is bound to use that degree of care and caution in its construction and management, to prevent injury to others, which ordinarily prudent men use in like instances, when the risk is their own.

Wolf v. St. L. Co., 10 Cal. 541.

162. Flumes constructed at different parts of the line of a ditch can not change the general character of the work as an excavation. Such flumes are mere connecting links of the ditch over ravines and gulches, and the whole work must be regarded as a ditch.

Ellison v. Jackson W. Co., 12 Cal. 542.

163. If the owner of a ditch is entitled to all the water flowing down the stream where the ditch starts out, other parties having ditches on the same stream can not complain of its enlargement.

James v. Williams, 31 Cal. 211.

164. A ditch-owner may only adopt a ravine, which is also a natural water-course, as a part of his line of ditch, to the extent of the capacity of his ditch to convey water. If an injury result from an overflow of the water of such ravine, not occasioned by its use as part of such ditch, the ditch-owner will not be responsible therefor.

WHARVES.

1. A wharf company is bound to keep its wharf in a proper condition, and it is liable for losses sustained by reason of its neglect to do so.

Trim v. Vallejo St. Co., 7 Cal. 253.

2. It does not follow as a legal conclusion that a wharf erected below high-water mark in tide waters and upon the soil thereunder belonging to the state, is a public nuisance, or an injury to commerce and navigation. Whether such wharf is a public nuisance is a question of fact.

People v. Davidson, 30 Cal. 379.

3. If a wharf is erected in the tide waters and upon soil belonging to the state, without a license from the state, it will belong to the state, and possession of the land and wharf, if withheld, can be recovered in ejectment by the state. Id.

4. The owner of a lot on the water front of San Francisco has no right, without a license, to wharf out from his own land into the bay.

Dana v. Jackson St. Co., 31 Cal. 118.

5. At common law a riparian proprietor on navigable water has no right to wharf out against his own land. Id.

6. An application to the board of supervisors for a franchise to construct a wharf in accordance with the provisions of the act of March 1, 1870, must particularly describe the locality of the wharf.

Templeton v. Coburn, 48 Cal. 563.

7. If a wharf is constructed over the land of a riparian proprietor, extending beyond low-water mark into deep water, he can not maintain ejectment for that part of the wharf extending beyond low-water mark into the ocean. Coburn v. Ames, 52 Cal. 385.

8. The state may maintain ejectment for a wharf constructed without authority beyond low-water mark. Id.

WHARFAGE.

9. A mere right to collect wharfage and dockage for a certain term of years is neither real estate nor personal property, but a franchise, or incorporeal hereditament, an uncertain profit issuing out of the realty.

De Witt v. Hays, 2 Cal. 463.

10. The term wharfage is applied to a charge for landing goods, whether upon an artificial erection or a natural landing.

Sacramento v. New World, 4 Cal. 41.

11. An action for wharfage may be maintained, although the law imposing it speaks only in terms of a charge for "arrivals."

Sacramento v. Confidence, 4 Cal. 45.

12. The proprietor of a wharf may insist on compensation for the use made of his wharf above the line of low water, but no compensation can be claimed for that part of the wharf below the line of low water. Gunter v. Geary, 1 Cal. 462.

13. Dockage is collected to assist in defraying the expense of dredging; and under the lease from the state harbor commissioners to the defendant (made under the act of April 4, 1870, stats. 1870, p. 799), by the terms of which the defendant is to do all the dredging at its dock, the former have not the right to collect dockage fees for vessels engaged in the defendant's business, landing at its wharf; but the latter may, under contract with such vessels, collect such fees.

People v. S. F. Gas Co., 54 Cal. 248.

14. The rate of toll prescribed by the state harbor commissioners for coal is ten cents per ton, but a reduced rate is allowed for merchandise landed upon wharves, and taken thence in lighters or other vessels, or warehoused without drayage. Defendants' coal was removed from their wharf by cars run upon a railway supported by timbers resting upon the wharf: Held, in an action for the tolls, that the difference between the two rates was intended to cover the wear and tear of wharves by the passage of loaded means of conveyance, whether wagons, drays, or cars; and that the defendant (who was bound, by the terms of its lease from the harbor commissioners, to pay the same rates as are charged at other wharves) was not entitled to the reduction.

WHO MAY MAKE A WILL.

1. Where a last will and testament was executed, on the nineteenth day of September, 1846, by a Mexican citizen of California, before the judge (jurz) of the place, who certified at the foot of the will that the testator was possessed of his entire judgment and understanding, and retained his perfect memory: Held, that it was incumbent on the person contesting the validity of the will to establish that the testator was not of sound mind and disposing memory.

Panaud v. Jones, 1 Cal. 488.

2. In the state there is no limitation upon the power of disposition by will.

Norris v. Harris, 15 Cal. 226.

EXECUTION OF.

3. A will is valid, although one of the three subscribing witnesses was alcalde of the place. Panaud v. Jones, 1 Cal. 488.

4. Where a will was attested by two witnesses, and made before a person who was a sindico: Held, the fact that such person signed the instrument as sindico did not the less render him a witness.

Tevis v. Pilcher, 10 Cal. 465.

5. The fact that a will was begun on one day and finished several days afterwards is, it seems, no ground for invalidating the will under the Mexican law.

Castro v. Castro, 6 Cal. 158.

6. The strictness of the rules of the civil law requiring five, or at least three, witnesses to a will, was relaxed expressly in favor of remote districts, and by the customs of California, under the Mexican rule, which have the force of law, two witnesses were sufficient to a will. Id.

7. A will only becomes executed on the death of the testator, and therefore this construction does not affect wills made before the passage of the statute, where the testator did not die till after its passage.

Grimes' Estate v. Norris, 6 Cal. 621.

8. The principal beneficiary under a will was a partner of the testator, at the time of the testator's death and for many years previous: Held, that this did not, per se, raise a presumption of undue influence.

Estate of Brooks, 54 Cal. 471.

9. The testator, soon after the execution of the will, told the proponent that he would some day tell him what he wished to have him do with some of his property; and before his death, directed him to pay certain persons and charitable institutions certain sums: Held, that, while, in a proper case, the courts would compel a devisee to carry out such directions, the fact of such directions having been given and assented to was not evidence that the execution of the will was procured by undue influence. Id.

10. The name of a testatrix was subscribed to the will by one of the subscribing witnesses, and she declared the document to be her will in the presence and hearing of the witnesses, who subscribed their names at her request, and in her presence, and in the presence of each other: Held, to be a sufficient execution.

Estate of Toomes, 54 Cal. 509.

11. If the probating of a will is contested on the ground that its execution was obtained by undue influence, evidence that the testator was intoxicated when it was executed is admissible in connection with other circumstances to show "undue influence;" and if such testimony is introduced, the court can not take away from the jury the right to find on the issue.

Estate of Cunningham, 52 Cal. 465.

12. Upon the contest of a will by one of two children of the testator who had been excluded from its provisions, the contestant introduced evidence tending to show that the testator executed the will under undue influence, and a witness of proponent in reply testified that by direction of the testator he made a draft of his will, and that upon reading it to him, the testator objected to the names of the contestant and the other excluded child, and said he would not have them in, which testimony was, upon the motion of contestant, stricken out: Held, that the declarations of the testator, if made, constituted part of the res gestae, and that the court erred in excluding them.

Nelson v. McClanahan, 55 Cal. 308.

13. Declarations made by the testator in his will are competent evidence after his death, tending to prove his marriage and the legitimacy of his children, in a case where the persons so declared his wife and children are the devisees. Pearson v. Pearson, 46 Cal. 610.

14. Such declarations being competent evidence, and admitted without objection, in the absence of contradictory evidence, prove such marriage and legitimacy, and are not to be disregarded because the wife and witnesses of the marriage are living and might have been called. Id.

VALIDITY AND CONSTRUCTION OF.

15. A will having been once admitted to probate, must, so long as the probate stands, be recognized and admitted in all courts to be valid. State v. McGlynn, 20 Cal. 233.

16. The same instrument may operate both as a conveyance and as a will or devise in regard to different pieces of property.

Adams v. Lansing, 17 Cal. 629.

17. A will is regarded by the courts of England and the United States as a conveyance, and takes effect as a deed on proof of its execution, unless there be some express statute requiring it to be probated.

Castro v. Castro, 6 Cal. 158.

18. Where a testator, in his will, provided that, "before any distribution be made, there shall be parted out from the neat stock, which at my decease may be found, one thousand four hundred head of large cattle, which shall be sold by my executors, and their product shall be invested by them according to the instructions which I have given to them, of the fulfillment whereof they shall have to give account to God alone;" and, "I declare that, besides what has been already expressed, I made a secret bequest to my said son Joaquin, which my executors shall give him to understand, according to my instructions, when they may deem it convenient;" and the executors, in obedience to an order of court, answered that the instructions given them were verbal, and to the effect that this clause of the will referred to a son of the testator; that they were to give these cattle to this son if and when they saw fit, and that the obligation so to do was merely moral: Held, that the son has no claim upon the estate which he or his creditors can enforce; that it is a mere matter of conscience, and not a legal obligation.

Sparks v. De la Guerra, 18 Cal. 676.

19. Where a testator had precisely ordained in what way his property was to be disposed of, and what duties the executors were to perform: Held, that the will was valid, notwithstanding one of the three subscribing witnesses was named in the will as one of the two executors, he not being named as heir or legatee, nor empowered to institute an heir, nor vested with any discretion in respect to the disposition of the estate; and held, further, that such executor was competent as a witness to testify in support of the will. Panaud v. Jones, 1 Cal. 483.

20. The will of a testator dying before the organization of the state government did not require to be probated under the then existing laws. Grimes' Estate v. Norris, 6 Cal. 621.

21. Our statute of wills not only fails to require the probate of wills executed before its passage, but it must from its terms be concluded that the legislature actually intended to exclude such wills from the operation of the statute altogether, leaving their validity to depend upon the laws under which they were made, and not disturbing rights which had grown up under the former system. Id.

22. In England, it is well settled by a long series of decisions, that the comprehensive jurisdiction exercised by courts of chancery, in setting aside instruments obtained by fraud does not extend to wills, and that those courts have no power to determine the validity of a will of either personal or real property.

State v. McGlynn, 20 Cal. 233.

23. Courts of chancery in England, in their efforts to defeat fraudulent practices, have in some cases deprived parties of the benefit of the fraudulent will, by decreeing that such parties should hold the property under their will in trust for the parties who would have been entitled to it if such will had not been probated; but in all such cases they have disclaimed any power to set aside the will or the probate. Id.

24. Under the provisions of section 17 of the "act concerning wills," parol evidence is not admissible to show that a testator, who by his will devised his whole estate to his wife without mentioning his children therein, intentionally omitted to make any provision for his children; but to render an exclusion of the latter effectual, the evidence that the testator intended to do so must be furnished by the will itself.

Estate of Garraud, 35 Cal. 336.

25. If a word in a will is repugnant to the clear intention manifested in other parts of the instrument, it may be regarded as surplusage, or restricted in its application.

Estate of Wood, 36 Cal. 75.

26. The following instrument, "I wish five thousand dollars to go to John C. Cole, in the event of my dying intestate, and the balance of my property to go to Robert Beatie, to be disposed of by him as his judgment may dictate," if properly executed and witnessed, is testamentary in its character, and is a will. Id.

27. The testator charged the bequest of his estate with the "support and education" of a minor illegitimate child, without naming any amount therefor. It was held, that, in determining what should be the style and manner of education and support, the conclusion must be arrived at by reference to the will, and on a fair and just interpretation of its provisions, considering all the circumstances which surrounded the testator, and the motives which probably actuated him. William v. McDougall, 39 Cal. 80.

28. The construction of a devise, like that of a contract in writing, is always a matter of law, and is, therefore, never to be submitted to a jury.

Bruck v. Tucker, 42 Cal. 346.

29. Where a deviser, having but one flour mill, made a devise in these words: "To my daughter, Lolita, the flour mill, with the land appertaining thereto—a half league, more or less;" Held, that the language was sufficiently accurate in expression and certain in its application to be the subject of the devise. Id.

30. A purpose by a husband to attempt the disposition by will of the wife's half of the common property is not to be readily inferred, and especially not where the words employed may have their fair and natural import by applying them only to that moiety of which he has the testamentary disposition.

Estate of Silvey, 42 Cal. 210.

31. Where a husband, having only common property, left a will devising all his estate to his wife for life, and after her death to be equally divided between the children: Held, that she was entitled to one half of the property absolutely in her own right, and to a life estate in the other half under the will. Id.

32. Where a testator, in disposing of his property, used the expression, "to my children," and proceeded to name them, and the portion devised to each, but omitted any special mention of a devise to the children of a deceased daughter: Held, that the use of the word "children" did not indicate a deliberate purpose to exclude the children of a deceased daughter, and that, under section 17 of the statute of wills, they were entitled to a full share of the estate, as if the deceased had died intestate.

Estate of Utz, 43 Cal. 200.

33. If the testator, in his will, devise his property to his grandson, the son of his deceased son, and the testator has children living, it does not show as matter of construction of the will that his children were brought to his recollection, and that his omission to provide for them in his will was intentional.

Bush v. Lindsey, 44 Cal. 121.

34. A will which declares that the testator's lands are for the benefit and property of the testator's daughter, Dolores, and of the sons of a deceased son, Domingo, and then declares, that whereas the widow of a deceased son, Jose Maria, has a house on a portion of the land called "Chino," that it is the will of the testator that she be permitted to remain in permanency in her house, with liberty to raise her cattle and cultivate it, passes the fee to Dolores and the sons of Domingo, subject to an estate for life in the widow of Jose Maria, to the part called "Chino." Bernal v. Wade, 46 Cal. 663.

35. A will made in Texas, operating upon property there situated, must be interpreted by the law of that state. To that law reference must be had to determine the capacity of the testator, the extent of his power of disposition, and the conditions upon which the power of alienation vested in the guardian of his children, appointed by the will, is to be exercised. Norris v. Harris, 15 Cal. 226.

36. In the absence of proof as to the laws of Texas, the courts of this state, in interpreting a will made in that state, will presume its laws to be in accordance with the laws of California. Id.

37. R. died, leaving property, principally cash, in California, and also real estate in Nevada; and by his will, after making certain money legacies, directed his executors to deposit in some bank or other secure place in San Francisco, all rents from the property in Nevada, and all the rents and profits derived from his estate, and that the same should be applied to the payment of an annuity to his mother, and to the education of certain nephews and nieces; and devised and bequeathed the residue of his estate to his nephews and nieces generally: Held, that the intention of the testator was that the money legacies should look first to the California assets for payment, and that the proceeds of the Nevada property should, at least for the present, be reserved for the annuity and the education of the nephews and nieces. Estate of Radovich, 54 Cal. 540.

38. The word "money," used in making a devise in a will, will be construed to include both personal and real property, if it appears from the context, and on the face of the instrument, that such was the intention of the testator. Estate of Miller, 48 Cal. 165.

39. C., in his will, devised a portion of his property to trustees in trust, to be held and managed for the benefit of a son, in such manner as the trustees should judge for the interest of the son; and to pay over to the son such part of the income as they might think best, until he arrived at the age of thirty years, and then, if they thought he possessed such habits of prudence and economy as to render it proper, to transfer it to him, but otherwise to retain it in trust, and still manage it for his benefit; and at his decease, if still in their hands, to transfer it to his heirs: Held, that the son, by the devise, took no interest in the property which he could assert in an action against the trustees, even after he arrived at the age of thirty years, and that the title to the property vested in the trustees.

Cutter v. Hardy, 48 Cal. 568.

40. Held, further, that the trust was valid in law, and that its duration could not extend beyond the life-time of the son, and might terminate sooner, if, in the opinion of the trustees, it was prudent to transfer the property to the devisee. Id.

41. A will, made before the present codes took effect, is to be construed under the statutes in force at the time it was made.

Estate of Puelb, 48 Cal. 643.

42. The word "relation," in the statute, providing that a devise to a relation shall not lapse by the death of the devisee during the life-time of the testator, if the devisee leaves lineal descendants, includes only relations by blood, and not by affinity. Id.

43. Courts of probate have exclusive jurisdiction of matters relating to the proof of wills; and before a will can be read in evidence in support of a title under it, the party seeking to introduce it must show that it has been regularly probated.

Castro v. Richardson, 18 Cal. 478.

44. A will is not a conveyance within the provisions of the act concerning conveyances, which can be read in evidence upon the certificate of proof, or of acknowledgment by a notary.

Carpentier v. Gardiner, 29 Cal. 160.

45. A will which devises a certain number of cattle and sheep, and also bequeaths to the devisee the right, during his natural life, to pasture cattle and sheep on land of the testator devised to another, is to be construed as giving to the devisee the right to graze on the land, during his life, the number of cattle and sheep bequeathed, even if not the identical live stock bequeathed.

Welch v. Huse, 49 Cal. 506.

46. Wills are to be liberally construed so as to effectuate the intention of the testator. Id.

47. Parol testimony will be received for the purpose of showing whether an instrument propounded as a will, which is not upon its face testamentary in its character, is such; and if it appears from the surrounding circumstances that the instrument was intended to be testamentary, the court will give effect to the intention, and in such case the particular form of the instrument is immaterial.

Clarke v. Ransom, 50 Cal. 595.

48. Under the foregoing rule, the following instrument held to be testamentary in its character and admitted to probate: "Dear old Nance: I wish to give you my watch, two shawls, and also five thousand dollars. Your old friend, E. A. Gordon." Id.

49. It is not necessary that a second will, altering a former one, should state in terms that it is intended thereby to alter such former will. Id.

50. A decedent who has left an instrument in writing, entitled to probate as his last will and testament, did not die intestate within the meaning of section 1365 of the code of procedure.

Estate of Barton, 52 Cal. 538.

51. If an instrument in writing is intended as a last will and testament, although it does not name an executor, this is not essential to its validity as a will. Id.

WHAT PASSES BY.

52. If the testator in his life-time conveys or contracts to convey a part of a tract of land devised by him, the will, upon his death, operates only upon so much of the land as legally and equitably belonged to him at his death. Bruck v. Tucker, 32 Cal. 425.

53. A specific bequest of personal property is the bequest of a particular thing; or money specified and distinguished from all others of the same kind, as of a horse, or money in purse.

Estate of Woodworth, 31 Cal. 595.

54. A bequest of "all my personal estate * * *" is not a specific bequest, and under the common law such bequest would not discharge the personality from being applied to the payment of the debts. Id.

55. If by the terms of a will the estate is devised to A., to have and to hold during his life-time, and then go to his heirs; if the word "heirs" is used in a general sense to indicate those to whom by law the property would pass by descent, and not in a special or restrictive sense to designate certain particular individuals, the whole estate vests in A. in fee simple, notwithstanding the language of the will limits him to a life estate.

Norris v. Hensley, 27 Cal. 39.

56. The following was the language of the bequest in the will: "I bequeath to Dr. Van Canaghen one third of my property on California street, and one third to my son, and one third to my brother, each and all of them to have and to hold their life-time, and then to go to their heirs and assigns. But never to sell." Hehl, that by the terms of the will, the three devisees named took a fee-simple estate in the property devised. Id.

57. If the testator devises his "flour mill, with the land pertaining thereto, a half league, more or less," and he owns a large tract of land around the mill, and there is no inclosure around the mill, and no portion of it has any special relation to the business carried on at the mill, the entire tract of land passes by the will to the devisee, upon the death of the testator.

Bruck v. Tucker, 32 Cal. 425.

58. If the whole tract of land around the mill which belongs to the testator in such case is less than half a league, it will be assumed that he intended to give the whole tract. Id.

59. Under the common law every devise of real estate was regarded as specific. Under the statutes of California, a devise of real estate may be general.

Estate of Woodworth, 31 Cal. 595.

60. A devise of all the real estate of which the testator may die seised, made in pursuance of the provisions of section 22 of the act of the state of California, concerning wills, is a general, not a specific, devise. Id.

61. Where a devise was made "to my youngest daughter, Margaret Utz, and to her children:" Id., that Margaret's children became devisees as well as herself, and that the devise passed an estate in common to all.

Estate of Utz, 43 Cal. 201.

62. The "rule in Shelley's case," when applied to wills, is confined to cases in which, after a freehold is devised to one, the remainder is to go in terms to the "heirs" of the first taker, and does not apply to a devise to a mother and to her "children." Id.

63. Where a devise was made "to Margaret Utz and to her children," on condition that Margaret would take care of the testator during his life-time, which she did: Held, that there was nothing in the condition to show an intention on the part of the testator that Margaret alone should have the benefit of the devise. Id.

63a. A devise in a will made to executors in trust for heirs, of all the testator's property, real and personal, wheresoever situated, includes the homestead of the testator and his family.

Etcheborne v. Auzerai, 45 Cal. 121.

64. A will, in which the testator devises his lands to his executors, nominated in the will, to be held by them in trust for purposes named in the will, gives the fee of the land to the executors to be thus held in trust.

Estate of Delancy, 49 Cal. 76.

65. If the testator devises all his lands to his executor in trust, and makes provision in the will for the support of his wife, and she renounces her rights under the will, and the probate court sets off to her an undivided one half of the property, because it was common property, this does not extinguish the trusts declared in the will, nor divest the executor of the fee in the remaining portion of the property. Id.

66. If the will directs the executor to sell the real estate left by the testator, he may sell without procuring an order of sale from the probate court. Id.

67. The testator, when he devises his lands in trust, may nominate the trustee, or any other person his executor, and if he devises the lands to the same person that he appoints executor, the executor will take and hold the lands in the same manner and capacity that a trustee would. Id.

68. In an action to quiet title, the answer alleged that the plaintiff's father died seised of the land in controversy, and of another tract, and by his will devised the latter to the plaintiff, and the former to other children, one of whom conveyed to the defendant; that, under a decree of distribution, the land devised to plaintiff was assigned to him, and that he accepted the same: Held, upon the facts alleged, that the plaintiff was estopped by the decree from claiming the property in controversy; and held, further, that the defense was well pleaded, though the answer alleged that both the land devised to the plaintiff, and the land claimed by him in opposition to the will, were the property of the testator.

Noe v. Spivalo, 54 Cal. 207.

POWERS CONTAINED IN.

69. The husband has not the power by a last will and testament to dispose of the wife's interest and estate in the common property. Morrison v. Bowman, 29 Cal. 337.

70. A will which expressly empowers an executor to sell land, without any reference to the probate court, is like a power of attorney, and is to be consulted as the source of power to convey.

Larco v. Casanueva, 30 Cal. 560.

71. When the testator in his will directs his executor, within one year after his decease, to sell his real estate, the proceeds to be disposed of upon certain trusts, the power to sell is not limited to one year, but may be exercised after that time, unless there are express words in the will showing the intention of the testator to thus limit the exercise of the power.

Kidwell v. Brummagim, 32 Cal. 436.

72. If the testator devises his real estate to his children, and, in his will, appoints an executor to whom he gives full power to sell his real estate, the executor does not hold the title to such real estate in trust for the devisees. Auguisola v. Arnaz, 51 Cal. 435.

ELECTION AND ACCEPTANCE UNDER.

Morrison v. Bowman, 29 Cal. 337.

74. A will by which interests in real estate were devised to certain infants, provided that the devisees might each "take out" one half of his share when he should come of age; and the other half not until all the other children should come of age; and it was objected to the validity of a sale made by the guardian of the devisees, under order of the probate court, that the above provision of the will so controlled the disposition of the property, that it was not the subject of sale by the guardian: Held, that whatever effect this provision might have in controlling the use of the property, the title to it, the estate of the devisees vested in them upon the death of the testator, and this estate was the subject of sale under the provisions of the statute, and the effect of its sale was to transfer whatever estate the wards had to the purchaser. Fitch v. Miller, 20 Cal. 352.

75. If the husband, by his will, undertakes to dispose of the wife's half of the common property, as well as his own, to her and others, and she elects to accept the benefits intended and provided for her by the will, she thereby becomes divested of her title in and to the undivided half of the common property, provided an assertion of her community right and interest would necessarily defeat the objects of the will.

Morrison v. Bowman, 29 Cal. 337.

76. If, by a just construction of the will, it appears that the testator did not intend to dispose of his wife's share of the common property, her acceptance of a bequest or devise under the will will not operate as an election to relinquish her right to one half of the common property. Id.

77. If a married man, by will, devises his real estate to his wife, and the same is community property, and there is nothing on the face of the will to show that he intends to devise more than the undivided half which is subject to his testamentary disposition, and, after the death of the testator, the executor, under a power of sale in the will, and in ignorance of the law which allows the wife to inherit one half of the community property, sells and conveys the right of the testator to all the land, and the purchaser, also in ignorance of the law, supposes he is buying the entire property, and the wife, also in ignorance of the law, receives the purchase money, she does not thereby waive her right to the undivided half of the property which the statute permits her to inherit.

King v. Lagrange, 50 Cal. 328.

78. In such case there is no alternative by which the widow is required to elect whether she will take under the will, or repudiate it and claim her inheritance under the statute. Id.

79. The essence of either an election or ratification is that it was done with full knowledge of the party's right. Id.

80. The surviving wife, by acting and taking under the will in this case, will not be deemed to have renounced her rights in the common property.

Estate of Frey, 52 Cal. 658.

81. If a testator undertakes to dispose of the property of a third person, and such person accepts a bequest or devise under the will, such acceptance is a confirmation of the disposition by the will; for a person can not accept a benefit under a will, and at the same time reject it, by asserting, in opposition to it, his own inconsistent proprietary rights. Noe v. Splivalo, 54 Cal. 207.

CODICIL.

82. The codicil to a will operates as a republication of the will, and the two are to be regarded as forming but one instrument, speaking from the date of the codicil.

Payne v. Payne, 18 Cal. 291.

83. Where a will gives all the testator's property to his wife, without naming his children, and subsequently a codicil is made referring to the will, and mentioning the children: Held, that the codicil and the will must be read together as parts of one instrument in determining whether the omission to provide for the children was intentional, within the seventeenth section of the act of 1850 concerning wills, which declares that if the testator omit to provide in his will for his children, they shall inherit the same share in his estate as if he had died intestate, "unless it shall appear that such omission was intentional." Id.

84. Held, further, that the only object of the statute is to protect the children against omission or oversight, frequently arising from sickness, old age, or other infirmity, or the peculiar circumstances under which the will is executed; and that whenever the children are present to the mind of the testator—and of this the fact that they are mentioned is conclusive evidence—the statute affords them no protection if provision is not made for them. Id.

85. Held, further, that in this case, as the property left by the husband was common property, and as his will devises all his property to his wife, and as the codicil mentions the children, the wife takes one half of the property in her own right, and the other half as devisee under the will. Id.

WRIT OF ASSISTANCE.

1. GENERALLY.
13. WHEN THE WRIT WILL LIE.
25. WHEN THE WRIT WILL NOT LIE.

GENERALLY.

1. If a writ of assistance be improperly issued or executed, the court granting it can, on summary motion, set aside the writ or the service, and restore the possession.

Skinner v. Beatty, 16 Cal. 156.

2. Prior to the passage of the act of May 18, 1861, judges of courts had no power to issue writs of assistance to place the purchaser of property sold under a decree of foreclosure in possession of the same.

Chapman v. Thornburg, 23 Cal. 48.

3. Upon an application for a writ of assistance to place a party in possession of land sold by the sheriff under a judgment for taxes, rendered by a justice of the peace, the applicant must produce in evidence the execution and the judgment, and proceedings upon which the execution issued.

People v. Doe, 31 Cal. 220.

4. Can the district court issue a writ of assistance to place the purchaser at a sheriff's sale in possession of land sold under a judgment rendered by a justice of the peace for taxes, and filed with and docketed by the county clerk?

Id.

5. On an application for a writ of assistance to place a party in possession of land purchased at a sheriff's sale made under a judgment rendered by a justice of the peace, the sheriff's deed is not admissible in evidence without first producing the judgment and execution.

Id.

6. The power of district courts to issue writs of assistance is limited to sales on judgments rendered by the district court to which the application for writ of assistance is made.

Id.

7. If the return to the first writ does not clearly declare that it has been fully executed, and it is made to appear by affidavits that it has not been, it is competent for the court to issue another writ.

Tevis v. Hicks, 38 Cal. 234.

8. When the application is made for a writ of assistance under a sheriff's sale, enforcing the lien of a tax, notice should be given to the defendant, and also to the terretenant, if there be one who will be disturbed by execution of the writ.

San Jose v. Fulton, 45 Cal. 316.

9. On a motion for a writ of assistance questions of equitable cognizance between the parties in possession of the land who are not parties to the foreclosure suit, and the plaintiff, as to their respective rights to the land, can not be litigated.

Henderson v. McTucker, 45 Cal. 647.

10. It is the duty of the sheriff, in the execution of a writ of assistance, to place the purchaser on foreclosure of mortgage of an estate in common in the possession of every part and parcel of the land, jointly with the other tenants in common.

Tevis v. Hicks, 38 Cal. 234.

11. In the execution of the writ, the sheriff can not remove any of the tenants in common who hold under a title derived from a source independent of him through whom the purchaser claims.

Id.

12. In proceedings for a writ of assistance, a person in possession under a lease, made after the commencement of the action to foreclose the mortgage, can not collaterally attack the process on the ground that it is erroneous.

Newmark v. Chapman, 53 Cal. 557.

WHEN THE WRIT WILL LIE.

13. A writ of assistance is the appropriate remedy to place the purchaser of mortgaged premises, under a decree of foreclosure, in possession, after he has obtained the sheriff's deed.

Montgomery v. Tutt, 11 Cal. 191.

14. Under our system, the order to deliver possession should be first made, unless a direction to that effect is contained in the decree, and if upon its service that is disregarded, the court can at once direct the writ to issue. If delivery of possession to the purchaser is directed by the decree, no preliminary order will be requisite, but upon proof of disobedience to the decree, the party will be entitled, as a matter of course, to the writ as against the defendant in the suit.

Id.

15. Prima facie, plaintiff in a foreclosure suit is entitled, after sale of the premises and sheriff's deed to him, to a writ of assistance as against the mortgagor, and those entering under him subsequent to the decree, if they refuse to surrender possession.

Skinner v. Beatty, 16 Cal. 156.

16. Where, in such case, a writ of assistance is granted, and the mortgagor and his wife move to set it aside on the ground that they had moved upon and occupied the mortgaged premises as a homestead before the execution of the mortgage by the husband, and continuously ever since, and it appears that the mortgage was given for the purchase money of the premises, the motion must be denied, even though the wife was not a party to the foreclosure.

Id.

17. To entitle a purchaser at a foreclosure sale to a writ of assistance, it is not essential that the decree of foreclosure direct delivery of possession to the purchaser. The decree ascertains the rights of the parties, and gives the purchaser a summary right to be put in possession, as against the mortgagor and all others entering in subordination to his right after commencement of suit.

Horn v. Volcano W. Co., 18 Cal. 141.

18. A writ of assistance can only issue against the defendants in the suit, and parties holding under them who are bound by the decree. Burton v. Lies, 21 Cal. 87.

19. The purchaser at a sale under a decree of foreclosure of a mortgage is entitled to a writ of assistance, although the decree in the foreclosure action contains no direction to deliver the possession, and although at the time of the application no preliminary order for such delivery of possession has been made by the court.

Montgomery v. Middlemiss, 21 Cal. 103.

20. All that is requisite to obtain the writ as against the parties, and those claiming with notice under them after the commencement of the action, is to furnish to the court proper evidence of a presentation of the deed to them, and a demand of the possession, and their refusal to surrender it. Id.

21. A person who, pending an action for the foreclosure of a mortgage and with notice of its pendency, purchases from one of the defendants therein a portion of the mortgaged premises, occupies the same position as his grantor in reference to the issuance of a writ of assistance in favor of the purchaser under the decree.

Montgomery v. Byers, 21 Cal. 107.

22. Under the fifth section of the act of April 3, 1858, providing for the collection of delinquent taxes in Sacramento, the purchaser at a tax sale made in pursuance of the act is entitled to a writ of assistance against the person in possession of the premises, notwithstanding the existence of such fiduciary relations between the parties at the time of the sale, that a court of equity would hold the purchaser a trustee for the possessor in the purchase, on the ground of constructive fraud. Mills v. Tukey, 22 Cal. 373.

23. If the decree in a foreclosure suit directs the sale of all the mortgaged premises, and forecloses and bars the equity of redemption of the defendants, and directs that the purchaser at the sheriff's sale be let into possession, the person who receives the sheriff's deed, after a sale, is entitled to a writ of assistance as against all the defendants who were served with process or appeared in the action.

Frisbie v. Fogarty, 34 Cal. 11.

24. The above rule prevails as against a defendant who is not mentioned in the decree by name, and also as against one whose name is not mentioned in the sheriff's deed. Id.

WHEN THE WRIT WILL NOT LIE.

25. L., a married man, purchased certain real estate subject to a mortgage thereon, which had been previously executed by his grantor, and soon afterwards died. The mortgagee commenced an action to foreclose the mortgage, making the executors of L.

but not the widow, a party; and after a decree of foreclosure and sale and expiration of the time of redemption, received the sheriff's deed (himself being the purchaser), and thereupon applied to the court for a writ of assistance against the widow, who retained possession of a portion of the premises, which on demand she refused to surrender: Held, on appeal from an order denying the writ, that the denial was proper; that the estate conveyed to L. became thereby the common property of himself and wife; that upon his death the title to one half of this property vested in her, subject only to the mortgage and the lien for the payment of debts; that this title was not affected by the proceedings in the foreclosure suit to which she was not a party; and that not being bound by the decree, a writ of assistance could not be issued against her.

Burton v. Lies, 21 Cal. 87.

26. A writ of assistance will not be issued against a purchaser of the mortgaged premises who buys during the pendency of a suit to foreclose, and who is not a party to the suit, without actual or constructive notice of its pendency.

Harlan v. Rackerby, 24 Cal. 561.

27. If the court, in an action to foreclose a mortgage, does not acquire jurisdiction of the person owning the land at the time of the foreclosure, a writ of assistance against the owner or his grantees will be refused.

Steinbach v. Leese, 27 Cal. 295.

28. A writ of assistance will not issue in favor of a purchaser from one who received a sheriff's deed for land sold under a judgment for delinquent taxes. Such writ can only issue in favor of one who was the grantee of the sheriff.

People v. Grant, 45 Cal. 97.

29. The grantee of a sheriff's grantee, under a sale on a judgment enforcing the lien of a tax, is not entitled to a writ of assistance. San Jose v. Fulton, 45 Cal. 316.

30. A party who forecloses a mortgage given by one partner, on, and obtains a sheriff's deed for, an undivided interest in partnership property, without making the other partner a party to the action, is not entitled to a writ of assistance to be placed in possession, as against a receiver who has been appointed by the court, at the instance of such other partner, in an action commenced by him to dissolve the partnership, and have the partnership property sold to pay the debts.

Autenreith v. Hessenauer, 43 Cal. 357.

31. If the sheriff's grantee holds the title in trust for another, and such other has contracted with the defendant to sell him the land conveyed by the sheriff's deed, or if it be alleged that such is the fact, and a real controversy exists in relation to it, a writ of assistance should not issue.

San Jose v. Fulton, 45 Cal. 316.

32. The writ of assistance is a summary proceeding used to give effect to the decree, and if the rights of the parties have been changed since the decree and sale by reason of any agreement between the defendant and the purchaser at the sale, or his cestui que trust, or if it be alleged that such is the case, and the allegation is controverted, the writ should not be issued. Id.

33. Upon an application for a writ of assistance, to place the grantee of the purchaser of real estate under judgment sale in possession, it appeared that the defendants had acquired, or claimed to have acquired, a new right to the possession from the purchaser: Held, that the writ should have been denied, and the parties left to settle their rights in a regular suit.

WRIT OF ERROR.

1. WHEN THE WRIT WILL LIE.
14. WHEN THE WRIT WILL NOT LIE.
18. PRACTICE CONCERNING.

WHEN THE WRIT WILL LIE.

1. By the constitution, this court has appellate jurisdiction in all cases where the matter in dispute exceeds two hundred dollars; and this court and each of its justices are expressly authorized to issue all writs and process necessary to the exercise of its appellate jurisdiction; and by the seventh section of the judiciary act, have authority to issue all writs necessary and proper to the complete exercise of the powers conferred by the constitution, and, under these provisions, this court has power to issue a writ of error to the county court, when no express provision by law exists, by which such case can be brought into this court without process issuing from it. Adams v. Town, 3 Cal. 247.

2. Where no appeal is allowed by law, the proper method to take a case to an appellate court is by writ of error.

Middleton v. Gould, 5 Cal. 190.

3. A writ of error will only lie in cases where no appeal is given by the act of our legislature. Haight v. Gay, 8 Cal. 297.

4. A motion for such relief will only be entertained upon a proper showing, and after due notice to respondent. Id.

5. On application for a citation on production of a writ of error, from the clerk of the United States court, and for a stay of proceedings in the supreme court of this state, the duty and power of issuing the citation devolves on the chief justice, as a chamber proceeding, and he must see when he is required to act or authorized to proceed under the federal law, that he is within that law. Ferris v. Coover, 11 Cal. 175.

6. A contrary doctrine would permit writs of error in every case, whether civil or criminal, and would delay the whole machinery of justice in the courts of the state in every case, however destitute of any right to a writ of error. Id.

7. The true test as to whether a writ of error lies to the supreme court of the United States from the final judgment of a state court is to be arrived at, not from mere averment in the pleadings, but from the matter decided, as developed in the whole record.

Greely v. Townsend, 25 Cal. 604.

8. When a final judgment in a suit has been rendered in the highest court of law or equity of a state in which a decision in the suit could be had, and a writ of error has been issued by the clerk of the circuit court of the United States, directed to the judges of the court in which the judgment was rendered, commanding that the record be sent before the supreme court of the United States to be there reviewed, the presiding judge of the court in which the judgment was rendered is not compelled, as a matter of right, to award a citation to the respondent to appear before the supreme court of the United States to maintain the validity of his judgment, but he may look into the record for the purpose of determining whether in his opinion the judgment is one from which a writ of error lies, and if he determines that it is not he may refuse the citation. The granting of a citation is not a mere ministerial act, but one of judicial discretion. Id.

9. An appeal from the supreme court of this state to the supreme court of the United States is taken within ten days "after rendering the judgment" within the meaning of these terms as used in the act of congress, and operates as a supersedeas, if the writ of error is sued out and lodged with the clerk, and the proper security given, within ten days from the time a petition for rehearing is denied. Magraw v. McGlynn, 32 Cal. 257.

10. The judge of the United States district court for the district of Oregon has no authority, while holding the circuit court of the United States for the district of California, to sign a citation upon a writ of error from the supreme court of the United States to the supreme court of this state, nor has he authority to take and approve of the security required in order to make the writ of error a supersedeas and operate as a stay of execution upon the judgment to be reviewed. Tompkins v. Mahoney, 32 Cal. 231.

11. If the constitution confers appellate jurisdiction on a court, and there is no statute providing for a mode of taking an appeal, and the legislature has authorized the court to issue all writs necessary to the exercise of its powers, a case may be brought up to the court from an inferior tribunal, by a writ of error.

Ex parte Thistleton, 52 Cal. 220.

12. A writ of error is a writ ex debito justitiae, wherever, by reason of error, a judgment of a court of record ought not to stand, and an appeal is not provided by statute. Id.

13. A writ of error may be issued by the county court to the city criminal court of the city and county of San Francisco when there is no statute providing the mode of an appeal. Id.

WHEN THE WRIT WILL NOT LIE.

14. An action of ejectment, raising the question whether a grant made by the Mexican government passed title to the tract within the limits of the grant, is not a case in which a writ of error lies under the judiciary act.

Ferris v. Coover, 11 Cal. 175.

15. A writ of error does not lie in any case where an appeal is given to the supreme court by statute.

P. & N. R. Co. v. Harlan, 24 Cal. 334.

16. A writ of error does not lie to the supreme court of the United States from a judgment rendered by the supreme court of this state, by which it is decided that the city of San Francisco was, at the date of the conquest and cession of California, and long prior thereto, a pueblo, and that as such pueblo she had a title to the lands within her general limits, and that such lands were held by the city in trust for public uses, and were not, either under the old government or the new, the subject of seizure and sale under execution issued on a judgment against the city.

Greely v. Townsend, 25 Cal. 604.

17. A writ of error does not lie to the supreme court of the United States from the judgment of the supreme court of this state, by which judgment is decided that where a state school land warrant is located upon lands previously occupied and settled upon by another, and pre-empted by him, under the laws of the United States, the patent issued by the state under the location is void, and the patentee can not maintain an action against the pre-emptioner to recover possession of the same. The construction of an act of congress was not necessary in rendering such judgment, but the state law under which the warrant was located afforded a rule for the complete determination of the rights of the party who made the location.

Athearn v. Poppe, 25 Cal. 631.

PRACTICE CONCERNING.

18. It is only final judgments, or decrees of the highest court of a state, which can be re-examined upon a writ of error by the supreme court of the United States.

Hart v. Burnett, 20 Cal. 169.

19. A judgment of this court on appeal, reversing the judgment of a lower court in an action of ejectment, and remanding the cause for a new trial—following a decision finally determining certain questions of law arising in the case which will control the court below in its further action—is not a final judgment within the meaning of the twenty-fifth section of the judiciary act of 1789. Id.

20. The action of the presiding judge of a state court on the application for a citation upon a writ of error, directed to the justices of that court, issued by the clerk of the circuit court of the United States, is so far judicial in its nature that he may refuse to issue the citation when in his judgment it is clear that the writ of error will not lie for want of jurisdiction. Id.

WRIT OF MANDAMUS.

MANDAMUS.

WRIT OF POSSESSION.

1. Where L. and P. entered into possession of certain lands under neither of the parties to an action for the possession of the same, and were not parties to said action, they can not be dispossessed under a writ issued on a judgment rendered for plaintiff therein.

Rogers v. Parrish, 35 Cal. 127.

2. When a sheriff goes to execute a writ of possession issued on a judgment in an action to recover land, if he finds other parties in possession than those named in the complaint, who claim that they are rightfully in possession, not in privity with the defendants, and the circumstances are such that a reasonable doubt exists whether the sheriff has a right to turn them out, the sheriff may demand indemnity, and, unless it is given, may refuse to execute the writ. This is the law, even if the premises are specifically described in the writ.

Long v. Neville, 36 Cal. 455.

3. Prima facie, all who come into possession of the land, pending the action to recover possession, must go out under the writ of possession, if the plaintiff recovers, for the presumption is that they came in under the defendant.

Wetherbee v. Dunn, 33 Cal. 147.

4. If the defendant, pending an action against him to recover possession of land, colludes with another person to obtain judgment against him for possession, and to be placed in possession by a writ of restitution, such other person must go out under a writ of possession against the defendant. He will not be protected by his judgment if it was collusively obtained. Id.

5. Persons who are on land in the character of employees of a defendant in ejectment at the time the suit is commenced against him, are properly turned out under the writ, if the suit goes against him; and no subsequent entry of such persons under said defendant, or in collusion with him, or under the title determined in that action, will be available to protect him.

Satterlee v. Bliss, 36 Cal. 489.

6. In an action against ——— Doyle, John Doe, and Richard Roe, to recover land, wherein there was no service of summons, but John Doyle answered, and a judgment was subsequently entered against James Doyle: Held, that the district court properly refused to direct the sheriff to execute the writ of possession, by turning out James Doyle, jr., James Doyle, sr., and Catharine Doyle, who were in possession at the time of the commencement of the action, but who had not been made parties to the suit. Ford v. Doyle, 37 Cal. 346.

7. A person in possession of the demanded premises at the time of the commencement of the action to recover possession can not be removed under a writ issued on a judgment in the case, unless he is made defendant, and judgment is rendered against him after the court acquires jurisdiction of his person. Id.

8. If a writ of possession issued on a judgment in ejectment described the land recovered, so that its boundaries appear on the face of the writ to be possible of identification by the sheriff in the field, the writ is not void for uncertainty of description.

Lawrence v. Davidson, 44 Cal. 177.

9. Appellant moved in the lower court to restrain the sheriff from executing against him a writ of possession in an action of ejectment to which he was not a party. It appeared from his affidavit that he entered after the suit was commenced, but the affidavit failed to show that he did not enter under the defendants or in collusion with them: Held, that he was not entitled to the order. McCreery v. Everding, 54 Cal. 166.

WRIT OF RESTITUTION.

1. Under a writ of restitution issued upon a judgment in favor of the plaintiff, in an action of ejectment, it is the duty of the officer serving the writ to remove from the premises the parties defendant and all persons who have derived possession from them since the commencement of the action, with notice, actual or constructive, and also all other persons, although not parties or in privity with them, who have acquired possession subsequent to the filing of a lis pendens in the action, or with actual notice of its pendency. Fogarty v. Sparks, 22 Cal. 142.

2. A person in possession of the premises at the time of the commencement of the action of ejectment, unless made a party defendant, is not affected by the judgment, nor can he, or those holding under him, be dispossessed by a writ of restitution issued thereon. Id.

3. A party in the actual possession of land at the commencement of an action of ejectment, and holding adversely to the plaintiff, is not amenable to a writ of restitution issued in the action to which he was not a party.

S. B. Land Ass. v. Christy, 41 Cal. 501.

4. One who, after an action of ejectment has been commenced, enters upon the demanded premises, but does not enter under the defendant, or by collusion with him, and is not made a party to the action, can not be removed by virtue of a writ of restitution issued on a judgment rendered in the action.

Mayo v. Sprout, 45 Cal. 99.

5. Where a plaintiff has been restored, under a writ of restitution, to the possession of the demanded premises in an action of ejectment, the defendant so evicted is ever after estopped at law to deny that plaintiff was rightfully restored, and that his own prior possession was wrongful.

Mann v. Rogers, 35 Cal. 316.

6. Where a defendant in ejectment has taken possession of land in collusion with the plaintiff, for no other purpose than to afford such plaintiff a pretext to take possession under a writ of restitution, such pretended possession will be disregarded.

S. B. Land Ass. v. Christy, 41 Cal. 501.

7. Persons not parties to a suit in ejectment and in possession before and at the time it is brought, or those claiming under them, can not be ousted by the writ of restitution issued upon a judgment therein in favor of the plaintiff.

Sampson v. Ohleyer, 22 Cal. 200.

8. A person in possession of land where a writ of restitution is served is presumed to hold under the defendant in the action, and to avoid being dispossessed by the writ, must show affirmatively that he holds by a right independent and paramount. Id.

9. Where, pending an action of ejectment

WRIT OF PROHIBITION.

PROHIBITION.

against a tenant, the latter transferred the possession to his landlord who had actual notice of and defended the suit, but was not made a party, and plaintiff recovered judgment: Held, that under the writ of restitution authorized by the judgment, the landlord might be dispossessed. Id.

10. Where, after the commencement of an action of ejectment against a tenant, he gave notice thereof to his landlord, and requested him to defend, and the latter employed an attorney to conduct the suit: Held, that the actual notice given to the landlord was, as to him, equivalent to the filing of a lis pendens, and in an equal degree made the subsequent judgment obligatory upon him. Id.

11. A person in possession of land, where a writ of restitution is served, is presumed to hold under the defendants in the action, and, to avoid being dispossessed by the writ, must show affirmatively that he holds by a right independent and paramount. Id.

12. In ejectment against the occupant of the premises, a judgment of recovery binds not only the defendant, but all persons who receive possession of the premises from him, with actual notice of the pending suit. Id.

13. Persons not parties to a suit in ejectment, and in possession before and at the time it is brought, or those claiming under them, can not be ousted by the writ of restitution issued upon a judgment therein in favor of the plaintiff. Id.

14. In an application for mandamus to compel a sheriff to remove from possession of the premises, under a writ of restitution, an occupant who was not a party to the action, it must be shown distinctly by the affidavits that his possession was acquired under the parties or subsequent to the filing of a lis pendens. If these matters are left in doubt the application will be denied. Fogarty v. Sparks, 22 Cal. 142.

15. A sheriff has no authority by virtue of a writ of restitution to remove from the premises described in the writ persons who were not parties to the judgment on which the writ was issued, and did not enter under defendant in the judgment pending the suit. Tevis v. Ellis, 25 Cal. 515.

16. Where several persons are owners of a tract of land as tenants in common, and the interest of one passes to a purchaser under execution sale, who brings ejectment against the execution debtor alone, and recovers judgment, neither the other tenants in common nor their grantees who purchase and enter upon the land pending the suit can be dispossessed by the sheriff by virtue of the writ of restitution.

Watson v. Dowling, 26 Cal. 124.

17. It is the duty of the sheriff, having the writ of habere facias possessionem, to remove all persons who came upon the property after the suit was brought, except a person other than the defendant, who is in possession under a title adverse to the defendant.

Long v. Neville, 20 Cal. 131.

See also Leese v. Clark, 29 Cal. 664; Mayne v. Jones, 34 Id. 483.

18. Where ejectment is brought against a tenant alone, and pending the action the landlord dispossesses him and leases to another tenant who has no notice of the pendency of the action, it is the duty of the sheriff who receives the writ of habere facias possessionem to remove the second tenant. Id.

19. If a sheriff has wrongfully turned a person out of possession of land under a writ of restitution, he will be restored by the court to the possession, on motion made for that purpose.

S. B. Land Ass. v. Christy, 41 Cal. 501.

Mayo v. Sprout, 45 Id. 99.

20. If the plaintiff obtains judgment in an action of forcible entry and detainer, but does not obtain possession of the property, and a writ of restitution is not issued, and the judgment is afterwards reversed and the action dismissed, and during the pendency of the action, third parties obtain possession of the property by collusion with a servant of the defendant, the defendant is not entitled to a writ to be restored to possession as against these third parties.

Bowers v. Cherokee Bob, 46 Cal. 279.

21. A defendant in forcible entry, against whom judgment is rendered, which is afterwards reversed, but who does not lose possession of the property under or through the judgment, is not entitled to be restored to possession as against third parties who have ousted him during the pendency of the action. Id.

22. If a plaintiff in forcible entry and detainer recovers judgment, and is placed in possession of the premises by a writ of restitution, and the judgment is afterwards reversed by the supreme court, the court below should restore the defendant to the possession.

Polack v. Shafer, 46 Cal. 270.

23. A person found in possession of land, and turned out under a writ of habere facias possessionem, if he was not a party to the suit, is not prejudiced in his title, if he has any antedating the suit.

Leese v. Clark, 29 Cal. 664.

24. At the hearing, under an order for the sheriff to show cause why an order should not be made requiring him to proceed and execute a writ of habere facias possessionem, the burden is cast upon the sheriff of establishing affirmatively the matters which he alleges as an excuse for refusing to serve the writ. Fogarty v. Sparks, 22 Cal. 142, referred to in this connection. Id.

25. The plaintiff in a judgment in ejectment in an action on an undertaking to stay a writ of restitution pending an appeal, can recover the value of the use of whatever part of the premises the defendants occupied, if the judgment is affirmed.

De Castro v. Clarke, 29 Cal. 11.

26. If neither the tenant nor his landlord is party to an action of ejectment, and the landlord was in possession when the suit was commenced, but subsequently leased to the tenant, the tenant can not rightfully be removed by a writ of restitution issued in such action. Calderwood v. Peyser, 31 Cal. 333.

27. The three hundred and forty-fifth section of the practice act, authorizing the supreme court, on the reversal or modification of the judgment or order below, to make restitution of the property and rights lost by the erroneous judgment or order, does not exclude the lower court from exercising the same power. Reynolds v. Harris, 14 Cal. 667.

28. In an action between S. and D., a writ of restitution issued, commanding the sheriff to cause D. to be removed from certain premises, and S. to have restitution of the same. The return to the writ by the sheriff shows that he "put S., by his representative M., in peaceable possession." Held, that the possession under the writ was that of S. and not of M.; that M. was the mere agent of S.; and that the presumption of the continuance of this relation was not destroyed by proof of acts of control over the premises subsequently exercised by M. which were not inconsistent with his position as agent.

Mitchell v. Davis, 20 Cal. 45.

29. After the service of the writ, and while the relation remained unchanged between S. and M., D. entered upon the premises, and an action under the forcible entry and unlawful detainer statute was thereupon commenced by and in the name of M. against D.: Held, that M. could not maintain the action by reason of his want of possession. Id.

30. A sheriff is not guilty of a forcible entry, if, acting in good faith, by virtue of a writ of restitution, he removes from the premises a person against whom the writ does not run, and who is not in privity with any one against whom the writ does run.

Janson v. Brooks, 29 Cal. 214.

31. If the tenant and landlord are jointly made defendants in ejectment, and the tenant suffers default, and the landlord answers in his own name, and the plaintiff dismisses the action as to the landlord and takes judgment against the tenant, the court can not, on motion of the landlord, order a stay of proceedings under a writ of restitution.

Dinnick v. Deringer, 32 Cal. 488.

32. A motion made to set aside the return of the writ, showing the dispossession of said parties and her tenants, and to reinstate them in possession, upon a showing of said facts, under the peculiar circumstances of the case disclosed by the record, was properly denied by the court below. Leese v. Clark, 29 Cal. 672, cited as authority, and error in report of that case corrected.

Mayne v. Jones, 34 Cal. 483.

33. Where a defendant duly served in an action brought to recover possession of lands, was in possession of a portion of the demanded premises as guardian of an infant who held an unrecorded conveyance thereof, of which plaintiff had no notice when the action was commenced: Held, that such defendant, and the infant and her tenants, who entered subsequent to the commencement of the action, were properly dispossessed under a writ of restitution issued on a judgment for plaintiff in said action. Id.

34. Where a writ of restitution has been awarded in such a case, and the sheriff refuses to execute the same, on the ground that the mine is in the possession of certain persons not parties to the suit, who claim to hold under the corporation, the court will award a peremptory mandamus against the sheriff and compel him to execute the writ. Id.

35. A party who is removed from the possession of real estate by virtue of a writ of restitution, issued on a judgment in ejectment, and who moves to be restored to the possession on the ground that he was not a party to the action, must make out a clear case, free from ambiguity.

California M. Co. v. Redington, 50 Cal. 160.

36. If the plaintiff in ejectment dies after a judgment in his favor has been rendered, a writ of restitution may be issued on the judgment, at the instance and for the benefit of his successor in interest in the property.

Franklin v. Merida, 50 Cal. 239.

37. If such writ of restitution is issued and served in the name of the deceased plaintiff, but is in point of fact issued at the instance and for the benefit of his successor in interest, although irregular in point of mere procedure, it is correct in substance, and the defendants will not be restored to the possession. Id.

INJUNCTION, 38.

YOSEMITE

1. Congress having, in 1864, granted to the state of California the Yosemite valley in trust for certain purposes, and with a proviso that it should remain inalienable forever, the state legislature has no power to make an unconditional and absolute grant of it to a third person in violation of such trust.

Low v. Hutchings, 41 Cal. 634.

2. The act of February 20, 1868, granting certain lands held in trust by the state in Yosemite valley, to Hutchings and Lamon, being in terms not to take effect until after its ratification by congress, can not, in the absence of such ratification, have any force, or serve as a muniment of title, or protect the contemplated grantees against an ejectment brought by the commissioners appointed to manage the property. Id.

3. The act of April 15, 1880, "for the management of the Yosemite Valley and the Mariposa big tree grove," is not unconstitutional. People v. Ashburner, 55 Cal. 517.

4. By the act of congress of June 30, 1864, the United States granted the Yosemite valley to the state of California, and in accepting the grant the state assumed certain obligations in the nature of a trust; but the act and the statute of the state accepting the grant did not operate as a gift for charitable uses, such as may be regulated, directed, and enforced by a court of equity; nor can the obligations of the state be enforced by the courts of the state. Id.

5. The commissioners to manage the Yosemite valley and the Mariposa big tree grove are mere agents of the state, and persons thus clothed with functions affecting the public, assigned to them by state laws, are officers of the state, and their terms of office expired four years after their appointment. Id.
